Kelly is Guilty on Four Counts

Sentence Not Passed Until Reserve Case Has Been Discussed by the Counsel

WINNIPEG, June 30. — Thomas Kelly was convicted in the Assize Court here this afternoon of theft, of the receiving of stolen money, securities and other property, and of obtaining money by false pretences. Sentence was not passed.

At four o'clock, when the jury had been out three hours, they returned with their verdict. Mr Justice Prendergast came from his room when informed that the jury had finished their work.

"We find the prisoner guilty on counts one, two, four and five," said the foreman. The verdict was recorded.

"I ask that the jury be polled," said Kelly. There was no emotion in his voice. The jury was polled, and each man voted guilty.

"I do not move for sentence," said J. B. Coyne, K.C., speaking for the Crown. He added that H. H. Dewart, K.C., and R. T. Harding would like to discuss "the terms of the reserved case, which Mr Dewart asked for after his motion to quash the indictment was refused." It was arranged that the judge would hear this application tomorrow afternoon.

Mr Dewart and Mr Harding, who were associated with Kelly's defence until Mr Justice Prendergast ruled that the case must proceed on June 19, arrived in town this afternoon. They will ask the judge for a stated case to the Court of Appeal, and if this is granted pending its disposal it is not expected that Kelly will be sentenced. The judge has intimated that he will grant the reserved case on request.

There were five counts in the indictment on which Kelly was tried. Number one was theft; numbers two and three were receiving; number four was false pretences, and number five was receiving. His Lordship instructed the jury that they could not find Kelly guilty on count two and three since they were identical except for the fact that count three added the names of Charles B. Kelly and Lawrence Kelly to the alleged conspirators as the result of whose conspiracy Kelly was claimed to have received stolen money, securities or property. Kelly was, therefore, found not guilty on that count in the indictment, which included the names of his two sons as conspirators and convicted on the count charging receiving as the result of a conspiracy among Sir Rodmond Roblin, the late Hon. Dr Montague, James H. Howden, George R. Coldwell, Dr R. M. Simpson, V. W. Horwood and the accused. He was convicted on counts one, two, four and five.

The jury retired at one o'clock this afternoon. At 3.30 they returned for information on some points of law, which was given them by his lordship. They returned to their room at 3.50 and ten minutes later brought in their verdict. The judge, in discharging the jury, spoke appreciately of their services in a "long, tedious and painful matter."

The trial of Sir Rodmond Roblin, George R. Coldwell and James H. Howden will commence on July 18.

Villa Reported As Still Alive

Was Wounded, But Has Recovered Wants Secrecy Now

SAN ANTONIO, Texas, June 30.—Pancho Villa is still alive, according to information that has just reached an American now living in this city, who has spent a large part of his life in Mexico and has known the notorious bandit personally. The information came from Mexican sources in Mexico, and its recipient is convinced that it came from sources that are absolutely reliable.

According to the information in the hands of this American, he has large financial interests still at stake in Mexico and is anxious that his name be withheld from publication. at least for the present, Villa was really wounded early in Pershing's campaign, as was reported, but was not shot in the knee and has now fully recovered.

For more than a month the American army officers in Mexico have believed Pancho Villa ,the original cause of the entry of American troops into Mexico, was dead. This belief was supported by, but not based on the great number of reports they received from Mexicans to the effect that he had died of blood poisoning after being shot in the knee. The American officers have heard nothing directly from or concerning him since April 12.

According to the information received by the American here, Villa's wound was in the fleshy part of the leg. and healed up readily after he had fled from the Americans.

It is further asserted that Carranza officers have known all the time that Villa was not dead. And it is said that he is now safe in the state of Durango and that he has been there practically ever since the Carranzistas fought the Americans at Parral, and prevented them from crossing the Durango line.

The ground telegraph line between Columbus and the south is reported to have been cut in several places.

General Bell has not yet been able to confirm the information.

CONFIDENT OF STRENGTH

Tageblatt Asserts Germans Cannot be Driven Out

LONDON, June 30.—Berlin newspapers which have just reached London refer to the British activity on the western front. They pretend to believe it is condemned to failure, and say it can only result in the end of the British continental army.

"What is taking place on the British western front," says The Tageblatt,, 'entirely fulfills our expectations. It is, obviously that great common movement in which England purposes to show that her strength has now achieved superiority over ours. We do not under-estimate the gravity of the struggle, but have no desire to permit the English to terrify Germany. The English army has not, and never will have, the operative power to drive us out of Northern France and Belgium."

Nivelle's [illegible]ph Blasts Enemy's Hope of Reaching Verdun

LONDON July 1.—Special—After changing hands twice during the day Fort Thiaumont last night is again in French possession. Violent German counter-attacks are still attempting its recapture but after many efforts they still are unsuccessful.

Whatever hopes Berlin may have had with the first capture of Thiaumont that the fall of Verdun was near have been shattered last night. With the Teuton wedge driven within three and a half miles of the citadel, and the French pressed back to their last line east of the Meuse the Germans had been optimistic that the four months' battle was at least near its end.

GENEVA, via Paris, June 30.—The tension between Switzerland and Germany regarding food and cotton supplies continues. The Swiss government has asked for a further delay, but Germany demands the immediate delivery of 32,000 bales of cotton sequestrated in Switzerland and also free trade on the frontier, which the allies prohibit.

Failure to receive coal from Germany would greatly affect Switzerland, which now imports daily 65,000 tons of German coal.

The engineer mistook an order to reverse to one for increased speed. The gates gave way and the steamer was damaged by a huge gash in the bow. A tremendous rush of water resulted and Lockmaster John Clark, who was standing near the motor box of lock 11, was knocked off his feet, hurled completely over the tank, down the side of the hill, and landed up against a barbed wire fence. He escaped miraculously with a few scratches and a bad shaking up.

MUSIC AND DRAMA

WILLIAM FARNUM SEEN AS BATTLING CLERGYMAN IN DRAMA "FIGHTING BLOOD"

The story deals with man, who, unjustly imprisoned, "Comes Back"—Play has lumber camp and western mining town settings.

An excellent program has been arranged for exhibition at Griffin's Opera House on Monday (Dominion Day) matinee and night, and Tuesday evening, when, "Fighting Blood," another of those popular 5 part Fox features will be presented. In "Fighting Blood", William Farnum, America's foremost portrayer of heroic roles is cast as Lem Hardy, sturdy scion of a family of Kentucky mountaineers. Leaving his humble cabin and his aged mother, Lem, heir to the fighting blood of a long line of pugnacious ancestors, betakes himself to the lumber camp of Henry Colby and acquires not only a job but the love of Evie, Colby's daughter. Harry Blake, superintendent of the camp is infatuated with the beauty of Evie, and, in jealous hatred, conceives the idea of stealing the camp's payroll and fastening the crime upon Lem. His plan succeeds. Lem is convicted for the theft and sent to prison. Evie, convinced of her lover's guilt, marrics Blake, who, a gambler by nature, induces his father-in-law to speculate in stocks, with the inevitable result of ruin and death for the old man. Blake goes to the western town of Red Dog, takes Evie with him and sets up a faro game. Meanwhile in prison, Lem, through association with Father Rochelle, prison chaplain, becomes deeply religious. On the expiration of his term he becomes a preacher and travels the country over on a self-appointed mission of righteousness. In the course of his wanderings he stops in Red Dog, where he comes into direct conflict with the forces of wickedness, led by his ancient enemy, Blake. The fight is bitter and marked by many personal encounters, but in the end the "Fighting Parson" triumphs. Blake is killed in a gambling brawl, and Evie and Lem face a brighter future.

Mothers, if your children do not sleep well; if they are cross and cry a great deal give them Baby's Own Tablets and they will soon be well and happy again Concerning the Tablets Mrs Chas. Diotte, North Temascaming, Que., writes:—"My baby was greatly troubled with constipation and cried night and day. I began giving her Baby's Own Tablets and now she is fat and healthy and sleeps well at night." The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box, from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

"THE YOUTH OF FORTUNE" AT PALACE MONDAY

Cartera De Haven, Flora Parker and De Haven, his wife, an all star cast of Universal photoplayers are starred in "A Youth of Fortune," the 5 reel Red Feather Feature photoplay which comes to the Palace Monday (Dominion Day) and Tuesday with a matinee daily. Mr. and Mrs. De Haven are supported by an unusually clever cast; every one of them chosen from a cast of 5 actors by the casting board at Universal City. "A Youth of Fortune," is a sprightly, sparkling comedy with a delicious vein of humor running through it. Diminutive Carter De Haven is cast as wild, Harum-Scarum boarding school boy, whose grandfather leaves him a fortune. The boy's parents have treated him shabibly, but make funny overtures to him when they find that he has been left his grandfather's fortune. Finding they cannot win their boy over by kindness, each member of the estranged pair makes a separate attempt to kidnap their son. Dozens of wildly exciting and amusing complications ensue.

LETTERS FROM OVERSEAS

FROM LESLIE YEREX

Larkhill, Salisbury Plains,
June 5th.

Dear Mother:—I received your letter the other day and also the box, which I appreciated very much. We are at Larkhill Camp, Salisbury Plain, where we came for firing practice, as we have no long ranges at Whitley Camp. We had a swell trip coming up. We left at 8 o'clock Monday morning, and it was some procession, believe me, being a whole brigade, which is composed of four batteries, each battery having about twenty vehicles besides quite a bunch of men on horseback. We camped for the first night in a town called Alton, which is bigger than Belleville. We camped in the public park and had quite a number of visitors. The next day we travelled to Winchester, which is a swell town and used to be the capital. The third night we camped just outside a little village called Wollop. The fourth morning they called us up at one o'clock, and we started out at two o'clock, arriving at Larkhill about seven in the morning. One day we stopped for dinner at a town called Storkbridge, marched in and stopped in the middle of the main street; unharnessed the horses and tied them to the wagon wheels and ate our dinners while sitting on the sidewalks with our backs against the store windows. Larkhill is a nice camp, but the surroundings are no good. We are right near the place where the first contingent suffered so much. I was over to the city of Salisbury one day to see the sights, and got a few post cards, which I will send you. We expect to start for Witley to-morrow some time. I took a few snapshots to-day and I will send them later, and will try to get some on the way back. The Belleville boys are all well and getting as hard as nails and also as black. I hear the 80th are in Bramshott, but don't know for sure. We expect to get our last leave any time now, but we never know anything for sure until the last minute. I was talking to Roy Stuart the other day. I must close now. Will write more later.

MILITARY MATTERS AT BARRIEFIELD HEIGHTS

VICIOUS RUMORS CIRCULATED

There was another rumor in camp yesterday to the effect that a dead body had been found in the lines of a battalion which recently left for Valcartier. The rumor was a libel on the battalion, and on the camp, and the originator deserves a gallows. Out side papers have claimed that there have been many deaths in camp, and a Montreal daily stated recently that eighteen soldiers had died in Barriefield camp, not a soldier has died in Barriefield camp since it opened over a month ago, and only one soldier, Q. M.-Sergt. Shaver of the 156th of Brockville, has died in any of the base hospitals. There seems to be a design in the circulation of these rumors, and they should be thoroughly investigated and the party responsible for their origin, severely punished.

.. THE STATEMENT DENIED ..

Barriefield Camp, Ont., June 28. —(To the Editor): In your issue of the 27th inst., on page 6, column 4, under the heading, "News from the District," appears the following:

"Pte. P. H. Gordon, a soldier of the 80th, and later of the 155th Battalion, was arrested in Belleville for desertion."

The report is absolutely false, as Pte. Gordon has an absolutely clean Conduct Sheet, and at no time has been absent without leave. From the last few weeks he has been on sick leave in Belleville.

Will you please see that this report is contradicted in your paper, and that a copy of same is sent to Cobourg, where this man formerly resided, as the report is now current there.

Yours truly—M. K. ADAMS, Lt.-Col. O. C. 155th Battalion, C.E.F.

The information published was from the Belleville papers, which gave a detailed account of the episode.

FORMER WAR PRISONER NOW COMP INSTRUCTOR

Lieut. S. Young, 155th Battalion, has been appointed to the School of Machine Gunnery at Barriefield, Lieut Young has had experiences which outdo those of any other returned officer who has been through a part of this campaign. He went overseas with the first contingent, was taken prisoner in Germany, and after many months was released, being considered unfit for further service.

In the battle of Ypres his hand was wounded, and by careful work he was able to deceive the medical officers to the extent of making them think that paralysis had set in and the whole side of his body was useless. This ruse was successful, and he was exchanged. In England, careful nursing brought the arm around until only a slight defect in his hand is noticeable. He is a splendid instructor, and will be a valuable addition to the Machine Gun School.

NOTE S

The lines of the 155th and 156th battalions are now lighted at night.

Mrs. Dodd, wife of Captain Dodd, chaplain of the 155th battalion, was a visitor to camp yesterday.

Rev. H. H. Bingham who has been conducting a series of meetings under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A. in camp, delivered his last address in the big tent last night. Mr. Bingham left for his home in London at the close of his address.

Major R. D. Ponton lectured to the officers of the 93rd Battalion on Thursday evening.

Capt. Noble, 155th Battalion, gave a lecture to the officers of the battalion on Company. Organization on Thursday night.

Capt. Dodds, chaplain, of the 155th Battalion, wil spend Dominion Day at Soyna, where a big celebration is being held.

CHEESE FACTORY BURNED

Yesterday afternoon the West Huntingdon Cheese Factory was destroyed by fire. The blaze originated above the engine room, and spread rapidly. Some 70 boxes of cheese, which were in the factory at the time, were removed, but may be slightly damaged. The vats and machinery used in the manufacture of cheese were destroyed. The building was of frame construction with a stone basement. The loss will be about $5,000, partially covered by insurance.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Sir,—The terrible down pour of rain has not been an unmixed evil. Never before in my recollection has "Belleville the beautiful" so justly earned that designation. The psalmist sang, "He maketh me to lie down in green pastures, He leadeth me by the still waters, He restoreth my soul." I never before recognized the full meaning of the last part of the above quotation. How it fills our souls with delight, as we see the beautiful lawns, inhale the aroma from June's sweet roses! A few days ago, the air was filled with the perfume of the lilies. Now we pass gardens starred with beautiful flowers. Peonies of matchless splendour, of all shades. Roses of every tint. It is June that the rose is sovereign queen. I am sure it would delight our citizens, if they would visit the school grounds and see the wonderful work of their children: no better or more refined work could be undertaken than to cultivate in the minds of children the love of the beautiful. If the citizens would also examine the art work of the children, they would be filled with astonishment at the extraordinary talent exhibited. I am, sir, etc.

J. J. B. FLINT.

189 Queen St., West Toronto
June 29th, 1916.

Dear Sir,—

The writer noticed in the Toronto Globe of yesterday's state that the city of Belleville is still actively interested in military proceedings, and that the possibility of raising another battalion is not remote. There must be a lot of big husky fellows around Belleville and the Bay of Quinte district who would be an acquisition to No. 1 Construction Batt. now recruiting in Ontario, Quebec, Maritime Provinces and the City of Winnipeg. No 1 Construction Battalion will go overseas at the earliest possible date as the Imperial Government is in urgent need of men to assist in bridge building, road-making and general construction work. Its express purpose is to keep open the lines of communication to the trenches, and this is becoming of vital importance as advances on the Western front are contemplated.

Would it be asking too much of you to kindly insert a "reader" in your valued paper. This would be greatly appreciated and should be of valuable assistance to us in our recruiting propaganda. Should this announcement elicit any attention, we would be pleased to reciprocate by using advertising space in your valued medium.

Col. Ripley, late construction engineer C. P. R. is in command and all the officers in No. 1 Construction Battalion have had valuable civil engineering experience. I include herewith some of the features of No. 1 Construction Bn. which I hope you will be able to use, also take the liberty to enclose a stamped envelope.

Yours very truly,
PTE S. H. BLEAKLEY.
(No 1 Construction Bn., C.E.F.)

No. 1 Overseas Construction Battalion is organized to assist the Imperial Government in the increasingly important work, building bridges; making roads and railroads and other means to facilitate the quick movement of troops and munitions.

This battalion is authorized to go overseas when up to strength; half the number have been recruited to date and our full quota should be secured inside of four weeks, as we have obtained permission to increase our area of recruiting activities.

All kinds of laborers are requested: Transit men, steel workers bridge builders, etc. Men who have not enlisted previously and who have not the inclination to join inwantry or artillery battalions may readily respond to our call and continue their usual avocations.

Suggested A Change of Air

Judge Prescribed Penitentiary Atmosphere for Men Who Had Sampled Bordeaux Jail

MONTREAL,, June 30.—Two men were sent to St Vincent de Paul and three were sent to Bordeaux by Judge Bazin, in the Court of Sessions yesterday. The two who were sent to St Vincent de Paul were men who had already served terms at Bordeaux. Judge Bazin said they might try if the air on the north side of the Back River would suit them better for a while.

Thomas O'Grady, who was found guilty of breaking into a freight car belonging to the Grand Trunk Railway Company, from which he stole a quantity of tobacco, was sent to St. O'Grady admitted that he was fond of tobacco, both chewing and smoking, the use of which is prohibited at the penitentiary. His present term will be the first one for him at St. Vincent de Paul, but his record shows that he served five terms at Bordeaux.

Aurore Dansereau, who pleaded guilty to stealing clothing from the home of Mrs G. Gratton, where he had been a boarder, was sent to St Vincent de Paul for two years.

Laurence Piche, who was found guilty of stealing goods from the Haufman Rubber company, Ltd., where he had been employed, was sentenced to six months in Bordeaux.

Charles White, who was found guilty of stealing clothing from Jos. Beriman, was also sent to Beordeaux for six months.

Franz Horan, who was found guilty of stealing gold filling from the Smith, Patterson Co., while in their employ, was condemned to six months in Bordeaux.

George Blackwell, colored, who was found guilty of illegally wounding Levi Spencer, colored, in the rooms of the Utopia Club, a colored organization in St Antoine Street, was liberated by Judge Bazin, the two months he had already served to count as his sentence. Blackwell shot Spencer in the abdomen, as a result of which Spencer was in the General Hospital for a couple of months and for a time little hope was entertained for his recovery. It was said at the time of the shootinfi that Blackwell had been drinking and had followed Spencer into his office in the club and shot him, but when the case came to trial last week, the witnesses for the prosecution contended that the shooting was the result of an accident, while Blackwell was showing Spencer his revolver. Blackwell's life is such that it is not thought he has long to live, which was one of the main reasons for leniency being shown in his case.

Admitted Deed to Upset Evidence

Montreal Judge Saw Trick and Surprised Italian by Convicting Him

MONTREAL, June 30. — Judge Bazin, in the Court of Sessions, yesterday, turned the tables on Joseph Pellati, who his Honor was convinced was trying to play a smart trick on the court, and as a result Pellati was sent to Bordeaux for twelve months.

Pellati, with another Italian, named Marchoni Mariono, was accused of having wounded Harry Wong, a waiter in a Chinese restaurant in St Lawrence Street. The Chinaman was slashed across the left leg with a stiletto, in a dispute that followed a meal served to the Italians. The row arose over the price charged.

Harry Wong and two other Chinamen swore that it was Mariono who did the stabbing. Pellati, who appeared anxious to protect his friend, as well as to prove how unreliable the Chinese witnesses were, said that it was not Mariono who had slashed Wong, but that he had done it and was forced to do it to save himself from attack by the Chinamen. Judge Bazin saw through the trick the Italians were trying to play. Pellati could not be used as a witness against himself, but he entered the box to give evidence for Mariono when he stated that he and not Mariono had done the slashing, but that it was done in self-defence.

His Honor asked when Pellati went back to the dock, if he had any evidence to offer in justification of his having slashed Wong. There was no evidence to establish that Pellati was attacked by the Chinamen, who Judge Bazin said were inoffensive citizens and never went out of their way to make trouble for anyone. Pellati was given a shock when he was told he was guilty and would have to spend twelve months in prison.

It was evident that Pellati, in admitting that he had done the slashing with the stilleto, thought he would confound the Chinese witnesses, who swore positively that it was Mariono who had used the weapon. Their idea must have been that Judge Bazin would be unable to believe the Chinamen and would conclude that Pellati really had to use the stilleto to defend his life, as the result of which both the accused would have been acquitted.

BERNHARDT COMING BACK

NEW YORK, June 30.—Sarah Bernhardt has announced her intention of making the visit to America which the illness that followed the amputation of her leg prevented her from making last season. W. F. Connor, her American manager, today received the following Cablegram from Mme. Bernhardt: "Sailing from Liverpool end of September, after an engagement in London, where I will present a very novel piece in English and French."

Mme. Bernhardt will be 72 years old when she makes her ninth visit to this country. Her engagement in New York will be at the Knickerbocker Theatre, which is to be remodelled during the summer.

During the months of July and August the Business Office of The Intelligencer will Close at Five o'clock on Saturday Afternoon.

Wilson In a Fighting Mood

"America First" Must be Translated Into Action Exalting it Above All

PHILADELPHIA, June 30.—President Wilson, describing himself as "in a fighting mood" enunciated today to a large crowd in Independence Square his conception of some of the cardinal American ideals. He declared that America in dealing with other nations, must "vindicate at whatever cost its principles of liberty, justice and humanity; that "America first" must be translated into action exalting it above all selfish interests; and that the nation's policy and development must be guided by the whole people and not by any small group.

Applause repeatedly interrupted the address. The crowd liked particularly the President's declaration that American principles must be vindicated in the country's foreign relations, which apparently was interpreted as referring to the Mexican situation. At no time, however, did Mr. Wilson mention Mexico or any other foreign nation directly.

"I believe," the President said, "that America, the country we put first in our thoughts, should be ready in every point of policy and of action referrink to the Mexican situation. At ciples of liberty, or justice and of humanity to which we have been devoted from the first.

"I believe that at whatever cost America should be just to other people and treat other people as she demands that they should treat her. She has a right to demand that they treat her. She has a right to demand that they treat her with justice and respect, and she has a right to insist that they treat her in that fashion, but she cannot with dignity or with self-respect insist upon that unless she is willing to act in that same fashion toward them. That I am ready to fight for at any cost to myself."

Urging that the whole people should shape the national policies the President said that some men pretended to believe in the average man, but when they acted they showed they did not.

"Oh you Teddy," someone shouted and the President hastened to explain that he was not referring to any certain individual.

"'America first' means nothing unless you translate it into what you do," was a statement that brought prolonged applause. Cheers also greeted the President's declaration that while he was not interested in fighting for himself, he was "immediately interested in fighting for the things that I believe in, and so far as they are concerned, I am a challenger to all comers."

Officially, the President addressed delegates to the convention of the Associated Advertising Club of the world, but a mixed crowd heard him. He spoke in the open air, under the shadow of Independence Hall. He left for Washington immediately after the adddress.

A WOMAN'S HEALTH NEEDS CONSTANT CARE

WHEN THE BLOOD BECOMES POOR DISEASE SPEEDILY FOLLOWS.

Every woman's health is peculiarly dependent upon the condition of her blood. How many women suffer with headache, pain in the back, poor appetite, weak digestion, a constant feeling of weariness, palpitation of the heart, shortness of breath, pallor and nervousness. Of course all these symptoms may not be present—the more there are the worse the condition of the blood, and the more necessary that you should begin to enrich it without delay. Dr. Williams Pink Pills are beyond doubt the greatest blood-building tonic offered to the public to-day. Every dose helps to make new, rich, red blood which goes to every part of the body and brings new health and strength to weak, despondent people. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are valuable to all women, but they are particularly useful to girls of school age who become pale, languid and nervous. Thin blood during the growing years of a girl's life usually means a flat-chested, hollow-cheeked womanhood. There can be neither health nor beauty without red blood which gives brightness to the eyes and color to the cheeks and lips. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills do all this as is proved in thousands of cases. Mrs. Wm. Rowe, Carlaw avenue, Toronto, says:—"I have received so much benefit from Dr. Williams' Pink Pills that I feel it my duty to recommend them to others. I was about completely prostrated with anaemia. I had no appetite, was terribly weak nad subject to fainting spells. I suffered greatly from dizziness, and the various other symptoms that accompany a bloodless condition. Remedy after remedy was tried but to no avail until a friend advised me to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Before completing the second box, I was again enjoying splendid health, and have since remained in that happy condition."

You can get Dr. Williams' Pink Pills through any medicine dealer or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

No Legal Drinks for Halifax Now

Hoteland Club Licenses Expired Last Night—Dealers Have Grievance

HALIFAX, N.B., June 30.—The forty six liquor saloons in this city closed up last night to remain closed, in consequence of the prohibition law passed at the last session of the legislature, making Halifax "dry," as well as the rest of the province. It is 169 years since Halifax was founded, and for the first time it will be impossible legally to obtain a drink in any public house.

A notable feature is that the city of Halifax has taken the license fees for the whole year, running from $250 to $1,000 each, from the saloons, and that the Legislature compels them to close now when only one-third of the license year has expired. What will follow in the next few weeks or months is hard to say, but it is believed that the liquor dealers have agreed on some plan of campaign to assert what they consider are their rights. The law applies equally to the clubs, and no member of the Halifax Club or City Club will be able to obtain a drink, any more than a man on the street, unless he keeps it in his own private lockers for his own special use. There are two large breweries in Halifax, which will be in operation solely to carry on their export trade.

Valcartier a Model Camp

Rivalry Between Battalions for Decoration of Their Lines

The Quebec Chronicle, in a recent issue, says: There is no doubt but that Valcartier will be a model camp this year if General Wilson has his way. The general, who, in spite of being a strict disciplinarian, is very popular with all ranks, is doing everything to encourage all that will make for the brightening and betterment of the camp and the rapid improvement due to his efforts is most nticeable in every direction. With him he has associated what is perhaps the best staff that has been at Valcartier since the camp was organized, and the result has been an excellent administration.

There is keen rivalry among the different battalions as to which will have the best decorated grounds, and competition promises to grow in intensity. The Irish Rangers seem to be the most ambitious in the matter of floral schemes, but there is every evidence that other regiments will not lag behind long.

Col. McBain, who is Superintendent of Construction, is offering three handsome prizes for the most attractive regimental grounds. As usual the colonel is very busy and is doing much in the way of effecting improvements.

Most of the battalions have a mascot, that of the 199th being an Irish terrier. One battalion, which arrived last night, had four dogs in line leading their band. Another had a goat while the attendant genius of the 148th in some ways the show regiment of the camp, is a bear cub, which aroused some trepidation by breaking loose the other night and creating discord in a tent occupied by one of the regimental bands.

ITALY STANDS FIRM

ROME, June 30.—"This is not the moment for programmes but for action," said the venerable parliamentarian. Signor Roselli, in beginning his statement before the Senate Chamber. His speech was more than anything else a hymn to the "faith and valor of our marvellous soldiers and brave sailors." He recalled with moving words the fate of the inhabitants of those regions where the Austrian advance had occurred, who "abandoned all except their ideal of the fatherland, for which we will be grateful in the future, remembering the painful days of the cities and regions devasted by the enemy's attack," the Premier added, "not only immediately broke against the wings of our troops, but soon was entirely arrested and energetically repulsed, and now we are overcoming the enemy's resistance. We are accomplishing the reconquest of our lands and our steep, dominating crests."

The general impression from the statement is that no change is to be expected in the attitude of Italy towards the war. The only reason for forming the new cabinet is to secure and maintain the complete national accord of all parties.

During the months of July and August the Business Office of The Intelligencer will Close at Five o'clock on Saturday Afternoon.

GOOD VALUE IN LIVE STOCK.

The Farmers' Advocate opines that the time is ripe for profitable live stock husbandry, and suggests that nothing would prevent unlimited progress in this line if everyone, buyer, seller and breeder plays a straightforward, honest game. There is a tendency, when demand is keen, to sell for breeding purposes, stock that would go to the butcher in ordinary times. The race for more stock in such times leads many to buy animals to add to their herds or to use as foundation stock which they would, in times of slower sale, hesitate to purchase. The seller is often just a little louder in his praise of stock offered in boom times than he would be if demand were not so keen. It requires just as much good judgment to buy and to sell, when anyone is looking for a certain class of stock as it does when stock is plentiful and the outlook not so promising. In buying the foundation of a herd or flock the buyer must be reasonably sure that the apparent value is actual value. Because a particularly well-bred heifer, with individuality par excellence, sells for $1,000 or more, is no reason why $500 or $800 should be paid for a plain individual with only ordinary breeding behind it. It is generally in boom times that someone gets loaded up with a class of stock which does him little good. Then there comes the "down" period in the ups and downs of the business, and the man who bought without exercising care and knowledge becomes a "knocker." No breed can afford to have "knockers" among the men interested. To avoid the consequences the greatest care should be taken now, when the outlook is so bright, that no animal is described as anything more than it really is in breeding or in type and general conformation. Avoid the animal, if buying for general breeding, that is over-loaded with fat, and in milking cattle insist upon records as well as fine appearance. Because Jones pays $1,500 for a bull which may be worth in reality $5,000 is no reason why Smith, who may be a beginner, should pay $1,000 for a chance buy, the animal being only an ordinary individual. Inflated prices, over-drawn descriptions and over-fitted stock do not tend toward stability and confidence. Everyone is entitled to good prices for good stock, and if care is taken to build up the market on a sound basis prices promise to be fairly high for some time to come in Canada. Fortunately the Canadian live stock business has been placed upon a sound basis by years of persistent effort and fair play dealing. Canadian breeders do not lose their heads and become panicky over changed market conditions. Stability is one of the mainstays of the business in this country. Let us keep it so. Good stock, fair prices, fair dealing, and ever-improving knowledge of live stock, and the business of breeding, feeding and marketing will do the trick. Let the motto be—apparent value—actual value.

AN ECONOMIC WAR.

Hostilities between the Allies and the Huns will not end with the declaration of peace, claims expert war authority. When the Central Powers are beaten, then will come their punishment. The Allies will combine in an economic offensive that will drive the Teutons from the world's markets. Steps to enforce a trade boycott on a wholesale scale have been taken by the economic conference at Paris. During the reconstruction period that will follow the war, Britain, France, Russia, Italy, Belgium, Japan, Portugal and Serbia will act jointly to restore their industries, reorganize their agriculture and re-establish their mecantile marine. After this period the enemy powers will be penalized by refusal of tariff concessions and by the imposition of special restrictions and prohibitions on their commerce. Meanwhile the Allies will do their utmost to develop trading amongst themselves, each seeking to develop, as far as possible, its own resources.

These decisions of the Paris conference amount to an economic revolution. The effect on Great Britain will be profound, for Great Britain was one of Germany's best customers. Fiscal policy, too, will be altered, to a greater, or lesser extent; Britain cannot shut out German goods from her markets without discriminatory tariffs. And, finally, the Overseas Dominions stand to benefit. They in themselves possess enormous natural resources only waiting attention. Britain and her Allies need those resources, minerals, lumber, wool, cotton and foodstuffs, and they will turn their capital and energies to the production and devolpment of them as never before.

New York Times: Mr Hughes's selection of Mr William R. Willcox as chairman of the Republican National Committee is as heartily to be commended as Mr Wilson's choice of Mr Vance McCormick for chairman of the Democratic National Committee. Both appointments are excellent. And both are "good politics." Mr Wilson took a reformer, of Progressive tendencies and high business and executive qualities. Mr Hughes, whose problem is to unite as far as possible the two wings of the Republican Party, was stopped from taking a national chairman too near to the business and bosom of the Old Guard or of the Progressive Party. In Mr Willcox he has a Republican unobjectional to both, an intimate personal friend, a sound lawyer, an experienced and able administrator, a trained and admirable public servant, a man of education, character, force, and honorable distinction.

Toronto Star: Before the arrival of the Duke of Connaught in Canada it was feared in some quarters that he would make somewhat too splendid a court at Ottawa and rather test the temper of a young and democratic country like ours. So far from these fears being realized, it is, we believe, everywhere conceded that the country never had a Governor-General so acceptable in every way as the present one. He has filled the bill with the effortless ease of one born to the job.

Toronto Globe: Temperance reformers in Russia place great reliance on the influence of the Czar in determinating the future of the drink problem, as the question of permanent prohibition is regarded as bound up with the promises made by the Emperor. The experiment in Russia, as in France, proves that, contrary to the old-time opinion, a nation may be made sober by Act of Parliament. Laws that help to correct the evil habits of a country and give it an opportunity in a time of great peril to play its part in the spirit that animates France and Russia in this war justify the invasion of individual rights.

Collier's Weekly: Religion has been bankrupted by the war in Europe, according to some pessimists; others say that the war has meant a great wave of mysticism that at times seems mere superstition. The best religious war news we have seen is summoned up in two sentences found in the Rev. W. W. Holdsworth's "Impressions of a Hospital Chaplain" in the Contemporary Review": A rabbi serving as a chaplain in Flanders was one day asked by a dying French soldier to unbotton his tunic and to hold the crucifix he was wearing so that in his last moments his eyes might rest upon that symbol of love unto death. With a fine humanity the Jew held up for the comfort of the dying man that which stood for the condemnation of his own people. We wish all our Know-Nothing friends might note this paragraph!

Montreal Star: The release of the American prisoners, held at Chihuahua, is a proof that President Carranza at all events does not want war. He is sane enough and informed enough to know what it means. It means the subjugation of Mexico, the obliteration of his own office, and the ruin of every Mexican of importance who fights with him. So he takes a conciliatory step of the greatest difficulty and daring, cutting his own popularity in half and imperilling his hold on the Presidency. If President Wilson and his advisers are willing to make half as great personal sacrifices for peace, they can probably secure it. If they live up to the spirit which presumably inspired the President when he declared that there was "such a thing as a man being too proud to fight,"—live up to it as courageously as has the "greaser" President—they will save two neighboring nations from a frightful war.

UNDER THE SKIN OF MEN

Did you ever sit down and talk with men
In a sort of a serious way
On their views of life and ponder then
On all that they have to say?
If not, you should in some quiet hour,
It's a glorious thing to do,
For you find that back of the pomp and power
Most men have a goal in view.

They'll tell you then that their aim is not
The clink of the yellow gold,
That not in the worldly things they're got
Would they have their stories told.
They'll say the joys that they treasure most
Are their good friends, tried and true,
And an honest name for their own to boast
And peace when the day is through.

I've talked with men and I think I know
What's under the toughened skin;
I've seen their eyes grow bright, and glow
With the fire that burns within.
And back of the gold and back of the fame
And back of the selfish strife,
In most men's breasts you'll find the flame
Of the nobler things of life.

Current Comment

The Allies have struck a lively gait on the Western War Zone, which it is, hoped, will prove but the initiative of what is to follow.

Sir Roger Casement says he left Germany poorer than when he went there. That gives some idea of how the Kaiser treats his guests—Montreal Mail.

In North Perth there is to be an election for the Ontario Legislative Assembly. Mr. Torance, who was elected as Conservative member in 1914, has retired in order to be able to accept a Government office. Mr. Torrance was popular without respect to party associations, and his departure makes a gap which it will be hard to fill.—Toronto Star (Liberal). Thank you.

The German alliance and German gold may have benumbed the Republican bosses and blighted the Republican convention, but they could not have affected Theodore Roosevelt. William Randolph Hearst, the only seer to attempt to solve the problem, says the steel trust named Hughes and brought Roosevelt into line. But we are not inclined to accept Mr. Hearst as an adept in the art of divination.—Toronto World.

Judges Hughes has referred to the Lusitania at least. He says that a proper stand on the part of the American Government before the sinking of the vessel would have averted the "tragedy." The New York Tribune, one of the leading Republican papers in the United States, wants to know why Judge Hughes called it a "tragedy" instead of a crime.—Mail and Empire. It is a combination of both.

"There is a lesson for the tyrannical Boches of Ontario," says one Quebec periodical commenting on the statement of a New Zealand member of Parliament that in all the secondary schools of his country French was taught as well as other European languages. Of course, Ontario has been doing exactly as New Zealand for half a century. Thus do the extremists on both sides mislead their followers—Ottawa Free Press.

"You may say that I have spoken on this war only in regard to civilization, which is no doubt great, but what will it be for Canada; cannot Canada stand aside? No, it cannot. I will go further; this war interests not only the people fighting, but also the neutral nations. I expect none. Germany wants universal domination. If Germany triumphs, we would immediately be under German rule."—Sir Wilfrid Laurier. This being the case, suppose Sir Wilfrid should cease quibbling on the racial question, and take up honest recruiting among his Quebec Nationality. Would it not have its effect toward reaching the 500,000 mark promised by Sir Robert Bordon, thus preventing German rule in Canada?

Edith's Roses

Four chattering girls tripped into Grove's confectionery for supplies, as they laughingly put it. They examined the candy critically and each one gave a small order.

"Why, there is Mrs. Bancroft!" said Edith Watson as they waited for the packages. She left the counter and went back into the serving space, where a woman was wiping linoleum. "I was thinking of you just yesterday," was her greeting. Then she chatted pleasantly until the repeated calls of her friends took her away.

"Edith, I wish you would not persist in doing such things," remarked Rachel Owens, with evident irritation in her voice, when they were on the street again.

"What things?" Edith's innocent-looking blue eyes opened wide with surprise.

"Why, speaking to every common person you meet," explained Rachel. "It seems to me that you know every scrub woman, every laundress, every domestic in this city, and even the bootblacks and delivery-men. It was not at all necessary for you to go back and speak to that Mrs. Bancroft."

"Not speak to Mrs. Bancroft!" exclaimed Edith. "Really girls, I would as soon think of slighting one of you. Mrs. Bancroft saw me and she would have felt very much hurt if I had not spoken to her. Father and I have never forgotten how kind she was during mother's illness. She gave up some of her regular work to do our cleaning." Her voice was low and sad. "We have always tried to show her that we appreciated that sacrifice."

"Of course, it is all right to speak to such people," Helen Todd chimned in, "but you could have bowed and let it go at that. You must admit, Edith, that your greeting was rather rapturous."

Edith smiled in spite of the fact that the criticism gave her a feeling of annoyance.

"Girls, it did not hurt me a particle to speak to Mrs. Bancroft, and it did her good. She was so pleased because I took the trouble to go back and talk with her that she thanked me twice."

"It doesn't hurt you, Edith, to speak to any working people, we all know that; but some people might not understand it. They might think you enjoyed association with—well, the uncultured. I was sorry you went back to Mrs. Bancroft, because Mrs. Willard was in the store," remarked Grace Dodds.

"That's what made me impatient," confessed Rachel. "Mrs. Willard is so rich and so aristocratic. I don't know what she would think of you."

"I was thinking of the same thing" acknowledged Helen. "It's all right to speak to your laundress and the women who do general cleaning when you are alone, but when people like Mrs. Willard are around you need not see them. That is the way I do."

Edith shook her head with a positive air. "I wouldn't thank anybody to speak to me at all, if they would not speak to me when they were with friends. If Mrs. Willard thinks any the less of me because I showed a human interest in Mrs. Bancroft, a woman who does general cleaning and scrubbing, she will have to think less of me: that is all I have to say about it." The tone was decidedly crisp. Then she wisely changed the subject.

Ten days later Helen Todd met Rachel Owens on the street. "I have just this minute heard that Edith Watson is sick in bed and has been for a week," were her first words. "I have been out of town, so I did not know about her."

"Mother has had company, so I have not seen nor heard of Edith nor any of the other girls for some days," Rachel replied. "I am sorry she is sick; let us telephone Grace Dodds and all go to see her this afternoon."

"All right," agreed Helen. "Why, I wonder who looks after the house," she went on; "you know Edith has not been able to get a maid since Katie left. No doubt things will be in disorder if she has been sick a week and we can tidy them up for her. We might get supper, too."

"We will if Edith has no other helper," responded Rachel, as they separated. Promptly at half-past two the three girls reached the Watson house. "Come right in," Edith's voice called in response to their ring. They went through the reception-hall into the bedroom on the right, where Edith was propped up in bed.

"Edith, not one of us knew you were sick until this very day," explained Helen.

"I am not seriously, sick," was the cheery reply. "I will be up in a few days more, the doctor says. I asked him twice to telephone you girls, but he forgot it."

We planned to sweep and dust and do anything else you needed done, but this house looks immaculate," said Rachel.

"It is immaculate," smiled Edith. "Sit down, girls, and I will tell you about it. The very first day I was sick, Alice Lee, who works for Mrs. Post, brought in some dinner. She insisted on getting the meals for father and me until I got well. Mrs. Post told me that Alice asked to do it and she was glad to consent. I pay for the food, but Alice will not take a cent for her work. Isn't it nice of her to want to do it?"

Grace Dodds smiled wisely. "And what have you done for Alice Lee?"

"I have helped her a little with dressmaking," was the evasive answer. "Well, to get to the subject of the house being clean, Mrs. Bancroft saw father the third day I was sick. She inquired for me, and the very next day she came and swept and dusted the house from top to bottom. She crowded her work just to help me. She said she would plan to come once a week until I was strong again. Mrs. Ellis, who does my washing, sends her little girl to wash the dishes twice a day. Why, it pays to get sick, now and then, to find out how many good friends one has," she laughed. "The trouble is that nobody wants to take any pay for their work, but I will think out some way to repay them. I thank you girls for your good intentions, but there is really not a thing to be done."

"I prefer to visit with you," answered Edith. "Grandmother Dover, the old lady next door, comes in every morning and reads to me for an hour or more. The old soul has such a weak, quavering voice that she is hard to understand. I am afraid she will overtax herself but she is so pleased to do it that I haven't the heart to object."

"Where did those beautiful red roses come from?" Rachel changed the subject abruptly.

"From Mrs. Willard's greenhouse."

The three girls exchanged significant glances.

"From Mrs. Willard! How did she happen to send roses to you?" Helen asked. "I didn't know she was well enough acquainted to do anything like that."

"I didn't know she was either," was Edith's reply. "Since you have asked I will explain! otherwise I would not have mentioned it. She heard I was sick, so she sent the man with the roses. A note came with them, saying she was pleased that day in Grove's store when I went back and spoke to Mrs. Bancroft. She said, too, that we are not half thoughtful enough of the people who do the hard and lowly work of the world. These roses express her sympathy and her approval of my act, as she put it. She wrote that a niece was coming to visit her next month and she wanted us to know each other and be friends. Then Edith plunged into another subject before her friends could make any comments.

Two hours later the three girls started for their homes.

"I never saw anybody have as much done for them as Edith Watson, anyway," said Helen Todd, after they had walked a block in silence.

"I am convinced it is because she is always so nice to everybody," said Rachel Owens. "Give out love, and love will return to you," she quoted. "We scolded her for speaking to Mrs. Bancroft that day before Mrs. Willard, yet that very deed caused Mrs. Willard to send her those splendid roses."

"If I were situated like Edith, and had been sick I don't know of a woman or a girl who would have helped me out—I mean among the working people. I am through being a snob," and Grace Dodds' voice was earnest. "I see a woman is a woman, if she does scrub or wash for a living."

"I have concluded we can all profit by Edith's example"—it was Helen Todd who spoke—"and let us do it. A person cannot have too many friends, rich or poor."—Our Young People.

WHAT IS ETIQUETTE?

It happens more than once that as simple a thing as an invitation to a luncheon or a reception has been almost responsible for nervous prostration and a general family upheaval. And the trouble was caused mainly because those invited were not exactly certain as to various questions in etiquette. The fear that one would not know the use of a piece of table ware invented last week was nothing short of harrowing; the question of whether one should sit or stand, speak or remain silent, retain one's hat and gloves or remove them has been the subject of serious family gatherings more than once.

People are very sensitive on the subject of appearing untaught in social matters—that is, in unusual or comparatively unimportant matters. Every one is secretly anxious to appear "to the manner born," when it comes to handling forks and spoons or lifting a goblet. But the little matters of every day intercourse appear to trouble very few. Once in a while when it happens to be a Cynic's Day there are people who assert that there are numbers of people who do not know that there are points of etiquette for daily social intercourse.

Some are much troubled as to which should go first in leaving a car—but that is when the two happen to be wearing their Sunday best in clothes. They are anxious to don their Sunday manners also. On ordinary week days they do not know that there is just as binding a law about entering and leaving cars and elevators, purchasing stamps at the post office, cashing cheques at banks, etc. Long, long ago one point, which has become etiquette since that time, concerned itself with simple fair play and crystalized itself into the terse saying: "First come, first served."

That means a waiting line and strict attention to one's place in that line. The last comer belongs at the last of the line and not at the head. Both men and women break this rule and brazenly push themselves in after the one who is being served. The same thing applies when one is boarding or leaving a car. Unless the one ahead is detaining the line unreasonably there is no exception to "first come, first served," and no one is going to keep the letter and break the spirit unless his education has been sadly neglected at home. A young man or young woman would do well to note these little points (which are not little at all), for there is no better indication of what one may expect in other things—consideration, courtesy, simple fairness can not be expected from those who are habitually rude in public. On the other hand one may expect in private, coarse and harsh language, brutal treatment, entire failure to appreciate the meaning of fair play and partnership.

India Stops All Enemy Traders

Passes Winding-up Act Similar to British—Companies May Remove Alien Stockholders

LONDON, June 30, (through Reuter's Ottawa Agency)—A special despatch from Simla says:—

"The government of India have promulgated an ordinance dealing with the liquidation of hostile firms and the property of hostile persons, which brings legislation of India into closer accord with the present state of the English law. The British Trading With the Enemy Act of 1916 enables action to be taken in the case of firms whose business by reason of enemy nationality or association is carried on wholly and with certainty for the benefit of the enemy subjects. It also gives power to the board of trade to abrogate contracts of transfer power, which is believed has for obvious reasons been very sparingly exercised. It also enables a company containing enemy elements to purge itself thereof with assistance of a custodian, who may permit British shareholders to put out enemy shareholders, depositing the price so paid with the custodian.

"The ordinance follows closely the English act with such modifications as local circumstances require. It will enable the government to wind up hostile business much on the lines of the Indian companies and insolvency acts the distribution of assets so realized being subject to special rules. The liquidator will have the power to give good title to purchasers of the goodwill of hostile businesses and to immovable property held by them.

"The new procedure represents a considerable advance from that hitherto adopted in that the initiative for liquidation will come from the liquidator and who will not be left nominally with the firm itself. It will also enable hostile businesses to be dealt with and to be completely extinguished, thereby preventing any chance of their recovering fro mthe state of suspended animation and resuming business after the conclusion of peace."

WHY BRAG ABOUT THE MILLIONAIRES?

(From the Toronto Globe.)

The people of the United States are becoming insufferably conceited over their millionaires. They point with pride to "the richest man on earth." They regard with veneration the citizen who has been shrewd enough to corner sufficient New York real estate to raise himself "high above the petty princes of Germany." In a talk about millionaires, an American writer gives a list of the men and women whose annual incomes are probably over a million dollars. We learn that "income-tax figures do not lie. Nor do they even exaggerate. On the contrary they distinctly underestimate the vast fortunes of America. The income tax first went into effect during ten months of 1913; and with all the shortcomings, imperfections, and prevailing ignorance of a brand-new system, forty-four persons actually paid taxes on incomes of one million dollars and over for those ten months. In 1914 there were sixty persons who paid taxes on a million or more, and one hundred and seventy-four who paid on more than half a million."

A democracy that boasts about the number of people with an income of a million dollars or more is in a bad way. It should be sitting up nights trying to secure a more equitable distribution of the wealth produced by its people, for there is nothing more true than that boundless wealth at the top of the social scale is inevitably accompanied by grinding poverty at the bottom.

It is interesting to note that there were in Great Britain in 1912, the last year for which reurns are available, despite the accumulation of wealth in lands and other forms for many centuries in the hands of a privileged class, only nineteen individuals who paid taxes on incomes of over a quarter of a million dollars. The United States will have to take a lesson from the old motherland regarding the best methods of reducing the too plethoric pocketbook of the plutocrat.

TIRED ACHING FEET AND LIMBS

are promptly relieved by applying Absorbine, Jr., the antiseptic liniment. It is soothing, healing, and invigorating—puts vim and energy into jaded muscles. One of the many enthusiastic users writes: "I received the trial bottle of Absorbine, Jr., all right and at that time was unable to walk without a cane, just around the house. I used it freely and inside of two days could walk without limping, something I had not done in two months. I went to the drug store and procured a $1.00 bottle and today can walk as good as ever. I'll never be without it. I am recommending it to everyone I can, for I am a living witness."

Absorbine, Jr., should always be kept at hand for emergencies.

At druggists, $1.00 and $2.00 a bottle or sent postpaid. Liberal trial bottle for 10c. in stamps.

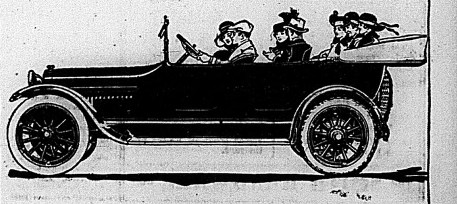
EFFECT OF SHELLS IN JUTLAND BATTLE

Far too few details as to the effect of modern shell fire on modern ships are as yet available for it to be safe to draw sweeping deductions. But when it is remembered that the bad light made it necessary to engage at a range which this war has taught us to consider only moderate it seems astonishing that the battle cruisers should have come through such severe punishment with such insignificant injuries. One hears of a ship receiving over fifty of 11 and 12-inch shell without losing a knot of speed, one-tenth of her complement, or having one-quarter of the guns out of action, as an actual fact, needing no essential repair to make her just as fit for fighting at the end as she was at the beginning of the action, and suffering no damages that very few weeks in dockyard cannot put right again.

This is a thing that should perhaps make one cautious in believing every enemy ship that was for any time under effective fire must be virtually destroyed, or shot to pieces. But it must be remembered that all through the action the British were using guns of far heavier calibre and, consequently throwing far more destructive shells than were the Germans. From 3.45 till 6 o'clock, Sir David Beatty's force was firing first four, then three broadsides of 13.5's and four broadsides of 15-inch guns. Only one of his ships was armed with 12-inch. We can take it as certain also that in the short time that the Grand Fleet was engaged, it would be the 15-inch and 13.5 gun ships that were principally in action. Where, therefore, there is reliable evidence of these ships having brought enemy vessels under a succession of salvoes, it seems reasonable to suppose that he must have suffered, hit for hit, far more than we did.

FIFTY horse-power 7 passenger SIX $1450

Studebaker



Costs Less to Buy-Less to Run

THIS new SERIES 17 Studebaker SIX at $1450 has become celebrated as the SIX that gives more actual, tangible, visible value per dollar of its price than any other SIX cylinder car on the market. And it is the SUPREME value of the year.

No other Six within hundreds of dollars of its price gives the FULL 50 horse power, the roomy SEVEN-passenger capacity, the comfort-insuring 122-inch wheelbase, the 34x4 tires that this Studebaker offers at $1450.

But not only does this new Studebaker cost less to BUY—it costs a great deal LESS TO RUN.

And the reason is simply that this car is the climax of a long and slow evolution of this one basic Studebaker design.

Result is a motor that gets every ounce of pull that there is in the gasoline—a chassis so perfectly balanced and aligned that it eliminates all the power-killing, tire-destroying sideway, a car that is designed and built for Service with Economy.

It's a "Made in Canada" Car that surely is a wonder to drive, and we'd just like to have the opportunity of taking you for a trial run, anywhere you say, as long as you say, as HARD as you say. Come in today.

THE RUSSIANS KEEP GOING

Chief Railway Centre in Eastern Galicia Falls to Brusiloff

LONDON, July 1.—Special—Kolomea, the chief railway centre of eastern Galicia, has fallen before the Russian attacks, says an official statemen received last night from Petrograd.

While the Austrian War Office in its statement last night omits any mention of this loss, Berlin quotes correspondents on the Galician front as reporting that the city has been evacuated. The battle which ended in the fall of Kolomea was, according to these correspondents, "horribly stubborn." The Austrians retired only after withstanding repeated attacks of great ferocity.

Panic seized the Austrians, say Russian despatches describing the retreat of the pursued forces.

ONE MILLION SHELLS DAILY

Enemy Trenches Levelled and Raided Even to Supporting Trenches

BRITISH HEADQUARTERS IN FRANCE, July 1.—The fourth day of the British bombardment sees no diminution in the volume of fire, which continues along the whole line, not ceasing day or night, cutting the Germans' barbed wire, demolishing their first and second line trenches, and placing curtains of fire in the roads and along their communication trenches.

Considerably more than a million shells a day are being expended and the supply seems unlimited.

The British infantry action has been limited thus far to raids, carried out under cover of the artillery and trench mortar fire, to ascertain the state of the German wire and trenches.

A new type of trench mortar of such rapid fire that six shots are kept in the air at once has proved highly serviceable, both in cutting wire and smashing trenches.

Where Mr. Flint Falls Into Error

Apparently Does Not Understand Conditions Attached to Being A Soldier

We learn from reliable sources that the information given in Mr. J. J. B. Flint's letter, which appeared in our columns the other night, regarding some 250 rejections from the 155th Battalion, as medically unfit, is incorrect.

After a Battalion is formed, there is always more or less of a wastage. A number are frequently transferred at their own request to some other branch of the service to which they seem more fit, and also many have been taken from the 155th Battalion for the new Pioneer Battalion, which is being formed; and also desertions; while others, who are medically fit for some reason or other, may be discharged as they can never become efficient soldiers. As a matter of fact, so far, up to the present date, there have been only 24 rejections of medically unfit men, from the 155th Battalion. Of course, others may be discharged as the result of the rigid training, showing weaknesses in the men that would otherwise not have occurred. Quite a number also are let out through having given wrong ages at the time of enlistment and are discharged at the request of their parents, on proof of correct age. So it is easily seen that the wastage, after a battalion is formed, due to various causes is sometimes quite large.

PREMIER'S MESSAGE TO CANADIAN PEOPLE

Tidings From all Fronts Most Encouraging in Twelve Months

OTTAWA, July 1.—Special—Sir Robert Borden, the Prime Minister, last night issued the following Dominion Day Message to the people of Canada:

"The forty-ninth anniversay of our Confederation finds Canada in common with all the Empire, still inspired with an unflinching determination to do her part in maintaining our cause to a triumphant issue. The long list of casualties brings its message of sorrow to many Canadian homes; but it brings also a proud memory of the conspicuous valor and endurance of our Canadian troops, who have proven themselves worthy of the highest trust reposed in them.

"As we approach the conclusion of our second year of war, the tidings from all the battlefront of the vast theatres in which the allied armies met the enemy are more encouraging than at any time during the past twelve months. We look forward with every hope to successes even more striking, which will bring still nearer the victory for which we are striving and the ending of this terrible conflict."

The funeral will take place from his late residence Burnham street, on Monday, July 3rd at 10.30 a.m. Funeral private. Please omit flowers.

Penuchi.

Two cupfuls of brown sugar, one cupful of white, three-quarters cupful of milk, butter size of walnut and vanilla to flavor. Cook sugar and milk over moderate blaze until it forms a soft ball in water. Remove from stove, add butter and vanilla. Beat until creamy and place in buttered pan. Be sure and don't cook too long. Remove from stove as soon as it forms a soft ball in water. It burns very easily, so stir quite often, but not continuously.

Carrot Pie.

One cupful of sour cream, one cupful of sugar, one cupful of grated carrot, the yolks of two eggs, salt, cinnamon and nutmeg to taste. Bake in one crust and cover with meringue, using the whites of two eggs and four tablespoonfuls of powdered sugar.

WAS FLAGSHIP OF SQUADRON

ERSTWHILE flagship of the admiral commanding the British auxiliary cruiser squadron patrolling the Indian Ocean and Red Sea, but now frowning 4.7 naval guns and war paint completely obliterated, the big transpacific liner Empress of Asia, of the Canadian Pacific Ocean Services fleet, a short time ago, returned to port after twenty-two months of war service.

She had been converted back to her original status as a peaceful passenger liner, and the transformation was perfect even to the slighest detail. In her interior, the magnificent public apartments, luxurious furnishings, gymnasium, verandah, cafe, and one and a thousand things for which the greyhounds of the C.P.R. transpacific fleet are justly famous, were all intact; in fact, it was the identical ship which put to sea from Vancouver on July 2, 1914. War was declared while the Empress of Asia was in the Far East, and she was at once commandeered, as were the remainder of the company's Pacific fleet, for the more stirring business of war.

The Empress of Asia was the first C.P.R. ship to be commandeered, and she was the first to be equipped as an auxiliary cruiser. Within a few days of the outbreak of war, she was unrecognizable in a coat of warship grey, and with eight 4.7 guns bristling from strategic points forward and aft. In the words of one of her officers, "she was ready for anything."

In the shortest possible space of time the luxurious furniture and palatial fittings were torn out of the liner, and she was a machine of destruction. It was a busy dockyard at Hongkong those days. Without wasting any valuable time, the naval authorities at Hongkong had manned the liner with a naval complement, only the R.N.R. men of the original complement remaining, and she was dispatched to sea. Enemy ships were in those waters, and it was vital that the lanes of commerce be kept open.

The Empress of Asia first saw her first war service off the Philippine islands. She was assigned to a fleet of armed vessels whose duty it was to see to it that no German or Austrian vessels interned in Manila Harbor escaped. The Asia was later joined by the Russia off the Philipine port, and it was here that both vessels figured in the exciting chase after the German steamer Marks, which by slipping within the three-mile limit, succeeded in reaching Manila, closely escaping capture.

Subsequently the Empress of Asia trailed the German cruiser Emden, and on one occasion was within a few miles of her, but the raider gave the auxiliary a clear field. The Asia kept in her tracks, however, and reached Keeling Island, one of the Cocos group, exactly three days after the Australian cruiser Sydney had accounted for her. Frequent trips were made by the Asia's officers to the battered hulk, as illustrated by the many interesting curios now decorating their quarters on the liner. After leaving Cocos, the Asia patrolled the trade routes in the Indian Ocean and the Bay of Bengal.

By way of diversion the big C.P.R. liner, during her period of service in the Indian Ocean, acted as convoy to French and Australian transports.

About this time the small British possessions of the Red Sea were constantly in danger from raids by the Turks, and the Empress of Asia was ordered to this zone of operations to defend the port of Aden. Aden, as is well known, is one of the principal of the British coaling stations on the route between England and the Far East. For several months the Asia, in company with other ships, made Aden her base of operations, and it is in this particular vicinity that she did most valuable work in the interests of the navy.

On the opposite shores of the Red Sea the Turks were strongly fortified at Steiksaid. The fortifications at Sheiksaid were bombarded by the Empress of Asia and so effective was the gunnery of the Asia's men that the Turkish batteries were soon silenced. By some means or other, however, the Turks managed to mount other guns in place of those destroyed, and it was necessary for the Asia to deliver a few more broadsides before the Sheiksaid batteries were reduced and the resistance of the Turks shattered in that section of operations.

Interesting pictures are in the possession of officers of the Asia showing the forts at Sheiksaid burning after the bombardment. Other Turkish forts were also reduced by gunfire before the C.P.R. liner terminated her association with the Red Sea. Arab slavers operating dhows in these waters also came in for a great deal of attention, and were promptly dealt with. While she was operating in those waters the liner was ordered to Bombay for drydocking and overhaul. The terrific heat in the Red Sea made it very uncomfortable for those aboard the Asia, but taken on the whole the cases of sickness were comparatively few.

The news that the Empress of Asia had been released came about the middle of October and by the latter part of November the liner was back at Hongkong for refit.

Capt. Edward Beetham, R.N.R., C.P.R. marine superintendent, who, by the way, returned here as a passenger aboard the Empress of Asia, arrived at Hongkong early in the year to superintend the refitting of the Asia and her sister ship the Russia.

The Empress of Asia was brought across the Pacific by Capt. Wellesley Davison, R.N.R., former commander of the Empress of Russia, who under instructions from Montreal, changed commands with Capt. Samuel Robinson, R.N.R., shortly before the Russia left Honkong in March. Mr. G. M. Douglas is chief officer of the Asia, while Mr. Kinley is first officer. Chief Engineer W. J. Davis has charge of the engine room, and Mr. E. Syder, formerly of the Monteagle, is purser.

HOW TO KEEP WELL

BY JOHN W. S. McCULLOUGH, M.D., D.P.H., CHIEF OFFICER OF THE PROVINCIAL BOARD OF HEALTH.

SOCIAL LIFE IN THE COUNTRY

A FRIEND of the writer in discussing the importance of promoting social life in the country brought out the importance of utilising the country schools for the purpose of the education of the farmer's boys and girls in respect to the possibilities of Canada, and particularly of our own Province of Ontario. He pointed out that by co-ordinating the activities of the various departments of the Government, the agricultural, the educational, the structural and the institutional including the public health department, and showing them in the form of film pictures a most useful and entertaining social circle might be formed in each rural school section. A most satisfactory film machine, producing excellent pictures, can be purchased for about $225.00 or in large numbers perhaps for about half that sum. If the Government would provide the picture films and to the local ones add those illustrating the geography, history, and scenery of other countries what an educational feature might be established. There is no limit to what it might achieve! In addition, the film pictures which have been shown all over the province by the Provincial Board of Health might be advantageously introduced and prove of lasting benefit to every community. There are enormous educational opportunities in the moving picture. Its valuable features are not confined to the Charlie Chaplin variety so much exploited in cities and towns; beyond all these it has an importance and value which will be realised before many years have passed by.

PATENT MEDICINES

Patent medicines have had a wide use in this as well as in older countries. Great fortunes have been made by their exploitation, the chief cause of their success being not in the value of the remedies themselves but in the skilful manner in which they are advertised. The trade in patent medicines has not been as successful in recent years as formerly. One reason is that the public is better educated than it used to be and the truth as to the character and usefulness of these remedies has been placed before the people. The rank fraud found in many cases, the absurd promises of cure for every kind of ill, which have been advertised, and the knowledge of the great mass of the people that these promises have not been made good have made people wary of purchase. There is a question if any patent medicine is of much value. There is no doubt that many of them are a downright injury to those using them.

The American Medical Association, through its Journal, has done an enormous service to the people of America, by its exposure of the frauds practised upon the public by the hundreds of so-called "cures" sold under the guise of Cancer cures, Consumption cures, cures for drunkenness, for female sickness, for baldness, obesity, and hundreds of other human ills. If the patent medicines of a past generation had possessed the power claimed for them they would have continued to sell them no longer advertised; or, if there was no sale for them, it would be because they had banished sickness from the earth.

CONSUMPTION CURES

Of the patent medicine fakes perhaps the greatest have been those purporting to cure consumption or tuberculosis of the lungs. Few place any reliance upon such advertised remedies for consumption nowadays, because the knowledge has been spread far and wide that consumption is cured only by means of living in the fresh air, by rest, by good food, and by abstinence from alcohol. No medicine is of any value in the treatment of the disease except such as promote the appetite and allay cough, pain, and other complications. The death-rate from tuberculosis in Ontario as well as in all civilized countries has been materially reduced of late years. In 1901 the death-rate in Ontario was 148 per 100,000 of population. To-day, thanks to increased application of knowledge in regard to this disease, the rate is 85 per 100,000 of population. This death rate is still capable of much reduction. In fact if people utilized all the knowledge we have of it the disease would be wiped out in the next generation and a death from consumption would be as rare as a death from smallpox. People are learning not to fear fresh air. They do not seek to keep it out of their homes. Milk from tuberculous cows, the greatest cause of tuberculosis in children, is pasteurized and the germs of the disease killed in the milk supply of most of our cities. Many anti-tuberculosis societies have been established all over the country. Boards of Health have spread the truth about the disease. Sanatoria for the care of the afflicted have been started here and there through the agency of philanthropic people.

Forward Movement by Allied Troops Unabated

Enemy Undertakes No Offensive—Three New Batteries Added to German Forces—British Reconnoitering Party Return With Prisoners—Germans Suffer Heavy Losses Without Being Able to Stem the Allied Drive

Canadian Press Special.

PARIS, July 4.—Afternoon statement—North and south of the River Somme the night passed quietly. The enemy undertook no offensive action against our troops, who have organized themselves in the positions they conquered yesterday.

Further information confirms previous reports that the war material captured by us is considerable. Three new batteries, two of them of heavy calibre, have been added to the batteries already enumerated. Further effect of our destructive fire has been noted. In one shelter forty bodies of German soldiers were found. In a ravine to the north of Assevilliers and on the northern slopes of the village of Herbecourt the Germans suffered enormous losses. To the north of Frise one of our aviators yesterday set on fire another German captive balloon.

Between the River Avre and River Aisne French reconnoitering parties have been very active, penetrating the first trenches of the enemy as far as the supporting trenches located to the north-east of Beuvraignes and opposite Vingre. These expeditions brought back prisoners..

On the left bank of the River Meuse a movement of the enemy against one of our trenches on the southern slope of Dead Man's Hill failed because of French fire. On the right bank of the river fighting was spirited all night long.

North-west of Thiaumont works there were six successive attacks, the last one accompanied with the use of flaming liquids. They were all futile. The Germans were mowed down by our curtain of fire and fire of our infantry. And they suffered heavy losses without being able to drive us from our position, all of which we retained.

We made some progress last night on the south-eastern boundary of Fumin Wood, and we drove the enemy from a small trench located to the north-west of the battery at Damloup. In Upper Alsace an attack by the enemy upon that works to west of Apsach was easily repulsed.

BAY OF QUINTE CONFERENCE SUMMER SCHOOL IN SESSION

Opened at Albert College Monday Evening with a Good Attendance—President Dr. Baker Gives Visitors Freedom of The College Building—Address of Welcome and Response

The Bay of Quinte Conference Summer School for the study of the Bible and the work of the Kingdom of God, held its opening session at Albert College last evening with Rev. Wm. Higgs, president, in the chair. More than 80 delegates registered during the day. The Quinte Conference includes not only the counties around the Bay but also Peterbor, Victoria, Durham and part of Ontario county, and young people from widely separated parts of the Conference are meeting and mingling at the Summer School. Dr. Baker gives the students the freedom of Albert College, and in a hearty address of welcome reminded them they are now on historic ground, as it was in one of the rooms of Albert College that the Forward Movement for Missions was born during the student days of Dr. T. C. Stephenson. The Rev. S. C. Moore, B.A., B.D., who brought a goodly company of Epworth Leaguers with him, also spoke inspiring words of welcome on behalf of Belleville Leaguers, reminding us that the teachable spirit is essential for all worthy work. The Rev. S. A. Kemp replied to the addresses of welcome in a speech bristling with bright thought and apt illustration. Dr. McLauglin, Victoria College; Revs. F. H. Langford, B.A., and Stanley E. Annis, M.A., B.D., and Prof. G. F. Stewart, briefly outlined the courses of sutdy to be pursued during the week

This morning the students began these courses. Every evening at 7.45 a mass meeting is held in the College Chapel to which the public is welcome.

Deputy Reeve of Rawdon Township Passes Away

General regret was expressed in the city and vicinity when it became known that Mr. W. E. Hawkins Deputy Reeve of Rawdon Township had passed away. Death occurred on Sunday after an extended illness, and was not unexpected. Mr. Hawkins was about 53 years of age and had resided all his life in Rawdon where he was well-known and highly esteemed. For the past 5 years he had been Deputy Reeve of Rawdon Township, filling that position with ability to himself and the county. At the recent meeting of the County Council in June Mr. Hawkins was present at two sessions but was unable to take an active part in the deliberations. Deceased was a member of the A.F. & A.M. and Orange Societies and was in politics Conservative. He had occupied positions of trust in county and municipal affairs. Information as to Missing Troops

His Worship Mayor H. F. Ketcheson received this morning the following, which tells its own story.

4TH C.M.R. BATTALION

To the Relatives and Friends of those Reported Missing belonging to the 4th C.M.R. Battalion:

During the action of the 2nd-3rd June, in which this battalion took part, some of the records, including the next of kin, were lost, and this prevents us from writing you direct. We are anxious, however, to point out that although they have been reported "Missing" there is still the hope that they may be "Prisoners of War."

Information will not be received from the enemy for some time it is feared, concerning those captured by them.

The officers and men of this battalion wish to express to you their deep sympathy in your anxiety, which we trust may be relieved when the list of prisoners is published. If, however, they should eventually be numbered among the fallen we wish you to know that the battalion fully appreciates how nobly they fought, and we honor them in the supreme sacrifice which they have made.

ALLIES FILLED WITH FIGHT ENEMY BEGS FOR MERCY

Fired With Enthusiasm, The British Soldier Gives No Quarter Montauban Attack Among The Greatest Successes—Wonderful Spirit is Praised by Officers

BRITISH HEADQUARTERS IN FRANCE, July 4.—Special—It is possible now to get something like a clear idea, though nothing like a historical narrative, of the fighting which began Saturday morning at 7.30, when the furious tempest of our guns passed farther over the German lines and our infantry left their trenches for the great adventure. The battle goes on with success to our arms. Fricourt, partly surrounded Saturday, was taken by assault yesterday, and a German counter-attack upon Montauban was repulsed with losses that tore gaps into the enemy's ranks.

Prisoners came tramping down in batches, weary, worn men, who have gallantly to praise our own infantry and remember with a shudder the violence of our gunfire.

Wounded men who are coming out of the fighting lines ask one question: How are we doing? The men suffering great pain have a smile in their eyes when the answer comes.

The spirit of our men is so high that it is certain we shall gain further ground, at however great a cost. The ground we have already gained was won by men who fought to win and who went "all out," as they say, with fierce enthusiasm to carry their objective quickly and utterly and cleanly. This wonderful spirit of the men is praised by all their officers as a kind of new revelation, though they saw them in trench life and in hard times.

ENTIRE GERMAN BATTALION SURRENDERS TO BRITISH FORCES

Canadian Press Special.

BRITISH HEADQUARTERS IN FRANCE, July 4.—The entire battalion of the 186th regiment of Prussian infantry, recruited from the Upper Rhine, surrendered yesterday to the British near Fricourt. The prisoners numbered twenty officers and six hundred men. The battalion had been assigned for duty only a short time before to replace the heavy casualties.

The British fire was so heavy and the trench occupied by the Prussians damaged so badly that the men refused to fight longer. The situation this morning is regarded by the British as satisfactory.

GIPSY WOMAN ARRESTED FOR THEFT

For some days a band of gypsies have been camping on the bank of the Moira River at the northern end of the village of Canifton, and the women have evidently been making money by telling fortunes and a slight-of-hand process. A man named Frank Storts was a victim of the latter scheme and he reported the affair to the police. It appears he visited the camp and one of the women proceeded to tell his fortune after he had placed some $9 in her hand, as she stated she needed the money to proceed in the occupation she was engaged in. When Shorts left the woman he discovered he was minus $4. The result was that a woman who gave her name as Elizabeth Buta was arrested and brought to the city. She was charged with theft and was found guilty. She returned the money and was also fined and paid all costs amounting to some $20.

ENEMY CONCENTRATING FORCES SPECTACULAR WORK OF ALLIES

Canadian Press Special.

LONDON, July 4.—Official Statement—The enemy, reinforced by many battalions drawn from other parts of the line, continues to offer very stubborn resistance to us at all points.

During the night there was heavy fighting in the vicinity of La Boisselle. Our troops fought with great gallantry against heavy attacks by the enemy. The enemy recaptured a small portion of the defenses south of the village. Otherwise the situation in this neighborhood is unchanged.

Further south some progress was made during the night. We captured a wood, further war material and prisoners.

On other portions of the front continuous trench warfare activity was maintained. Several raids were carried out. The particular raids by the rifle brigade and Sherwood Foresters were especially successful. In the vicinity of Armentieres, after a heavy bombardment an attempted raid by the enemy was repulsed with losses to them, some wounded prisoners remaining in our hands.

MUSIC AND DRAMA

LAST NIGHT AT GRIFFIN'S PLAYHOUSES.

"Any man who can lick me has no reason to feel ashamed of himself." Such was the compliment paid by a burly westerner to William Farnum, representing Lem Hardy, the parson, in the thrilling photodrama, "Fighting Blood," at Griffin's Opera House last night. The Rev. Lem never picked a fight, but when it was absolutely necessary, in order to make an opening for a preaching service, this fearless son of a fighting ancestry was on hand with the goods. The features leading up to Harding's conversion, primarily the admonition of his godly mother, followed by love, jealousy, treachery, unjustly charged with crime and sentenced to four years in prison, were cruel experiences, but the manliness of Hardy throughout was good to behold, and while his enemies decried his attempts for good his influence won at every point. The scenes are laid in the lumber camp and luxurious home of Henry Colby, the trial at court, the home church, from which he was hissed by the cry of jailbird, the western brothel, and finally the open prairie, the last denoting his victory for mankind, and the return of a love once torn from him. The play is an educator in many ways, depicting the deep attachment of a western reveller when once his friendship is won, and the attraction, in all walks of life of the manly man. "Fighting Blood," with several other shorter photostories will be repeated this evening.

AT THE PALACE

"The Youth of Fortune" a 5-reel photoplay, featuring Liora Parker and the De Davens provided an especially pleasing programme at the Palace Theatre last evening, bringing out fine acting, with a highly interesting climax. In "The Doomed Groom" a catchy comedy sketch, the audience found an abundance of humor, while "Her Great Part," a more serious, yet entrancing product of the films was beautifully set and consistent throughout. The repetition of the entire programme this evening should draw another large audience.

AN ALIEN AT GRIFFIN'S TOMORROW NIGHT

When, "The Sign of the Rose," was presented as a one act vaudeville feature, hundreds of the patrons of the theatres said it was a great pity that the highly emotional skit could not be expanded into a drama that would occupy the boards for the entire evening. In "An Alien", the 8 part Famous Player feature which is to be exhibited at Griffin's Opera House, to-morrow and Thursday evening, George Beban meets this demand. The story abounds with thrills, tears, sighs and sobs. It gives opportunity for the actor to tell a comprehensive and connected tale, which, without violence to logic, or making common the most sacred belief of humanity, carries the audience from the manger in Bethlehem, where the infant Jesus is seen, to the humble dwelling of the lower class Italian, where the sincerest love abounds.

Pietro Massena, a poor but proudly respectable Italian, is preparing a surprise for his daughter on Christmast Eve, and a good-natured lad, a cripple, is to play Santa Claus; but while he is purchasing a few toys the little girl, who has been given permission to go out for a brief period, is run down by an automobile driven by George Griswold. Griswold is a banker and broker. He has lost his own child and is following up what he believes to be a clew, when the accident occurs. Dorothy, the child of Griswold, is safe in the custody of his own scapegrace brother, who has conceived a plan to get money so as to help a friend named Robbin's, manager of a florist establishment.

McLAREN—In Belleville, on Sunday, July 2nd, 1916, Alexander McLaren, in his 57th year.

Thrifty Actors.

The economy of a stock company offered interesting instances here at the old Boston museum. Some of the actors had no intention of letting grass grow under idle feet. One player was a barber by day; another, the beloved "Smithy," was a tailor—very properly, the tailor played fops. I had a particular friend who was a cab driver. Who shall point the finger of scorn that these had two strings to their bow? Their example might be well followed. An honest barber or, for that matter, an honest cab driver may be the noblest work of God. And well may the actor's study of mankind be multiplied a thousandfold by the scraping of innumerable chins or the driving of the accidental wayfarer from the cradle to the grave. Who could better take man's measure than the tailor, dissect him to a hair than the barber or consider his final destination than the cab driver?—"My Remembrances," by E. A. Sothern in Scribner's Magazine.

Bettering the World.

If the world we live in is unsatisfactory you may say it is the will of God that it should be so. That gets you nowhere. You may say it is the law of nature it should be so. That gets you nowhere, either. But when by accurate measurement of lengths and weights and temperatures and modes of motion you understand that everything is what it is because of process then it comes to you that what process has made process can make over. Then if you like not the fashion of this world you can alter it. It may well be that the possession of a small, round grain of faith enables one to say unto this mountain, "Be thou removed and be thou cast into the sea," but if you want it done you lay down tracks, put locomotives and gondola cars on them, install steam diggers at one end and barges at the other and make Goethals superintendent of the job.—Eugene Wood in Century.

Rings on Oyster Shells.

A popular theory about rings on an oyster shell being an indication of its age is not supported by the careful investigation of Miss Ann L. Massy, who tested specimens from the oyster station at Ardfry, at the head of Galway bay. It has been supposed by many that each ring, or group, on the oyster's deep valve stood for a year's growth. But Miss Massy says that this deduction is not reliable. After a patient scrutiny of over 000 samples of various ages, from eighteen months to six years, she says: "An oyster of eighteen months or two summers appears to possess at least two rings, but may have as many as five. One of three summers has at least two rings and may have six. A four-year-old oyster may have only three rings or may possess seven or eight."—London Mail.

Life of an Arctic Sealer.

The arctic sealer has a very hard life. Sealing does not consist only of scrambling over ice fields in search of prey and battling breathlessly and fiercely when it is found. There are many incidental hardships to endure.

The usual type of arctic weather is a dense, lung clogging fog, with cold that is enough to freeze a glowing furnace. This fog, strange as it may seem, is oftentimes mixed with cruel blizzards of heavy snow, made more terrible by high and constant gales.

The passing of the snow is usually accompanied by sleet and rain that are more penetrating than snow. Misery, therefore, is not an unfamiliar visitor to the crews of arctic sealers.—Detroit Free Press.

Known by Their Walk.

A man's walk is as peculiar to himself as his personal appearance is.

So much a part of himself is a man's way of walking, indeed, that it is most difficult to disguise. Many a fugitive from justice who has completely altered his ordinary appearance has been betrayed by his walk.

The peculiar gait of many people often indicates their occupation. The policeman, the soldier and the sailor each has his peculiar walk which betrays him.—Pearson's.

Russian peasants are to get civil rights equal to those given other classes of the population. War works many changes.

The 155th Leads

In Camp, Sunday, July 2nd.

Dear Intell.—Just a card to tell you about the route march to Kingston Mills and return Saturday—distance 16 miles. Our battalion led the parade, and according to accounts made the best showing, by having the largest percentage in the line at the finish. Our band and battalion were complimented by Col. Hemming, and all the men were given late passes to the city as a little indulgence. The march, on account of the heat and distance, was most trying, and it is estimated that nearly 25 per cent. fell out; some dropping unconscious. In one battalion a whole company quit when their Lieutenant collapsed, and a whole band (136th) fell out. Our band was the only one with enough steam left to play at the finish, and we played "Hail, Hail, etc." Our band was given first place in the parade and finished in the best condition.

155th Member.

MARRIAGES

BIRD—GERNON—On Monday, July 3, 1916, by Rev. Father Killean, Miss Ella Gernon to Mr. W. Bird, of Foxboro. They were attended by Miss Agnes Brown and Mr. Fred Bird. Mr. and Mrs. Brown left on the 6 o'clock train going north.

Derby's Market Stone.

In Derby, England, there is a curious relic of the great plague of 1665. It stands in the arboretum gardens and is commonly called "the market stone." To avoid infection the country folk from the surrounding villages would leave their orders for anything they might want with the watchman, who used to go into the town, make the necessary purchases and deposit them on "the market stone."

Addition.

"Now, Robert," said his teacher, "if your mother gave you two apples and your brother gave you three more how many would you have?"

"I'd have two good apples and three wormy ones," was Robert's prompt reply.

Cause For Gladness.

The pessimist was suffering from rheumatism.

"Every bone in my body aches," he complained.

"You ought to be glad you are not a herring," said the optimist.

Retort Courteous.

"I suppose there's nothing doing for a live wire like me in this stupid town of yours."

"Well, I don't know. There're several live wires like you doing time here."—Exchange.

Fewness.

"Why is it that as the Indian and the bison become extinct their pictures appear on our currency?"

"I don't know, unless they are considered symbolical of scarcity."—Washington Star.

Balanced Meals--

Have them both tasty and healthful.

Years ago a food was devised to serve two important functions—(1) furnish delicious flavour, and (2) well-balanced nourishment.

That food is

Grape-Nuts

MADE IN CANADA

It fulfils its office admirably, for it is made of whole wheat and malted barley, with all their splendid nutrition, including the vital mineral salts, which are lacking in much of the food of the usual dietary.

In thousands of homes Grape-Nuts forms part of the daily ration with both young and old.

THIS IS THE 676TH DAY THE BRITISH EMPIRE HAS BEEN AT WAR WITH GERMANY.

THE GLOBE AND TRUE TEMPERANCE.

Nothing on earth will start the Toronto Globe on an aerial trip with greater alacrity than to be caught at its own game. Apparently wrought up because of a guilty conscience, it twists Premier Hearst into making the assertion that "some Liberals of North Perth, forgetting everything but party advantage, say: 'Here is a chance of joining forces with the liquor interests and those opposed to prohibition and see if, with that fusion, we cannot down the Hearst candidate and give a black eye to the Hearst Government.' This is the issue."

As might be expected, the Globe denies the trumped-up charge, and places a laurel wreath upon the brow of its party leader with the following eloquent tribute:—

> The Liberal party stands for the permanent and unconditional prevention of the sale of liquor in hotels and clubs. Through Mr Rowell, its responsible leader, it has urged the Government at every session since 1911 to unite with it to abolish the bar. The Government under Sir James Whitney refused to accept that policy, and, as a result, secured in the election of 1914 the enthusiastic support of the liquor interests of the Province. The contributions of those engaged in the business did much to defeat the Liberal party. The most effective election agencies of the campaign were those which consolidated behind Conservative candidates the votes of business men connected in even the remotest way with the traffic.

While professing a desire to close the bars of hotels and clubs, it deliberately leaves an open door for the bottle sale of liquor by wholesalers and side-dispensers, thereby making every back ally a drinking brothel of the most obnoxious nature. In charging the Whitney Government with refusing to accept the Liberal temperance policy, it neglects to acknowledge the Sir James Whitney record of drawing the lines as to liquor privileges until the dealers charged him with unfairness and stated clearly that a further enclosure of the net would compel them to go out of the business. The Whitney reforms were itemized in Government papers throughout the Province during the 1914 campaign to the number of about forty distinct laws—to be recognized by the Globe, Mr Rowell and party adherents in general? Not a credit mark was jotted down. Such was not the policy of the Rowellites. But the voters of Ontario, by a large majority, recorded their confidence, with substantial results.

But the meanest caper of the whole propaganda was the scheme of Mr. Rowell to slide into power upon a temperance plank, so conniving that no Conservatives could vote for temperance without swallowing the complete Liberal doctrine. The game caught a limited number of the more-so-called conscientious Government supporters—who objected to being consigned to hades by erratic pulpit orators—but on the other hand Liberals galore bolted their party and Whitney's majority was materially increased.

Finally, by the common sense attitude of our voters, Ontario was saved the sad spectacle of Halifax, which is now a prohibition city, so far as the public sale of intoxicating beverages by the glass is concerned. Citizens, however, are permitted to keep the drink they desire in their own homes, so those who simply must have their rum, or whisky, or beer, are not so very badly off after all. Nor is the manufacture of intoxicants forbidden, local breweries being permitted to make for export. In this the province is like others which have attacked the liquor problem. There has yet to be an attempt made to have genuine prohibition in Canada.

Ottawa Free Press: There seems to be little room for doubt that the offensive begun by the Allies on Saturday, and that in two days has re-conquered about fifty square miles of French territory is the commencement of the "big drive." The watchword of the British and French on the western front throughout the twenty-three months of war has been carefulness. Since the Germans were turned at the Marne and held at Ypres the Allies have resolutely refused to uselessly sacrifice men and munitions. They have not moved for sentimental reasons or spectacular effect. The attack at Loos in September is practically the only incident in the long period the Allies have faced each other that the British have sought a separate individual advance. It is not conceivable then, in view of what has gone before, that this great advance that has now been made is merely for the purpose of putting forward the Allied line in one section and without an intention to follow it with a persistent offensive.

A noticeable advantage in the method employed by the British in the present great drive on the western front is that, while it is more costly in shells, it is more economical in human lives. The Allies have all along conserved their man-power, just as the Germans have been criminally reckless in this respect. This difference in policy is not a matter of choice. The Germans have certainly got possession of the iron districts of North-east France and Belgium, but they are short of many vital materials in shell making. On the other hand, they were bound to risk everything in the attempt to obtain an early decision simply because they could not afford to wait.

Toronto News: Teuton newspapers announce that after the German navy returned from its "great victory" over the British in the Skagerack, the Kaiser rushed aboard the flagship and "kissed Admiral Scheer on the quarter-deck." On all the other ships he kissed the captains in turn. A writer in The London Chronicle christens the Emperor "All Highest Supreme Osculator," and adds: "Nor were kisses all that his victims had to endure, for it is officially announced that the excited Kaiser delivered a speech on each ship, firing off a series of wild harangues." If Wilhelm II. acts this way over an engagement in which his riddled fleet had to run for cover, how would he perform in case of a real sea triumph?

Montreal Star: Clearly the hour of supreme crisis has come. The Allies are now straining every nerve to beat down the Teuton defences on all sides. Everywhere we are attacking, except at such sporadic spots at the Volhynian angle and some sectors about Verdun. We shall expect to hear at any moment of an advance from Salonika. At all events, all the Allied nations are fighting now with full strength at their selected points. Our best men are dying every second for the cause of liberty and democracy. Every hour is big with possibilities. Any "tick" of the telegraph may bring decisive and glorious news.

Current Comment

The Allies have the whole world at their command. They can manufacture, and they can buy, in unlimited quantities. Not only that, but they have a decisive superiority in man-power. They have been storing up the one and training the other with tremendous energy for months past, and now they are launching the greatest offensive of the war.

Russia appears to be satisfied with prohibition. The Duma has declared prohibition of all liquor containing more than 1¼ per cent of alcohol. All except wine. The manufacture and sale of wine containing as much as 12 per cent. alcohol will be permitted. This shows that the prohibition movement in Russia is more economic than moral. —Hamilton Herald.

The Winnipeg Telegram has discovered that the simplest way to check the growth of dandelions on the front lawn is to cover the surface with concrete to the depth of nine inches. This may answer for the effete Winnipeg dandelion, but the Calgary variety will make a meal off concrete and then clamor for something solid wherewith to stay its growing-pains.—Calgary News-Telegram.

Suffragist women of Germany have sent this message to French women: "We feel, think and suffer with you. We swear that after this catastrophal war is over, the women of all nations shall work unitedly to forever prevent its recurrence." Meanwhile, no doubt, these German suffragists support Bethmann-Hollweg's claim that Germany is entitled to the privilege of dictating terms of peace.

BUSY BEES IN WINTER.

How They Generate Heat to Keep the Colony Warm.

The bee upholds his reputation for industry throughout the winter months as well as during the summer. Being susceptible to cold, the bee must turn to his colony for warmth. Communism, which in bees is so highly developed in the storing of food and caring for the young, is also the basis for the heating system.

It was found by experiment that only the shell of the cluster made by the bees in cold weather is compact. This is formed by one to several layers of bees all solidly arranged with their heads inward, their hairs interlacing. This arrangement is perfect for conservation of the heat within. Except for an occasional shifting of position the bees forming the shell are quiet. But within the shell strange things are going on.

It is here that the heat is generated. And the antics are not unlike our own when we are cold. The bees are packed loosely within the shell so that there is plenty of space for many bees to be exercising at a time. Rapid fanning of the wings, shaking the body from side to side, rapid breathing and other movements are all part of the scheme for raising the temperature. In one particular instance, when a bee had been rapidly fanning with his wings for seven and a half minutes, the thermometer nearest him rose half a degree F.—Pearson's Weekly.

Johnny Roche's Tower.

Standing on the banks of the river Awberg, between Mallow and Fermoy, County Cork, Ireland, is a remarkable edifice known as "Johnny Roche's Tower." The whole tower was built by the labor of one man, who subsequently resided in it. This individual, who received no education whatever, also erected a mill, constructing the water wheel after a special design of his own. Long before the introduction of the bicycle he went about the country in a wheeled vehicle of his own construction propelled by foot power. His last feat was to build his tomb in the middle of the river bed. John Roche died, but was not interred in the strange burying place which he selected for himself, his less original relatives deeming such a mode of sepulture unchristian.—London Strand Magazine.

The Horseshoe Legend.

Here is an explanation of the old horseshoe superstition: St. Dunstan was a skilled farrier. One day while at work in his forge the devil entered in disguise and requested Dunstan to shoe his "single hoof." The saint, although he recognized his malign customer, acceded, but caused him so much pain during the operation that Satan begged him to desist. This St. Dunstan did, but only after he had made the evil one promise that neither he nor any of the lesser evil spirits, his servants, would ever molest the inmates of a house where the horseshoe was displayed.

The Coffee Plant's Friend.

In Colombia there is a tree highly esteemed as a shade for the coffee plant. It is found also in tropical Brazil and possesses qualities that make it peculiarly suited for this particular use. It will live on a stony, poor soil, and a tree only eighteen months old will shade 144 square yards of ground, while when full grown it may be fifty feet high and have a spread of fifty feet on every side.

Grandeur.

"Where did your ruler get his ideas for this magnificent palace?"

"It was modeled after an American drug store," explained the grand vizier. "Some fine effects, eh?"

The Sort.

"You looked very sympathetic when Mrs. Jaggers was talking to you. Was she telling you a moving story?"

"I should say so. She's been in six houses in as many months."

Heavy Reading.

"I've seen 'French at a Glance,' but some literature can't be handled that way."

"What, for instance?"

"A railroad time table at a glance."

No More Fairy Tales.

"Children are getting all mixed these days."

"What's on your mind?"

"My little nephew only knows Robin Hood as a character in a comic opera."

FIXING UP A PLAY.

The Method Charles Hoyt Used to Develop His Dramatic Plots.

Charles Hoyt wrote seventeen plays. He would sit in the Pullman with the shade drawn down over his head and looking out of the window at nothing—thinking, studying over situations for some new play.

He would not begin work on a new play until he had its arrangement laid out in his mind. Then he would write it, longhand, in two or three days.

He developed his situations by telling over and over and over again his scheme for a new play. He would come to me. "Otis," he would say, "have you heard my idea for a new play?"

I would say that I had not. Then he would launch into it, elaborating as he went along. He would see me, later in the day perhaps, with some one. He would come up to us with the same question, "Otis, have you heard my idea for a new play?" knowing mighty well I had. He wouldn't wait for me to answer, but he would tell it to my companion, elaborating upon the version he had given me. For each new play I probably would hear that same question twenty times and listen to twenty different versions, each succeeding one more developed and elaborate.—Green Book Magazine.

Peculiar Vocabulary.

"Your daughter," said Mrs. Oldcastle after being conducted through the newly furnished wing of the magnificent palace occupied by the Bullingtons, "has such a splendid vocabulary."

"Do you think so?" her hostess replied. "Josiah wanted to get her one of them escritoires, but I made up my mind right at the start that a vocabulary would look better in a room furnished like hers is, even if it didn't cost quite so much."—Exchange.

Afterthoughts.

Invest a little money in bonds—of friendship.

When business gets bad go hunting—new business.

Forget your troubles—by remembering your blessings.

Smile with every one—and never at any one.

Believe every man innocent—until he is proved innocent.

Be game—but not everybody's.

Lift the fallen—and catch the falling.

Just the Other Way.

"Our childhood ambitions are seldom realized."

"Too true."

"Life with me is just the reverse of what I thought it would be."

"How so?"

"I thought I was going to set the world on fire, and now I make my living selling insurance."

Real Pleasant.

Nellie, aged four, was gazing intently at the visitor's new bonnet.

"Well, dear," asked the lady at last, "what do you think of it?"

"Oh," replied the small observer, "I think it's all right. Aunt Mary told mamma it was a perfect fright, but it doesn't frighten me any."

When a Man's Great.

"I would like to ask you one more question," said the youth.

"Let it come," rejoined the home grown philosopher.

"When," quoted the youth, "would you say that a man has achieved greatness?"

"When he deserves his own opinion of himself," answered the home grown philosopher.

Why He Returned.

"Back home again, eh, doctor? What was the trouble? Too healthy for you out there?"

"Exactly. There was only one case of sickness in town the whole time I was there."

"And I suppose some other doctor had that."

"No I had it. It was homesickness."

So Honest.

Wigg—You can say what you will of Grouchleigh, but you must admit that he is thoroughly honest. Wagg—That's right. Grouchleigh never even finds fault without wanting to return it.—Philadelphia Record.

Didn't Worry.

"What has become of that Don't Worry club you once helped to organize?"

"Everybody refused to worry. The club got in debt and had to disband."

A Smooth Approach.

"You seem hard worked, sir," said the affable stranger.

"I'm half dead."

"Then I called in the nick of time. I'm selling life insurance. If you're half dead you can't get a policy any too quick."

Impossible Feat.

Irate Father—Don't you think, young man, you can walk into this house and hang up your hat. Timid Suitor—I know I can't, sir. You're sitting on it.

The more you speak of yourself the more you are likely to lie.—Zimmerman.

ANGELA'S HERO

He Turned Out to Be What She Wanted

By CLARISSA MACKIE

Sunderland was one of those places that are very nice for young persons to live in until the time comes for the boys to choose careers and the girls to get married or—in these days of woman's independence—to choose careers too. There was one period when half a dozen or more youngsters formed a set that was voted the most attractive the town had ever contained.

Two decades passed after the set had been all together at Sunderland when Angela Thornton visited her old friend Edna Wolcott, now Edna Blake. After the greetings the two friends sat together over their work talking of old times. Some of those who had been happy together had gone to their long home. Others had been lost to their old associates. Presently Mrs. Blake said:

"Angela, I wonder if you realize that you are the only one of our old set who has never married." She smiled affectionately at Angela Thornton.

"Yes," said Angela calmly, "I do realize it, Edna. I suppose the rest of you, wives and mothers all, wonder why I am so contented."

"Tell me the secret, dear, and I'll not breathe it to another soul," coaxed Mrs. Blake.

Angela's charming face flushed, and she looked only half of her forty years. Her hair was so fair and golden, untouched by time, and her skin so fresh and unlined and her sweetness so unmarred by long years of sorrow and loss of loved ones that her friends declared she had discovered the secret of perennial youth.

"There was Alexander Finlay," began Edna Blake mischievously, "the first of a long line of suitors. Why, Angela, why did you refuse them all?"

"Because," said Angela quite simply, "I was waiting for a hero, a real hero, to arrive. Edna, I am a hero worshiper. All my life I have longed for some romantic adventure, thirsted for a lover who would bravely ride up to our gate and carry me off on a brave black horse. I know you are shocked," she ended with a whimsical smile.

Mrs. Blake's dark face was aglow with amusement and some inward excitement.

"So you have been waiting for a hero, you romantic goose!" she said at last. "In this twentieth century there are no bold lovers who carry their sweethearts off on brave black horses. They usually elope by motorcar. And Alexander Finlay is still unmarried, and they say he has six motorcars."

"Not if he had sixteen motorcars!" declared Angela; then, with an effort to turn the conversation to a less personal topic, she went on, "How is Nathan getting on with his invention?"

"Wonderfully, if one may judge by his complete absorption in his work," returned Nathan's sister ruefully. "Actually, Angela, he hasn't poked his nose outside of that workshop for three weeks except to take a short walk around the fields. He sleeps there, and I have his meals sent out to him. He says he doesn't dare leave the shop a moment. I asked him why he built it in the center of the ten acre field, and he said"—Mrs. Blake giggled—"it was going to be a fine season for turkeys."

"The idea!" gasped Angela. "You don't suppose he is raising turkeys and is going to corner the turkey market?"

"It's something with wings anyway," admitted Mrs. Blake. "I heard him talking to Mr. Fellowes about it."

"What does Mr. Blake think about it?"

"Oh, Jim? He declares Nathan is building an aeroplane; said he saw one hovering over the field one night last week. But I tell him it's all nonsense. Nathan isn't the sort of man to invent an aeroplane or anything half so romantic. You know, Angela, what a plodding, practical sort of boy my brother was. Well, he has grown up to be the most matter of fact man in some respects. He might invent a new sort of washing machine or some household necessity, but an aeroplane—never!"

That evening Mrs. Blake repeated the conversation to her highly edified husband, and that gentleman, strolling out to the ten acre field to enjoy an after dinner smoke with his brother-in-law, retold the story to Nathan.

Nathan listened, his dark head bent attentively. When he lifted it at last his expression was noncommittal. The afternoon sun shining on the lenses of his spectacles concealed his gray eyes from Jim's quizzical glance.

Jim Blake was rather disappointed at Nathan's silence. He had always suspected Nathan of having a tenderness for Angela Thornton, and, now that Angela had arrived from her New England home to make an extended visit with the Blakes, Jim had craftily planned to do a little matchmaking on his own account. And here was Angela, most unreasonable of women, demanding a romantic escapade, with a real hero in the bargain. Why, the woman might die an old maid after all, he argued as he went back to the house, for Nathan was anything but a heroic figure, with his tall, stooping form, his nearsighted gray eyes and his straight black hair and silent tongue.

"Hero, indeed!" he was muttering in his sleep, and Mrs. Blake, hearing him, smiled secretly.

"I wonder why he was telling Angela that the rose garden is haunted," she thought. "He knows she is quite fearless at night and might take to wandering around the garden to run our ghost to earth! Strange, Jim never spoke to me about the ghost; but, of course, I am not looking for adventures."

Angela was thinking about the ghost of the rose garden, and she decided that the very next moonlight night she would watch for it. "Not from the window," she told herself courageously, "but in the garden itself. Very likely it is only Edna's cook getting a breath of fresh air after a hard day's work, or it might be her sweetheart."

It rained the next night and the next, and it was not until the third night that a pale moon showed through the clouds. Nathan appeared at dinner that evening, and Angela showed such a charming embarrassment at meeting him and Nathan blinked so rapidly behind his glasses that Jim Blake came to the conclusion that Angela's plea of waiting for a "hero" to come into her life was only an excuse.

Nathan only remained a few minutes after the meal was concluded. Jim followed him into the porch for a quiet word.

"If you should be skimming around after dark, old man," he warned his brother-in-law, "just keep your eye on Miss Angela. She will be searching the rose garden for a ghost. It's sort of a fad of hers, you know, that and expecting bold lovers to ride up on black horses and elope with her. Just see that no one does it, eh?"

"Um—ah!" said Nathan rather vaguely as he wandered off toward the fields.

"Done, by Jove!" chuckled Jim Blake as he lighted a cigar.

It was verging on midnight when Angela Thornton slipped cautiously down the front stairs and let herself into the garden.

The Blakes prided themselves on their lovely gardens, especially the rose garden, which was inclosed in a high hedge of Cherokee roses.

The rose garden lay on the other side of an expanse of rolling lawns.

Angela, wearing her white frock, with a pale blue shawl wrapped around her slender shoulders, went slowly down the path and stepped on to the springy turf. The moon, drifting in and out of the scudding clouds, made alternate light and shadow on the grass.

It was a pleasant night for ghost hunting.

Presently there came a throbbing sound overhead and a deeper shadow on the lawn, though now the clouds had parted to let the moon shine through quite clearly.

Angela, startled, looked up and saw a great object bearing down upon her out of the night sky, a great black winged thing. No; it was white where the moonlight touched it!

Then it came down, down, reached the ground, rocked over the turf and came to a pause within half a dozen feet of Angela Thornton.

"Why, it's an aeroplane!" she thought and clasped her hands in delighted wonder, for she had never seen one except in the illustrated papers. "The poor man has lost his way!"

The aviator had climbed out of his seat and was coming toward Angela. His was a tall, thin, stooping figure dressed in leather garments and wearing close fitting cap and goggles. Over his arm he carried a big leather coat.

"Angela," he said deliberately, "I've always wanted to marry you. You remember I asked you once years ago, and you called me a simpleton and"—

"Nathan," she quavered, for she had penetrated his disguise, "I sent you away because I was the simpleton. I loved you and I wanted to marry you, but you were not romantic enough for me. So I have waited"—

"Waited for me?" he put in eagerly.

"Of course!"

He turned and waved a hand at the aeroplane. "Come with me, then, dear, and never dare to say that you have not had an adventure. Slip into this coat. There! The minister at Woburn is waiting for us. Oh, I'm a hero—quite an up to date one, sweetheart. And my motor will take us to Woburn and our wedding in a manner never dreamed of by you."

So he plucked a handful of white roses for a bridal bouquet, and then he lifted Angela into the passenger's seat and strapped her in. Then he took the pilot's place, started the motor of his own inventing and presently they were soaring at a safe height above the treetops.

The moonlight shone on the cross of the steeple of the Woburn church and guided them straight to the minister and future happiness.

The moonlight shone on the Blakes' rose garden and the deserted lawn. And Edna Blake and her husband, thrusting their heads from the windows of their adjoining rooms, stared into each other's surprised faces.

"You saw it?" asked Edna at last.

"Wouldn't have missed it for anything," declared Jim brazenly.

"Matchmaker!" she taunted.

"Why didn't you tell Nathan yourself?" asked Jim chuckling.

"He might have suspected me of matchmaking," she confessed. "As it is, they have revived their old love, married and I wonder if an elopement by aeroplane is romantic enough for Angela?"

"I guess that excuse of Angela's was made to cover up her tenderness for Nathan," said Jim eagerly.

"Oh, you mean that there would be no romance for Angela unless Nathan figured in it?"

"Yes, and I mean that, no matter in what guise Nsthan came, he alone could be Angela's hero!"

DEATHWATCH BEETLES.

Their Uncanny Ticking and Their Trick of Playing Dead.

You've probably heard the deathwatch beetle oftener than you've seen him. He hides away in furniture or interior woodwork and keeps up a continual "tick-tick-tick" like a watch. Day or night you'll hear him pounding away. He's eternally persistent about it and ghostlike and uncanny, hence his name.

He makes the little ticking noise with his head, pounding it on the wood. It's the way he has of calling his mate, and his mate answers him in turn. If you pound on the wood where he is hiding he'll answer you just like he does his mate.

You may wonder how he finds his way inside a piece of furniture. He gets there when he's in the grub or larva state, boring his way through wood, paper or anything the grub can eat. The larva which eats its way through the leaves of a book is a cousin.

The deathwatch beetle has another trick besides that one of calling his mate by pounding his head on wood. When you touch one of the little creatures he folds his legs up beneath his body and makes believe he's dead. He will keep on playing possum even if you put him close enough to a fire to roast him.—Philadelphia North American.

DIVISION OF NUMBERS.

Rules That Will Simplify Some Examples In Arithmetic.

It is often convenient to know whether a given number is divisible by another without going through the usual process of division. Almost every one knows that however large a number may be, it is divisible by 5 if the last digit is 5 or 0. The following gives the rule for some other numbers:

A number is divisible by 2 when the last digit is divisible by 2; by 3 when the sum of the digits is divisible by 3; by 4 when the number represented by the last two digits is divisible by 4; by 5 when the number ends in 5 or 0; by 6 when it is divisible by 2 and also by 8; by 8 when the number represented by the last three digits is divisible by 8; by 9 when the sum of the digits is divisible by 9.

For example, the number 1728 is divisible by 2, because its last digit, 8, is divisible by 2; by 4, because 28 is divisible by 4, and by 8 because 728 is divisible by 8. It is also divisible by 3 and by 9, for the sum of its digits total 18, a number divisible by 3 and by 9. Since it is divisible by 2 and by 3, it is also divisible by 6.

To find whether a number is divisible by 7 you must go through the usual process of division.—Youth's Companion.

Expostulating With the Thunder.

In "The Rediscovered Country" S. E. White gives this glimpse of a native custom in an East African thunderstorm:

A Wakoma porter stood out stark naked in the rain and shouted back an answer in a loud tone of voice to every clap of thunder.

He was a fine sight, as he was revealed by the flashes—the upright pose, the rain streaming from his glistening body, the flicker of his metal ornaments. M'ganga, later appealed to, said that he was the official thunder lord for his people. He was saying: "Go away! Go this way! Go that way! You like to sit on high hills! There are no high hills here! Go to Ikorongo, there are high hills!" He had also put "medicine" in a tree in camp. I asked M'ganga if he himself believed in this. He grinned quietly and replied, "Well, the rain has gone."

The Word Calico.

The word "calico" has a queer origin. Many centuries ago the first monarch of the province of Malabar, in Hindustan, gave to one of his chiefs as a reward for distinguished services his sword and all the land within the limit of which a cock crowing at a certain temple could be heard. From this circumstance the little town which grew up in the center of this territory was called Calicoda, or "the cock crowing." Afterward it was called Calicut, and from this place the first cotton goods were imported into England bearing the word calico.

STORY OF A DREAM

Curious Slumber Vision and Its Sequence In Real Life.

A WARNING OR A COINCIDENCE

Whichever of the Theories May Be Selected as the Answer to the Problem, It Was a Singular and Puzzling Psychological Experience.

The following real life experience, which is interesting both as a story and for the psychological problems it involves, is related to the Pathfinder by one of its women readers:

"In a dream one night it seemed that I awoke and found myself lying on a mattress placed on the floor of a room entirely devoid of furniture. In my dream I felt considerable surprise at finding myself in such a situation, and I looked about in dismay and alarm. Upon trying to move I found to my horror that I was weak and sick, and I fell back on the pillow exhausted and much depressed.

"Just then the door of the room opened and a man entered. He was extraordinarily tall and was very dark and thin. Instinctively I felt that he was my doctor. I asked him where I was and what was wrong. Slowly and solemnly he answered:

"'You have smallpox.'

"At this juncture I awoke, greatly horrified and agitated. All day my dream stood out with frightful vividness in my mind. At length in the hope of relieving myself of some of its unpleasantness I related it to several of my friends. Without exception they earnestly advised me to be vaccinated at once, and I did so.

"A few days later I was in New York city. As I walked along I noted many fruit venders with quantities of fine looking white grapes piled up on their carts. The fruit was so tempting that I stopped before one of the carts and asked the young fellow in charge of it to weigh out two pounds for me. As he was waiting on me I saw him cast a furtive glance behind him, then despite my request that he give me my grapes at once, he seized the handle of his cart and with most of his fellow merchants trundled rapidly away.

"I looked in the opposite direction and saw a man, evidently a city official, who was ordering the few remaining fruit venders to 'move on.' He was coming in my direction, and as I was somewhat incensed at the summary departure of the vender before he could sell me the grapes I wanted, I decided to wait and give the cause of the trouble 'a piece of my mind.'

"On looking up to address him I was startled to find myself face to face with the living counterpart of the physician who in my dream had informed me that I had the smallpox. Recovering my self possession as best I could, I said, 'Will you kindly tell me why these fruit men are so persecuted? Instead of idling their time away in saloons or on park benches they try to earn an honest living by selling fruit. I think this is entirely commendable. Why are they not allowed to conduct their business in peace?'

"'All this sounds very well,' replied the man, 'but there is another side to this question. These people are poor and as a matter of economy live very closely, several families sometimes occupying a single room. Not long ago in one of their habitations I saw on a bed one of their women suffering with a contagious disease. Under the bed was a stock of fruit which one of the men took out on the street the following day to sell. At present we are obliged to watch these people very carefully in order to prevent a general spread of this terrible disease, but,'—and he looked squarely at me—'if you do not mind having smallpox I see no reason why you should be prevented from patronizing the fruit venders all you please.'

"For several minutes we stood there, and neither of us said a word. Then the dark man walked off in one direction and I in the other. When I had gone a short distance something prompted me to look around. I did so and was startled to see the man of my dreams looking thoughtfully at me. Instantly it flashed over me, 'He has had a dream of me and recognizes me as I did him.'

"Whether or not such was the case I have never learned, but I do know that so far I have escaped smallpox. Was my dream a warning, I wonder, or was it merely a dream, and was my meeting the tall, dark, thin man nothing more than a coincidence?"

The Ptarmigan.

There are few birds whose plumage is so variable as the ptarmigan's. Three times in the year its plumage changes. It has separate coats for spring, autumn and winter. At the beginning of November it puts on the last costume of the season. Its spring brown and summer gray serve well to hide it among the scanty herbage of its haunts from the keen eye of the soaring falcon.

AUDIENCES ARE FICKLE.

It Doesn't Take Much to Spoil a Fine Scene or a Speech.

One of my favorite fancies is of an audience composed of the elect of the ages, with Socrates, Homer, Sophocles, Demosthenes, Praxiteles, Cicero, Horace, Dante, Moliere, Milton, Goethe, Washington Irving, Ben Jonson, Coleridge, Thackeray and Bernard Shaw in the front row and back of them an assemblage of personages of like degrees listening to William Shakespeare lecturing on "The Sanity of Hamlet."

I can imagine him holding that crowd with a fascinated interest, working upward through increasingly palpitating stages to a volcanic climax. And then in the midst of it I can fancy a tortoise shell cat prowling forth from the wings and as she crosses the stage stealing every eye and intelligence in that crowd away from the speaker, including the attention of Homer, who detects from the rustle that something is happening and who finds himself suddenly possessed with a demoniac desire to get away from the speech.

No audience can resist a cat, a dog, a bat, a bird or any simple diversion. The more commonplace the interruption the more splendidly the audience concentrates upon it.—Victor Murdock in Collier's Weekly.

It Made Good In the Nick of Time

By F. A. MITCHEL

Julian Stafford was an example of the ups and downs of life. Born with a silver spoon in his mouth, he never knew during his childhood and youth what it was to want for anything. Instead of having to go to work when he was a boy, like many other children, he was associating with companions of his own age, both boys and girls, whose parents were well to do, and the kind of cravat he wore or the cut of his coat was of infinitely more importance to him than the money required to pay for such articles. Indeed, he had only to order them. When the bills came in to his father they were paid, and Julian did not even know of the fact.

However, this happy period ended. About the time Julian came of age his father lost a good deal of money. Julian went to work and earned enough for his necessities, which were not great. But a better period was in store for him.

Money is like quicksilver. So long as quicksilver is incased in a tight receptacle, with the top screwed down, it won't get away from you. But the moment the volatile metal finds a place to break through, no matter how small, there is no holding on to it.

When we have plenty of money, when we are making money, its value seems negligible. But when it has once broken away from us it is like the quicksilver—it is mighty hard to pick it up again.

At twenty-five Julian Stafford was, to speak figuratively, in a bed of roses. He had inherited $10,000 from an aunt. For several years the country had been under the depressing influence of a commercial panic, and all sorts of property could be bought for a song. At the time Julian received his inheritance a change had begun to come over monetary affairs, and he was advised, instead of investing his money at a safe and simple interest, to buy something with it. It didn't make much difference what he bought. Everything would for some years to come be increasing in value, and he would be able to sell his property for more than he had given for it.

Securities seemed to Julian to be the simplest form for such speculation, and he bought $10,000 worth of railroad shares. The stock market soon boomed, and he sold out, making, as he considered it, 50 per cent profit in six months. That was at the rate of doubling his money in a year. At 5 per cent interest it would require twenty years to do that.

Julian sold out just before the wave of speculation broke, and after it broke what he had sold could be bought again for what he had paid for it before. This time, instead of confining himself to what securities his money would buy, he bought on a margin. Instead of buying $20,000 worth of securities he bought $100,000 worth. Again the market boomed. Every day for several days Julian was making twice as much as his aunt had left him.

At this time life to Stafford was filled with delight. In addition to making a fortune every day he was engaged to the dearest girl in the world. They had expected to live on a thousand a year in an apartment of four rooms, none of which was much bigger than a large closet. Julian figured up one night and found that he could sell out his stocks and have an income of $10,000, derived from gilt edge property. They could live in a stone front house.

One day when the market was jumping half a point or so on the ticker with every recorded sale Julian, who was standing over it and making a thousand dollars with every point, felt a tap on his shoulder. Turning, there he saw Erskine, a former schoolmate.

"Hello, Jim!"

"Hello, Julian! How are you making out?"

Julian very excitedly confided in his friend that he was getting rich so fast that he couldn't keep track of his funds.

"Let me have $500, won't you, Julian? I've got a chance to go into a deal that I think there's millions in. There's just one share on the ground floor left, and I can get it dirt cheap. I'll take you in for half of it."

Julian was making money so fast that he didn't want any more profits for himself. He was well disposed toward Erskine, and what was $500 to him, since he had made ten times that within an hour? He gave Jim an order on his broker for $500, and Jim received the amount before leaving the office.

That was a very exciting day for Julian—in fact, the most exciting day of his life. He made more money that one day than in all the time of his speculations. Just before the closing of the market there was a peculiar shakiness. It was the trembling of the wave before it breaks. The "bears," who were watching their opportunity, the next morning put out a report that one of the biggest banking concerns in Wall street was in trouble. Then commenced the tremble.

It was the old story with Julian. He saw his fortune melt away before him. Down it went like a stack of card houses. Just before the closing hour his broker closed out his account, leaving him in debt for something like $10,000.

This time when the market reached low tide it remained there for a long while. But this did not make any difference to Julian, for even if it had gone up again he had no money to buy with. At the beginning of the next month his broker sent him an account current showing his indebtedness and asked him to pay up. There were numerous credits and numerous charges. Julian didn't try to decipher it. He knew that his fortune had died as suddenly as it had been born, and he was too sick at heart to dissect the corpse.

Julian's girl turned out to be a trump—that is, she was a trump for Jim if not for herself. She had not shared her lover's wild enthusiasm while he was building an inverted pyramid of air, but now that he had gone under she did not desert him.

"It's lucky it came to you early in life, Julian," she said. "I think you are naturally visionary and that it was sure to come in time. Besides, even if you had for the present kept a fortune made in this way it would have taken wings later on. Now you can begin life on a more solid though a much slower basis."

Julian secured a position at $25 a week, and on this he married Rose Meriweather. She proved an excellent manager, though the hardest thing she had to manage was her husband. It is not to be expected that a man who has made money at the rate of $1,000 an hour and for the time being considered it as easy to produce as pumping water from a well will at once look out for small change. When Julian went home in the evening and reported that he had spent 30 cents for luncheon, 10 cents for car fare and 25 cents for two cigars, Rose figured that this totaled 65 cents, or about $200 a year. Other expenses in proportion would bring ruin.

After many backslidings Julian got himself down to hard pan and many an evening when dead tired permitted a trolley car to go by him while he walked the two miles between his business and his house. But a baby came, and everybody knows that a baby brings added expense, which increases and multiplies till the child has grown and left the parental abode. Notwithstanding Rose's management and that she got Julian pretty well trained as to expenditures, they had a hard time of it. Doctor's bills, which are hard to take into consideration in laying out funds, came in, and every cent went for ordinary essential expenditures.

But the hardest blow came when Mrs. Stafford, struggling against insurmountable obstacles, broke down. Julian was provider so far as he was able, and Rose was dispenser. Neither could supply the other's place. When under such circumstances the woman has to throw up the sponge the bottom drops out of the household.

The couple could not afford a servant, and when Mrs. Stafford was unable to be up to cook the meals her husband was obliged to handle the skillet, which he did unsuccessfully, spoiling many a meal. This was hard both on his wife and himself.

Julian was too poor to buy a newspaper, but during the noon hour, while eating a lunch brought from home, he looked over the paper in the office. During his wife's illness he was one day reading the financial news—from force of habit—when he saw it stated there had been a sudden rise in Jimdandy Automobile. The company had succeeded in purchasing valuable patents and for a year past had been earning large profits. Julian finished browsing over news that he had no reason to suppose concerned him and his luncheon at the same time and went back to work.

A few days later when Julian had prepared the breakfast and was taking some toast and tea up to his sick wife he stopped at the front door to answer the postman's whistle. He was handed a letter, which he carried on up with the breakfast. Having put the breakfast down beside his wife, he looked at the letter. On the left hand corner was printed, "Jimdandy Automobile Company, James C. Erskine Secretary." He opened the letter and read aloud:

> Dear Julian—Our venture after a long period of distress has at last made good. Under a reorganization our interest is 1,000 shares. As soon as the new certificates are issued I will send you your 500 shares. Since the recent advance the market price is 80. This makes your lot worth $40,000. The reason I haven't given you any information before is because there was no good news to report. Yours, with congratulations, JIM.

"What does it all mean?" asked Rose.

"I don't know. Some one has made a blunder."

Rose suggested that he go next door, where the inmates had a telephone, and call up Erskine. He did so, and Jim undertook to remind him of the check for $500 that Julian had given him when he was making money on the ticker at a thousand dollars an hour. But Julian had no remembrance of the incident and could not recall it. However, Erskine assured him that the money had been invested in what led up to the Jimdandy Auto company, indirectly through the holder of valuable patents, and that Julian was holder of 500 shares of stock worth $80 a share.

When Julian went back to his wife and assured her of their good fortune she jumped out of bed, and the pair cut a tango on the floor.

Jim made over three-quarters of his fortune to his wife, then proceeded to lose the remaining quarter in speculation.

But he never got his hands on the balance.

RELATIVES IN LAW.

A Little Advice That May Help to Make Things Pleasant.

If I were giving counsel to the husband and wife who would make each other happy and hold each other's love I would suggest that neither call the attention of the other to the disagreeable qualities of the family of either.

"My husband loves my people as if they were his own," a wife told me. "It makes me so happy!"

I doubt if he did love her people very dearly, but he overlooked those characteristics which a more selfish man would have resented. If it was what a schoolboy would call a "bluff" it was a gloriously unselfish one.

Most of us can stand the tempers and idiosyncrasies of our own when we alone have to bear them. It is when we see them through the eyes of a third person that they become unendurable. That is perhaps one reason why so few roofs are large enough to cover two families.

If each "in-law" exercised toward the members of the household into which he or she married the same pardoning love that is exercised toward one's own the aspersions cast upon the mother-in-law would die a natural death because they would have nothing on which to feed.—Virginia Terhune Van de Water in Mother's Magazine.

Carved by Newton.

In the Newton chapel of the church at Colsterworth, in Lincolnshire, England, where Sir Isaac Newton was born, is to be seen one of the most interesting relics of the greatest of philosophers. It consists of a sundial and was carved by Newton when he was a boy on a stone in the house in which he was born, his only tool being a penknife. There it remained for many years until removed to Colsterworth church. Unfortunately the organ has been built directly in front of this interesting relic, so that unless one knows of the stone's existence and its presence in the church it is overlooked.

Nelson's Message.

In a book called "National Humor" a serious footnote states that Nelson's celebrated message, "England expects each man to do his duty," was phrased by the famous admiral as "Nelson expects," etc., and that one of his officers suggested the change of the first word to "England." Nelson's greatness was evident in his immediate acceptance of the change. A smaller man would have felt insulted at the proposed elimination of his own name.

Fees.

"How much does that stylish doctor of yours charge?"

"Ten dollars a visit."

"Gee! How often has he called at your home this month?"

"Twenty times."

"Gosh! You owe him $200, then?"

"Nope. Only $10. He's made the other nineteen calls trying to collect it."

Drawn In.

Hanson—How did you come to marry the Widow Boncoeur instead of her daughter? I thought it was the daughter you were after. Janson—Well, so I was, to tell the truth, but when I asked Marie to marry me one day she said, "Ask mamma," and when I started to do it I stammered so with nervousness that mamma said "Yes" before I had the question out.—Paris Journal.

Friction and Velocity.

When one solid body glides over the surface of another the coefficient of friction diminishes as the velocity increases and nearly vanishes when the velocity attains a certain critical value. This diminution of friction is due to the air which partially separates the two bodies at low relative velocities and separates them completely at the critical and all higher velocities.

Plenty of Security.

"Do you feel you are able to support my daughter in the style to which she has been accustomed?" asked the skeptical millionaire.

"Yes, indeed, sir," replied the favored suitor. "Since our engagement was announced almost any of the banks are willing to discount my notes."

His Vision of Beauty.

Is anything more beautiful, asks a New York World correspondent, than a bend of the river disappearing between green forest banks when the little, noiseless, rippling wake of a muskrat as it widens behind his nose in the mirror still water is the only sign that anything can possibly move in a thousand years?

One Way.

"Now, Johnny," said the teacher, "suppose you wanted to build a $1,000 house and had only $700 what would you do?"

"I 'spose I'd have to marry a girl worth $300" answered the young financier.

Two Finds.

"I found a ten dollar bill this morning."

"That shows you are lucky. Have a gift for finding things?"

"My gift stuck by me too long. Next I found the owner."

It is good discretion not to take too much of any man at the first, because one cannot hold out that proportion.—Bacon.

GUARDING THE CHILDREN.

Widows With Offspring Should Be Sure to Make Their Wills.

Sometimes the failure to make a will involves more than a loss of time and money. You are a widow and die without a will, leaving children who are not yet of age. Now, you may not care who looks after your property, but you do have a lively interest in the person who looks after your children. If you had left a will you could have named therein the guardian for your children. The court must do so, and the guardian appointed by it may charge commissions, counsel fees and premiums payable out of your children's share of your estate.

Suppose you leave real estate. It can't be sold without an order of the court. That involves a long and expensive proceeding on the part of your administrator. If you leave minor children that still further complicates matters. A guardian must be appointed for them who must join in the application—at a price—and their shares must be set aside and held until they are of age—also at a price. "Infant's proceedings," as such actions are termed, are most technical and expensive, yet unless every contingency is provided for good title cannot be given to the real estate. Nor can clear title be given for at least two years after your death. If you had left a will you could have included therein a power of sale, and at any time when the interests of the estate demanded it the property could have been sold.—Samuel Scoville, Jr., in Good Housekeeping.

A Bit of Sicily.

"There is no Italian town more picturesque than the Sicilian capital, Palermo," writes a traveler. "Sailing ships of all rigs, their hulls painted all the colors of the rainbow, nose up against the quay, where mule carts, whose drivers are shouting at the top of their voices, wait to take away the merchandise. The narrow streets where the custom house officers examine the goods brought ashore is a place of terrific noise. When a driver, two clerks and two custom house officers are discussing the contents of a bale or a cask it seems as though murder must be committed within the next few seconds. But somebody signs something, the cart moves on, and everybody laughs."

Murdering Shakespeare.

"I never hesitate to cut and slash and change any play until it suits me," said Stuart Robson to his legal adviser on one occasion.

"I suppose you edit Shakespeare with a blue pencil?" replied the lawyer.

"You can just bet I do."

"Then, I imagine, you would plead guilty to an indictment for murdering the Bard of Avon?"

"No; I would not, but I would admit dissecting his corpse."

Investments.

A certain two men are possessed each of exactly $10,000.

One buys a modest house for $4,000, a modest business for $3,000 and salts the remainder of his money away against a rainy day.

The other puts his entire $10,000 into a motorcar and thereby acquires such credit that he can have a house worth $50,000 and becomes a partner in a business paying $100,000 a year.

Assuming that both men have a wife and some daughters, which of them lives to kick himself?

Big Chances Both Ways.

The famous physician and the eminent clergyman were deep in a discussion which threatened to become acrimonious.

"You see," said the minister sarcastically, "you medical men know so much about the uncertainties of this world that I should think you would not want to live."

"Oh, I don't know," responded the physician caustically. "You clergymen tell us so much about the uncertainties of the next world that we don't want to die."—Exchange.

Talking Machines.

As nearly as can be determined the original talking machine—the real precursor of the phonograph—was the so called "phonautograph," invented by Leon Scott in 1857. But the first real reproduction of sound was achieved by Thomas A. Edison in 1876. He may, with perfect justice, be called the "father of the talking machine."

Treasure of Treves.

Treves is probably the oldest city in Germany and contains more Roman antiquities than any other city in northern Europe, but its most famous possession is the "holy coat" preserved in the cathedral. According to tradition, this is the identical "seamless robe" worn by Jesus Christ and gambled for by the Roman soldiers at the foot of the cross.

It Sounded Big.

"She talks at different times of 'my maid,' 'my cook' and 'my laundress,'" said the woman with the mackinaw.

"Has she actually so many servants?"

"No," said the accompanying male person. "She means that her hired girl is a lightning change artist."—Detroit Saturday Night.

Loaves And Ladies

A Victory For the Wives

By CLARISSA MACKIE

Alonzo Dibble's store on the main street of Roseville and in the same room with the postoffice was the forum in which the male citizens of the village got together to discuss every new departure from the beaten track of the world's ongoing.

Alonzo Dibble, being pecuniarily interested in the sale of twenty-five cent packages of smoking tobacco and cigars at prices all the way up from one cent stogies to five cent perfectos, took care that the meetings should not want for a topic and that the debate should not end when it struck a rut.

While the men of Roseville had been discussing these problems the women had started the suffrage society. The men had not yet entered upon this topic and might not have done so had not Amos Gwynne squelched the war in Mexico by his unpatriotic remark. There had been no sales of stogies for some time, and no one had called for birch beer. The shopkeeper, fearing that the meeting would break up without any more purchases, placed the palm of his hand on the counter and flourished his other arm dramatically.

"I say," he shouted, "there's more honor for a woman to bake a perfect loaf of bread than it is to vote nine times for a president of the United States!"

There was an instant's silence among the men gathered around the glowing stove; then Hen Lariday broke the stillness.

"There ain't much honor for any one, man, woman or child, to vote nine times for president—not on the same day, no, sir!"

After the laughter had died away the storekeeper resumed his exhortation.

"It's all right to make fun of it, Hen, but you ain't got no wife, and your ma is one of the God fearin', old fashioned kind who don't want no votes but the vote of her family that she's the best mother and the best cook in the world. But what I do mean is this: Ever since the women of Roseville started this here Ladies' Suffrage society they've stopped being such good housekeepers. Look at the business in homemade baking that Mrs. Dell Smith has built up. Why, I'll bet I've sold more flour to Mrs. Smith than to any one else in town. See 'em come in here day after day and buy Mrs. Smith's bread and take it home to their families. I'll bet there's more men in this here store this minute who said to his wife at supper tonight, 'What good bread Mrs. Dell Smith makes!' When a man says that, well, his wife ain't got anything to be proud of!"

"You're right, Alonzo," agreed James Gray. "But what we going to do about it?"

Alonzo was distinctly cross eyed. Now, one of his orbs was fixed on James Gray and the other wandered over to the door where a woman's form stood motionless by a barrel of brooms.

"Yes, what we going to do about it?" hawhawed Hen Lariday.

"Can't do anything," said Alonzo slowly. "But I don't blame any man for getting tired of a woman who blats all day about running the gov'ment when she can't even bake a decent loaf of bread! Some day the women will wake up and find they've got the vote—and nothing else, by gosh!"

The door closed gently.

The woman by the barrel of brooms had slipped out.

"Who was that?" asked Hen Lariday.

"Susie Pinkham."

"Great heck! Do you suppose she heard what you said, Alonzo?"

"I hope so," said the storekeeper grimly.

"If she did," went on Hen impressively, "the news is running like wildfire through the hull village. Susie Pinkham's the worst gossip in Roseville."

"And the best is Hen Lariday!" jibed Alonzo.

James Gray walked slowly up the street toward home. He was turning in his mind all that Alonzo had said about bread and women, and he had reason to agree with the storekeeper on more than one point of his argument.

Mrs. James Gray was the president of the Ladies' Suffrage society, and she it was who was urging the fair members to affiliate themselves with the state organization. It was Mrs. Gray who had suggested to Dell Smith's wife that home baking would be a profitable enterprise, and from that moment the idea had taken possession of Roseville women.

Husbands found delicious homemade bread on the table, but Mrs. Smith had baked it; likewise crisp cookies and loaf cake and pies. The members of the society to a woman turned their weekly baking over to the industrious little woman who was not even a member of their club.

"Oh, I haven't got any time," Mrs Smith had good naturedly said in excuse. "I'm helping Dell pay off the mortgage. When that's done I'll think about it."

Meantime she baked and baked, and the women of the society met and debated and tried to better conditions in the village.

James Gray was thinking about these things. He did not marvel at Alonzo's outburst of wrath. Alonzo's wife was secretary of the society, and instead of keeping his books as she had heretofore she had pleaded too much other work in hand, so Alonzo had hired a bookkeeper.

The supper table was set when James Gray entered the house. His wife was perusing a pamphlet and smiled a greeting over the top of it, but she went back to her reading without making any remark.

The table looked very inviting. There were an immaculate cloth, the white and gold china, a platter of pink boiled ham from the store, a dish of store pickles, another dish of tinned baked beans, a glass dish of canned peaches from the store, some of Mrs. Smith's delicious graham bread and a plate of cake that was undeniably Mrs. Smith's production.

James washed his face and hands and brushed his hair; then he sat glumly down to supper. Mrs. Gray had put away the pamphlet and was sitting behind the teapot when he entered.

There were only two of them, for their daughter, Annibel, was married and lived across the way with her husband, Oscar Wren.

"Good bread!" muttered James darkly, as he helped himself to a second slice.

"Isn't it?" asked his wife eagerly. "Lizzie Smith can make the best bread in town."

"She can hold the championship so long as none of the other women compete with her," hinted James morosely.

Mrs. Gray regarded her husband with calm surprise.

"I suppose you were in the store when Alonzo expressed his opinion of the Ladies' Suffrage society?" she asked curiously.

"Susie Pinkham been here?" he countered.

"Why?"

"Oh, I recognize the signs. Please pass me some of Mrs. Smith's cake," he said pleasantly.

Mrs. Gray frowned and was silent during the remainder of the meal.

After supper James put on his coat and went to the lodge meeting. Mrs. James put on her hat and went to a special meeting of her society.

Three weeks later Alonzo Dibble entered his store one evening and found his plump little wife in possession of the bookkeeper's desk.

"Where's Ida Jones?" asked Alonzo.

"I sent her home—paid her off and discharged her," responded his wife, making an entry in the daybook and carefully blotting it. "I've got plenty of time to do this work."

"What? You give up that fool society?" demanded Alonzo.

"No. I can do both if you don't bother me by talking too much," she smiled at him.

"Oh, I ain't got any time to talk," he said hastily. "You know I've got my hands full looking after this store. You can't do more'n one thing at a time," he added as he moved away.

Mrs. Dibble looked at the three clerks nimbly waiting on customers. She glanced at the stableman standing by the barn door. She thought of herself in the bookkeeper's cage, and a little smile curled her lip.

"Alonzo certainly has plenty of help," she mused, dipping her pen in the ink.

For a number of weeks Alonzo Dibble was silent on the question of women's votes. He noticed that Mrs. Smith omitted her usual order for flour, and he told his clerks that she was probably buying from his competitor.

On the tables of the members of the suffrage society continued to appear delicious home baked bread, toothsome pies and cakes, and the town rang with the praises accorded Mrs. Dell Smith as a model wife and mother and gave credit to the fact that she was not a member of the society.

"A woman can't be a good wife and mother and 'tend to her baking and brewing and do men's voting too!" declared Alonzo Dibble to his usual audience.

From the back door leading to his house came the calm voice of Alonzo Dibble's wife. Behind her, twenty strong, were the members of the society.

"Fiddlesticks!" said Mrs. Dibble. "Just because a man can't attend to more than one thing at a time it's no indication that a woman may not be able to do two or three things well!"

"Prove it!" barked Alonzo. "Just look at all Mrs. Smith's bread and cake and pies we've been eating, all because our wives ain't got time to do it and run their blamed old society. Pooh!"

A ripple of feminine laughter came from the back door.

"You tell them, Mrs. Smith," urged Mrs. Gray's voice.

"Well," began Mrs. Dell Smith in her brisk manner, "I'll confess I haven't done any baking for any one outside my family for over three weeks. If you men folks have enjoyed your bread and cake and pies I guess it's all to the credit of your wives. I think they patronized my home cooking more to help me pay off the mortgage than anything else." Her voice broke, and she hid herself among her friends.

Mrs. Dibble finished the argument.

"So you see," she said, "the women of Roseville can attend to their housekeeping, do their sewing and bake their own bread and organize a suffrage society and vote when the time comes."

Alonzo Dibble was filling glasses with sweet cider.

"Let us drink to the success of the Ladies' Suffrage society," he said solemnly.

And so ended the discussion of loaves and ladies, it having been proved that the ladies were quite capable of looking out for the loaves.

HER BORROWED ROBE.

It Brought an Actress the Most Perilous Moment of Her Life.

"The only time I ever was a thief saved my life," said Rose Coghlan once. "My sister-in-law, Louisa Thornton, was playing in 'Colleen Bawn' in Scotland. I was Anne Chute, one of the bridesmaids, and I always dressed in Louisa's room with her.

"This particular night she was ill, and her understudy went on. Now, it happened that I had longed and longed to wear a certain costume of Louisa's. It wasn't one bit suitable for a girl of my age in a bridesmaid part, being made of heavy white corded silk with a long court train and all the fixings, but I adored it.

"I dressed up in it and went out to wait for the cue with the other girls. Just as we were ready to go on some one behind me said, 'Rose, your dress is on fire!'

"I think that is the most fearful word that can sound in a theater—'Fire!' My train had caught fire from one of the little gas footlights, unprotected then.

"The girls in their light dresses were trying to get away from me, and the nearest man, Hardress, was handcuffed. I crushed my train in my hands to smother the creeping flame and backed off down the steps under the stage. A man down there threw a heavy cloak over me, and I fainted. I was burned badly around my hands and arms and neck, but the heavy silk dress saved me."

The Tyrant In the Field.

There have been few commanders so tyrannous as Lopez, the dictator of Paraguay, when in the war of 1865-70 it fought single handed the neighboring countries of Argentina, Brazil and Uruguay. Lopez, says Mr. W. H. Koebel in his "Argentina," was wont to carry the theory of victory or death to an uncomfortable point. "Officers were executed for mere remarks whose tone fell beneath the standard of confidence that Lopez had set up for himself. One, for instance was shot for having announced in the course of his duty that the enemy was strongly intrenched! Another met his end on account of an unguarded speech to the effect that the Paraguayan army was accustomed to count the enemy's losses and forget its own."

Yawning.

Yawning is a peculiar act and one that has never yet been properly accounted for. It is not by any means a sign of fatigue only, although it is sometimes produced by overexertion. But an attack of yawning comes on much more quickly if one is intensely bored, and certainly a stuffy atmosphere tends to produce it. It is also noticeable that when one has gone considerably past one's mealtime the tendency to yawn frequently becomes irresistible. A very peculiar feature of this complaint is its infectiousness; one person can easily set half a dozen all yawning in turn. When present in a very marked extent it is supposed to be the outcome of anaemia, indigestion or some other complaint.

Real Sympathy.

An old farmer down the country giving instructions for his will directed a legacy of $25,000 to be given to his wife. Being informed that some distinction was usually made in case the widow married again, he doubled the sum, and when told that this was contrary to custom he said, with heartfelt sympathy for his possible successor, "Aye, but him that gets her'll deserve it."

A City of Corpses.

The city of Kum, in Persia, has long had a reputation as a city of corpses. There are said to be more illustrious dead buried in Kum than in any other Persian city except Meshad. One of the few women honored in the country of the shah has a magnificent shrine erected here—Fatima, sister of Imam Riza. Eleven hundred years ago she was laid to rest in Kum, and everybody who is anybody in Persia still desires sepulture beside her.—London Chronicle.

LETTERS FROM OVERSEAS

FROM DRIVER J. C. DRURY

Witley Camp, Surrey.

My Dear Mabel:—

I have just got back from London and Tonbridge and find your letter waiting me. I will now tell you my trip to London. I just got to London when the first naval battle report was given out and it caused an awful sensation as the first official news was not very good. There were large crowds outside the admiralty office waiting for news of relatives and heaps of naval officers and men were sore because they had been on their leave instead of on their boats. Then some of the survivors came into London dressed in old cloths of every description and full of stories of the battle and that we had won a decided victory. I wanted to go across the top of Tower bridge but you cannot go across now as all the important places are closed, on account of the war. But I met a fellow from the 2nd Battalion on the bridge, who had been wounded and was just out of the hospital. We went over Tower of London together and I am enclosing a few cards and a guide book which may be interesting. We had a dandy time. We practically followed the guide book. The Crown Jewels were exceptionally good. After that we vizited a place I did not expect to see and that was the House of Parliament. We went all over these with a splendid guide. He had been all over the world. We had a splendid time and it would not have been much use going over it alone as we would not have known what we were looking at. We first were shown the main archway which is 70 feet high and beautifully carved. it is only opened once a year when the King opens Parliament. This leads up into a large lobby and into the King's robing room, where he dresses when parliament opens. This room has got beautiful carving and paintings on the walls and mosiac floors; the throne is up with three steps leading to it. Then we went through several lobby's and at last enter where the House of Lords sit, at one end are the thrones for the King and Queen and the Prince of Wales. On each side of the room are the seats for the members and distinguished visitors, and in the centre are the tables for the mace and other things, also for the Lord Chief Chancellor.

After that we went into the House of Commons, where the seats are cushioned in black. At one end is the Speaker's chair and high up is the gallery for the press and public and a special cage at the back near the roof for the women. It is just like a cage, and as our guide remarked "the safest place for them." We had a fine trip and could never put all the things down on paper. We had pointed out all the historic spots where Sir Edward Grey stood and declared war on Germany. Also where all the big men sit.

Coming out of the House of Lords there stands a big hat-stand with a special hook for each Lord. We took off our caps and hung them on Lord Kitchener's hat peg for a moment. Just to think that Kitchener's hat will never hang there again.

After that we went to the Victoria League Club on Regent street for dinner. The other fellow went on to the theatre while I went over to Trafalgar Square, Strand and Piccadilly, from there I went to the Horse Guards and saw them change guards. From there I went to the United Service museum, and saw many interesting things including relics and guns captured from the Germans. They also have many models of ships there. They have a beautiful model about 12 feet long of the "Queen Mary," also a real torpedo and heaps of other things.

I got back to grandma's about six o'clock and found that Eric had been there and had just gone up to Charlies, so I followed up and had a chat with him, and in the evening Eric and I took Louie and Eliza to the Theatre.

On Sunday I went to Tonbridge for the day, left New Cross at 8.45 and got to Tonbridge about 10 o'clock and had to walk 5 miles to Golden Green. However I got there and had a fairly good time there. It rained all day so I stayed in.

Martha seemed fine, only a little lonely, there are only about a dozen houses in the place and she has been there six years. Still I'm glad I went there.

The next pass I get I want to go to Peterborough, and then we will get our final pass to say farewell and then go to France.

I am sending mother a silk post card of the artillery.

Best regards.

Your affectionate brother,
JACK

P. S.—Have just received your letter of May 22nd today.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Dear Sir:—

Will His Worship the Mayor, and the City Council, please look into the waters of the river at the eastern end of lower bridge? They will discover that the whole river has vast quantities of manure, and exceta from the Davies establishment at Corbyville. Not only is the river horribly and dangerously polluted as I have mentioned but other cast off materials are emptied in the river. The result is that no fish can live when this stuff is pouring down to empty in the bay, and destroys the fish. Many people use the water of the river for household purposes. Imagine how dangerous it is to the public health? Trolling in the river, the entire line was covered with a thick nausanious slime, from this source. Is it not directly contrary to law, to have our river made the receptacle of these abominable and dangerous materials? Immediate action should be taken, as the hot weather may induce horrible diseases from this source.

SYNOPSIS OF COAL MINING REGULATIONS

Coal mining rights of the Dominion, in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, the Yukon Territories, the North-West Territories and in a portion of the Province of British Columbia, may be leased for a term of twenty-one years at an annual rental of $1 an acre. Not more than 2,560 acres will be leased to one applicant.

Applications for a lease must be made by the applicant in person to the Agent or Sub-Agent of the district in which the rights applied for are situated.

In surveyed territory the land must be described by sections or legal sub-divisions of sections and in unsurveyed territory the tract applied for shall be staked by the applicant himself.

Each application must be accompanied by a fee of $5 which will be refunded if the rights applied for are not available, but not otherwise. A royalty shall be paid on the merchantable output of the mine at the rate of five cents per ton.

Old Time Toast Drinking.

There used to be an old superstition that it was bad luck to drink a toast with a person standing behind the drinker. The reason for the superstition is this:

Edward the Martyr by the contrivance of his stepmother, Elfrida, was stabbed in the back as he was drinking. It is said that from this affair arose the custom of having the man on either side of the toast drinker pledge him. According to William of Malmesbury, it was the usage when a person was about to drink a health to ask a neighbor at the board to pledge the toast. If the neighbor answered "Yes" he held up his knife or sword to guard the drinker as he quaffed, for while a man is drinking he is necessarily in an unguarded posture and exposed to a treacherous stroke.—New York Sun.

Berlin Warned Revolt Sure

Muller-Meiningen, Radical Leader, Tells Food Dictator of Distress Says Burearcracy Now is Bankrupt

LONDON, July 4.—A despatch to The Morning Post from Berne says:

"What is happening in Germany?" is the question placed at the head of numerous articles in the Swiss newspapers during the last few days, and the fact that the question is so frequently put shows that the feeling which prevails among the population of Germany is one of serious disquiet.

Speaking at a meeting of the Leipsic City Council on Wednesday last a Socialist Councillor said:

"The people are being bled so mercilessly they must not only be impoverished, but also ruined in health. Muller-Meiningen has threatened that the people will rise in force, and that will happen. There is an end to all patience."

According to The Gotha Zeitung, Muller-Meiningen is a well known leader of the Radical party in the Reichstag and has written to Von Baetocki the Food Dictator, a letter in which the following passages occur:

I am continually hearing cries of distress from the whole of Thuringia about the lack of sugar. The discontent increases daily to a most serious extent and only actions will help now. Fine words and visits by high officials are useless unless improvement is quickly made. Noisy gatherings will be heard of also outside the large towns, for the whole German people are of the opinion, and rightly so, that the limit of endurance has been reached. The bureaucracy is utterly bankrupt and the people already are rising against it and will finally do so with force."

NO CHURCH UNION TILL AFTER THE WAR

COUNTER ATTACKS BY GERMANS ARE REPULSED WITH EASE

Canadian Press Special.

LONDON, July 5.—A Reuter despatch from the western front says the Germans made a counter attack on the new British positions at Thiepval, after a heavy bombardment, but were easily repulsed. Prisoners are quoted as having stated that the German units are being rushed to the Somme front as far as Verdun to the east and Lens to the north. According to this despatch a German officer who surrendered 150 men in a body, said he thought they would be of more use alive in Germany after the war than dead.

OPEN FIELD FIGHTING FOR GERMAN SOLDIERS

Allies in The Western Zone are Rapidly Closing in on The Last of The Enemy's Defensive Works,—The World Now Understands The Apparent Apathy of British and French—Drive Germans From France and Belgium is Now The Watchword

LONDON, July 5—Special—"Only German soldiers in open field formations now stand between the French and the River Somme," said Major-General F. B. Maurice yesterday referring to the part of the river which flows northward to the east of the sector along which the French have made their greatest gains. "The last of the enemy's defensive works in that sector have been captured by our allies."

In giving the Associated Press a summary of the results attained by the allied offensive, western front, Major-Gen. Maurice, who is a director of military operations of the imperial general staff, continued: "Much undeserved obloquy has been heaped upon the British army by English, French, and American people because we apparently did nothing to assist the French in the desperate fighting on the Verdun front. But all this time we were doing the part requested by Gen. Joffre.

"According to this plan we conserved our troops, accumulated supplies and waited the word for the grand offensive in which we were to play our with the Russians and Italians as well as the French. Naturally, during these anxious weeks we could give out no exciting news, were not good copy. For certain tactiwere not got copy. For certain tactical and moral reasons, which need not be dilated on, it was necessary that the French should not lose the east bank of the Meuse, and General Joffre informed us that he could hold the positions which command that part of the river until the end of June, so we knew we were going to strike at the beginning of July.

'The blow planned by the allied general staffs included offensive by the Russian and Italians which, I do not need to tell you, already have begun. We are not disappointed with our own advance, which we expected to be slow and we are enormously pleased with the wonderful progress made, with comparativelyy light losses, in sweeping forward to the Somme.

FURTHER PROGRESS BY BRITISH GERMAN GUNS INTENSELY ACTIVE

Canadian Press Special.

LONDON July 5.—Heavy fighting continued throughout the night in the neighborhood of the Ancre and of the Ancre and Somme, says an official stationed timed one P.M. which was given out to-day. "We made further progress at certain important points. The German artillery have been intensely active in certain sectors. In the neighborhood of Thiepval two determined attacks on our new trenches were beaten off with loss to the enemy. There were no important developments on the rest of our front.

MY FRIENDS I SURRENDER

Fine Incidents of Heroism From Teuton Positions — Foe Doctor Serves all

(Philip Gibb in Toronto Globe.)

WITH THE BRITISH ARMY IN FLANDERS, July 5—Special—To-day I went into the heart of the battlefields in and around Fricourt, where the British have made their most successful advance.

At La Boiselle the shelling was still intense, but our troops already had surrounded part of the position, and, after the concentration of the fire of their guns, had advanced and captured it.

A number of Germans were there in the dugout, the remnant of the battalion which suffered frightful things under the British gunfire. About 250 men had stayed in the dugouts, without food or water, while the shells made a fury above them and smashed up the ground. They had a German doctor, a giant with a great heart, who had put his first station in the second-line trench and had attended the wounded there until the British bombardment was so intensified that no man could live there. He took the wounded down to this dugout and stayed there expecting death, but then, he told me, at about 11 o'clock this morning the stream of shells ceased and after a sudden silence he heard the British and went up to the entrance of the dugout. To some soldiers who came in with fixed bayonets he said:

"My friends, I surrender.'"

Afterward he helped tend the British wounded under fire of his own guns, which were now turned upon this position.

Infantry Continuing Successes South of Sommes—Enemy Puts Foot in Village, But is Immediately Driven Out — Enemy Lose Men and Guns—Flaming Liquid Used by Germans, But Without Success

Canadian Press Special.

PARIS, July 5.—Afternoon statement—To the north of the River Somme we have resumed our offensive action and occupied last night a line of German trenches to the east of Curlu. South of the Somme our infantry, continuing its successes in the direction of the river, took possession of Sermont Farm on the left bank, opposite Clery.

All the region to the south lying between this farm and Hill 63 on the road between Flaucourt and Barleux is in our possession. After intense bombardment the enemy last night attacked Belloy en Santerre and were able to occupy for an instant the eastern part of this village, but a counter-attack by our troops brought the entire village back into our possession.

The Germans are still holding their positions in part of the village of Estrees, where fighting has been very spirited. Every counter attack against our positions have been broken by our fire.

The total number of able-bodied prisoners taken by us to the present time exceeds 9,000, but the exact number cannot yet be known. In this connection it may be said our army corps operating south of the Somme estimates its captures at sixty pieces of artillery. On the left bank of the river Meuse yesterday evening an attack of the enemy upon the redoubt of Avocourt was completely repulsed by the fire of our machine guns.

Between the region of Avocourt and Hill 304 the Germans have delivered a strong attack. In spite of the use in great quantities of flaming liquids by the enemy, this attack resulted in failure and cost our assailant heavy losses.

On the right bank of the River Meuse the bombardment is continuing with great violence in the region of Thiaumont Works and in Chenois sector.

BAY OF QUINTE CONFERENCE IN SESSION AT ALBERT COLLEGE

Summer School is Now in Full Swing—Ninety-Nine Delegates Have Registered—Weighty Subjects Taken up and Thoroughly Discussed—The Proceedings, as Chronicled by Official Reporter

TUESDAY'S SESSION

The Summer School at Albert College is now in full swing, 99 delegates having registered. A telegram expressing heartfelt rejoicing at his recovery from recent serious illness was sent to Dr F. C. Stephenson, Toronto.

At 9 o'clock all assembled in the Chapel to study, under Dr McLaughlin, the "Life of St Paul." Reading from the Acts of the Apostles, and portions of Paul's Epistles, the Dr pointed out how Paul entreated the early Christians to "desire earnestly the best gifts" (R.V.). The soldiers of the battlefield have subjected themselves to discipline. Why should we not in our Christian life? It means work, giving up some frivolities and bending our energies for the accomplishment of the task. It means seeking the things that are above. Our Ideal is always a prophecy.

The Dr then brought before us, by vivid word-picture, the trip overseas from Asia to Europe of Paul, Silvanus, Timothy and Luke. From Philippi the four dust-stained missionaries travel the wonderful Roman road westward where hills are levelled, valleys filled in, where marble pavements are contrasted with bubbling springs of water, and where mountains on one side and the sea on the other greet the weary travellers' eyes. They arrive at Thessalonica, a terraced city of 300,000, now known as Salonica, so much in the public eye during the war. The power of Roman citizenship was exemplified in the protection it often afforded Paul among the motley throngs of those cities. The first friends of Paul in those cities were often Jews, and frequently they became his first enemies as their conception of the Messiah was so different from that preached by Paul. Paul and his companions go on west to Berea, then south to Old Athens, the centre of Greek culture, and to Corinth, the emporium of Greek commerce. Here he became greatly discouraged, but still proclaimed the pure Gospel. Writing to the Thessalonians from Corinth, he declares that, being bereaved of them for a short time, he still carries them in his heart, and is comforted by the thought that he had not preached unto them a false gospel of ease, but had told them beforehand that suffering must be endured. Just as to-day the call of the King to the army is a call to sacrifice, so the call of Christ is a call to sacrifice.

Rev. F. H. Langford, B.A., gave his initial address on Religious Education as related to League and Sunday School work. He asked for definitions of "Education." Some defined it as "directive growth," "making what is what it ought to be," "drawing forth of the powers," "Mark Hopkins on one end of a log with a pulpit at the other." Religious Education is a programme of life development according to God's plan, and a School is a Teacher with one or more pupils. A Sunday School that is not producing Christ-like character is failing, even though it knows about Isaiah and Paul. The three elements of the Sunday School are worship, instruction and expression. In worship we realize that God is present. The child should be taught that God is present during its play hours. We should study to produce the spirit of worship in the Sunday School. Instruction is generally regarded as being essential to the Sunday School. Expression takes two forms. Reproducing the lesson taught in life service. The five stages of life were then commented on—how the early period means loving trust and obedience, and that this spells opportunity for parent and teacher, as the child can be taught God watches over it with joy as it does its best. Then follows the period of intense activity, when habits are formed. Then from 13 to 16 years of age many life choices are made, followed by period of life work choices, then by more efficiency.

The Mission Study Classes met under their respective leaders, studying the "Uplift of China," under Rev. R. A. Whattam; "The Moslem World," under Rev. W. H. Clark. Rev. S. A. Kemp taught of "Sunrise in the Sunrise Kingdom"; Rev. S. T. Tucker, B.A., "The Church in the Open Country," and Mrs (Rev.) M. E. Wilson "The Story of the Years."

In the Teachers' Training Course, Miss Stella Hetherington had "The Teacher," Rev. P. H. Neville "The Pupil," Rev. W. P. Rogers, B.A.; "The School."

AIR RAID ON BULGAR CAPITAL

French Aviator Covers Distance Between Saloniki and Sofia in Record Time

SALONIKI, July 5.—(Special.) — Another brilliant air raid has been made by a French aeroplane, which bombed Sofia for the second time since the allies came to Macedonia. The pilot was a Frenchman, who is perhaps better known at Hendon than even in his own country. He started at 4.30 a.m., and did the return flight of over 300 miles in five hours and twenty-five minutes. He took two and a half hours to reach Sofia from Saloniki. From a height of just over 6,000 feet ten bombs were dropped on the military establishments of the Bulgarian capital. It is evident that great alarm was caused by the reports of the bombs, for the two airmen could see a whole line of trains stop dead. Anti-aircraft batteries in the town shelled the raiding aeroplane without hitting it, and on its return journey the batteries on the hills north of Demirhissar evidently had been warned to look out for it, for a violent fire was opened as soon as the Frenchman was within range.

There has been the usual daily bombardment on the Vardar front. The waste of shells by the German batteries there is remarkable. A few nights ago they fired 2,000 rounds and wounded one man.

Russians Are Moving Forward

Austrian Desperate Resistance Unable to Check Gen. Brusiloff's Advance

LONDON, July 5.—Special—According to special despatches from Petrograd the steady advance of Gen. Brusiloff's left wing, despite the desperate resistance of the Austro-Germans, indicates that in a few days his front will assume the form of a regular arc centred on Lemberg.

The semi-permanent fortifications of the Austro-Germans, these despatches say, have now all been captured and destroyed on this front where they planned to hold the Russians while the Italian campaign progressed. It is not believed that any formidable second or third-line fortifications have been constructed behind this front.

MILITARY MATTERS AT BARRIEFIELD HEIGHTS

Another battalion has left Barriefield on the second lap of its military march to the front. The 136th Battalion, commanded by Lt.-Col. Smart, came to this camp from its headquarters at Port Hope, and from the day the unit reached camp it made friends, hosts of friends. Colonel Smart has had experience at the front. He went out with the first Canadian contingent. He is a man of quiet and unassuming manner, and always wears a broad and pleasant smile. The adjutant of the battalion is Captain Spriggs, a Kingston boy, who went to the front with the 21st Battalion. The 136th had by far the best bugle band in camp, and their sweet music will be much missed. To-day the 136th receive their colors from Lt.Col. James Hughes, brother of the Minister of Militia, and on Sunday the battalion will entrain for Valcartier. Colonel Hemming said goodbye to the 136th and with Lt.-Col. Brown, G.S.O., wished the boys good luck and, a safe return. The battalion gave three hearty cheers for the popular camp commandant.

COMPLETED STUDIES.

The following in 155th Battalion, C.E.F., have completed six days in B.F. & P.T., and may discontinue the classes at headquarters at once:

Lieutenants—H. L. Wallace, R. S. Harder, C. F. Hamly, H. L. Ingram, W. J. Wilson, W. B. Turnbull, E. T. S. Kelly, G. S. Taylor, R. A. Graham, H. M. Pattison.

Sergeants — C. Ferguson, B. H. Richardson, R. Burnside, J. S. Adams.

Corporals—S. A. Clarke, F. Weatherhead, J. Newman, R. Christie, N. P. Mansfield, H. B. Harris, W. J. McCoy, L. B. Bassett, H. Hoddinott, B. Ricketts, W. A. Glover, T. Harding, R. A. Price, C. Rupert, J Wright.

NOTES.

Monday, July 3rd, was observed as a half holiday in camp, the parade terminating at 11 a.m.

Lieut. Young, of the 155th Battalion, of Belleville, will take charge of the instructional work of the Machine Gun School.

Lieutenant D. L. Bennett of the 136th Battalion got leave of absence on Thursday, and went to Belleville. Friday, the lieutenant returned to Kingston, and brought back with him a charming wife. Mr and Mrs Bennett are staying for a few days at the Randolph Hotel.

The 155th band under Bandmaster Hinchey played at the headquarters mess on Friday evening. This band is making rapid strides. Excepting of course the pipes of the 151th, there are few bands that are able to play both march and orchestral music as well.

Lieut.-Col. M. K. Adams, commanding the 155th Battalion, has a son now at the front, who, according to recent reports, is doing splendid work with the Royal Montreal Regiment. Linet. E A. Adams went overseas as an officer of the 39th Belleville Battalion under Lieut.-Col. J. A. V. Preston, and for some time was on the permanent instructional staff of that battalion. After a year of strenuous efforts, permission was at last obtained for him to proceed overseas.

PRESENTED WITH MEDAL.

The Protestant service on Sunday was held in front of headquarters and was conducted by Captain Campbell of the 146th Battalion. At the conclusion of the service, Colonel Hemming presented Pte. Banfield of the 155th battalion with the bronze medal of the Royal Humane Society for bravery in rescuing a man from drowning at Trenton last winter. Private Banfield broke through the ice to get his man, and the act brought him the medal of the R.H.S.

NOTES.

Another vacant spot has been left in the big camp by the 146th Battalion leaving for Valcartier. There are 952 less in the camp's population to-day than it could boast of yesterday. The 146th will be missed, but it has gone out on the mission for which it was organized, and will play its part in the great struggle now going on in France and Flanders.

The programme promised for the city park by the bands of the 109th, 154th and 155th Battalions, had to be postponed Monday night owing to the state of the weather. All bands are prepared to give the city one of the best concerts it has ever had, and as soon as there are signs of settled weather the programme will be carried out.

OBSEQUIES

ROSANNA SILLS

The obsequies of the late Rosanna Sills were conducted by Rev. Huffman of Plainfield at Zion Methodist Church on Monday, June 12th. She had been visiting her granddaughter, Mrs. (Rev.) Hargreaves nee Luella Black, at Lanigan, Sask., during the winter, and appeared in as good health as usual, until a few minutes before she had passed to her eternal home. They were calling on a neighbor and while there, the aged lady sank in her chair, and death came suddenly as a result of a paralytic stroke. Medical attendance was immediately summoned, but it was of no avail. She passed away very peacefully.

She was 82 years of age, but her life had been useful and active to the very last, so the end came as a very great shock to the sorrowing loved ones. She had been an active member of the Methodist church for over fifty years, and the remembrance of her life will be a living testimony of His keeping power and the joy of the Christian life. Her bright, cheery face will be missed by all who knew her. She was married in 1854, to Nelson Sills, but her husband preceded her to the grave about twenty years ago, after which she made her home with her youngest son, Everett. She proved a faithful helpmate, a devoted mother and true friend, ever ready and willing to sacrifice herself for others. She leaves to mourn her loss, two sons, Wilman and Everett, of Thurlow, and one daughter, Mrs. C. F. Chisholm of Wallbridge, seven grandchildren and two great grandchildren.

The remains were accompanied by her grandson, Mr. Sam Chisholm of Winnipeg, and Mrs. Hargreaves. Interment took place in the Zion cemetery, Thurlow. The beautiful floral tributes and the very large attendance at the funeral showed the esteem in which the deceased was held. The sympathy of the community is extended to the bereaved in their great loss.—Communicated.

GERMAN G. HORTON

One of the largest funerals ever seen in Thurlow Township was that of the late Mr. German G. Horton, which took place yesterday afternoon. Relatives and friends of deceased turned out in large numbers to pay the last tribute of respect to the departed. After a brief service at the house the remains were taken to the Methodist Church at Plainfield, where an impressive service was conducted by Rev. Mr. Huffman. The funeral was under the auspices of the A.O.U.W. Society, of which deceased was a member, and many members of the society attended. The bearers were six members of the Society. At Plainfield cemetery the interment took place. That deceased had many friends was evidenced by the large number of floral tributes sent to the home. Rev. Mr. Horton of Belleville, a relative of deceased, was in attendance at the obsequies.

Farmers Are in County Concourse

A convention entitled a United Farmers' Convention, was held in Belleville to-day in the Council Chamber of the City Building. There was a fair representation of the yeomen of the immediate vicinity present.

The first session was held at 10 o'clock, and Mayor Ketcheson was present and extended in a few felicious remarks a hearty welcome to all present. His Worship spoke of the necessity there was of cooperation at the present time of all interests.

The Mayor was cordially thanked for his words of greeting.

The object of the convention is for the purpose of discussing matter of vital importance to farmers, and more especially of getting farmers to cooperate in what is termed the Farmers' Cooperation Associations. Speakers of long experience, who have made a study of this subject, were present, and gave their ideas, as to the necessity of farmers cooperating for their mutual benefit. MELVILLE.

July4.—Weather conditions were ideal on Friday when the Orangemen held their annual picnic in a grove near Allisonville, the proceeds of which, this year, will go to augment the building fund of Allisonville's new Orange Hall, now in course of construction. A programme, with Mr. E. M. Young, of Picton, in the chair, was one of the many pleasing features of the day's proceedings. Among the speakers were Rev. Archer, Wellington, who spoke on "Allegiance," Rev. Squier, Burr's, whose subject was "Liberty" the keynote of the Orange Order; and Nelson Parliament, M. P. P., who, speaking on "Fraternity," referred to the fraternal relations of Canada's various provinces, the fraternal union of the British Empire, the fraternal alliance of the allies and finally the brotherhood of man and Fatherhood of God. Mr. Wellington Boulter and Mr. Horsey were also heard with appreciation. A returned disabled hero, in the person of Flight Lieut. Garnet Hughes, Picton, then stepped forward, with soldierly bearing, to address the vast audience, and the repeated cheers of the crowd. Lt. Hughes, a young man of unassuming manners and pleasing personality, held the breathless attention of the crowd as he clearly and impressingly explained the methods of aeroplane service in the present war. Mr. A. E. Cadmany a heart, when he claimed there speaker. Proudly claiming this part of the county as his birthplace, he gratified his old friends and neighbors and touched a responsive chord in many a heart, when he claimed these were no friends like the early friends and no home like the home of early days. He also paid a tribute of praise to the men of the soil who had so nobly responded to the call of King and Country, but regretted the unmanning of the farms at a time when an increased production is so much needed. The speeches were interspersed by music from the Ameliasburg band and singing by children of the Picton Orphanage, who were given the treat of a motor ride from Picton through the kindness of the Ford people, Johnston and Vanderwater. The program was followed by sports in which the younger people participated.

Mrs. Gilbert French and son Malcolm, Belleville, motored to Melville on Tuesday last and spent the week-end with friends.

Miss Elva Locklin, B.A., left on Monday for Toronto to spend some weeks studying art.

Mr. George Weeks is spending a few weeks in Manilla, the guest of Rev. E. Harston.

Mrs. Mary Johnson and Mrs. Morris Huff, Mount Pleasant, spent a few days last week in Melville.

Mrs. Robert Eaton and Mrs. E. W. Carley spent last week with friends in Picton.

Mr. and Mrs. James Morton were at home to a few friends on Wednesday. Among the guests were Mrs. Wellington Huycke and two children, Alberta.

THIS IS THE 677TH DAY THE BRITISH EMPIRE HAS BEEN AT WAR WITH GERMANY.

BRITAIN'S FINANCIAL AFTERMATH.

With extended chest and a voice of pride, Wall Street intimates that by the conclusion of the war the Entente Powers will have exhausted their vast wealth—their national treasuries will be depleted, and their populace in a state of abject misery.

We are also told that the United States will be the sole centre of affluency, to which the impoverished European nations will be compelled to resort for financial supplies, and incidentally to further enrich the American bankers by a high rate of interest.

To be sure, the extensive orders received by American munition and other industries have been a heavy drain upon the Allied resources—and they have been the means of placing well-nigh defunct American institutions upon their feet, but when Wall Street becomes enthrilled with the feeling that Britain and her Allies will be compelled to feed at her moneyed and industrial trough for an unlimited period following the conclusion of the present conflict, she is destined to bitter disappointment.

According to a thoroughly posted correspondent, Great Britain alone, to say nothing of her Allies, is now better equipped industrially than she has even been; her population, despite war-losses, is increasing; her accumulated capital has not been seriously diminished; her foreign investments are still enormous; her loans to her Allies will all bring in high interest for years to come; her people have wakened up to trade opportunities as perhaps never before in their history, and her plans for securing Germany's lost trade are well advanced.

With such an outlook as this there is naturally no pessimism whatever in the Old Country. Indeed, all the pessimism concerning Great Britain seems to have established itself in New York.

Capital will, of course, be scarce after the war and Britain will have heavy taxation to face; but her borrowings have been from her own people and increased production, due to changed conditions, will soon create new capital for investment overseas.

If such conditions are likely to prevail in Britain, what will they be in Canada? Better still, we should think. Canada will have new markets open to her when the war ends. She will have Russia and France ready and willing to buy her products; she will enter into new trade agreements with other parts of the British Empire. Great Britain will buy from her what hitherto she bought from Germany. Metals, wheat, foodstuffs and lumber and all the other resources that form Canada's wealth will find a ready market. The benefit to this Dominion will be obvious.

Prosperity may not arrive with a rush after the war. There will doubtless be a transition period while conditions adjust themselves. But if we prepare for this period we shall be able to meet it successfully and thereafter our reward will come.

Toronto World: There are too many young men asking Cain's question these days—Am I my brother's keeper? And too many of them answering that these things in France and Belgium are none of their business. In the face of the fierce struggle now proceeding it seems less than we might expect in any British community, that such apathy or indifference should exist. As the news comes in during this month, and as the long roll of honor grows longer, and the homes that have done their best for their country and their country's traditions and ideals, and have now become shrines for the memory of those who gave life and youth and all that these promised, for the sake of those who remained behind, increase in number, other homes yet untouched by grief or alarm, or even by interest, might surely awake to the great sacrifices that are being made that they may rest in peace and safety.

Montreal Gazette: The commission named to enquire into the cause and circumstances of the Sinn Fein outbreak has laid the chief blame on the shoulders of Mr Augustine Birrell, the chief secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland. The lord lieutenant, Lord Wimborne, who was head of the executive government at Dublin, is relieved from responsibility, first, because his occupancy of the office began only a short time before the outbreak, and, second, because under recent conditions the lord lieutenant was little more than a figurehead, carrying out the policy of the secretary. The decision will be no cause for surprise. Mr Birrell was not the sort of man to be entrusted with the office he held. His ability was unquestioned, but it was not of the kind required for the duties he assumed.

The Government of Quebec has decided to bring into force on November 1 next the revised Municipal Code of Quebec. The revision commission, whose work was only slightly changed by the Legislature, sought in dealing with the law that governs general municipal proceedings to simplify and shorten its provisions. In this they went contrary to the practice of legislatures generally in this country, whose fashion it is to multiply laws without judgment and to act as if the worth of a statute was to be estimated by its bulk. If the new Quebec Municipal Code is found to work well, and the promise is that it will, those who think that wisdom is often shown in the brevity of a statute will have a vindication.

The cabled report that the question of the appointment of a permanent High Commissioner in London is likely to be settled when Sir George Perley, the Acting High Commissioner, visits the Capital shortly, has created some interest at Ottawa. It is believed in official circles, however, that unless Sir George is willing to accept the position as a permanency, an appointment is not likely to be made until after the war is over.

Current Comment

It seems odd to read in the Tory partisan press that the liquor interests and the Liberals are fighting together in the North Perth by-election. Everybody knows what the liquor interests can expect from Mr N. W. Rowell.—Ottawa Free Press. And everybody knows to what use he attempted to put the temperance interests in the last Provincial election.

Some papers in the States say they simply couldn't get accustomed to calling T.R. "General." We in Canada can tell them how quickly we made the switch from "Col. Sam" to "Gen. Sam," and then to "Gen. Sir Sam."—Ottawa Free Press.

The other day the Berlin official statement referred to the enemy operations on the British and northern French fronts as "important." The war lords evidently knew that something was coming, but they got more than they expected. The Germans have not yet heard the last of Britain's "contemptible little army."

The Canadians did not take any part in the earliest stages of the big drive commenced on Saturday, but our battalions may be sent forward at any time. We may have to pay a heavy price, but we know that our boys will accomplish all that mortal man may in the fiery trial to come.

Here in Canada, where men have made the supreme sacrifice and not counted the cost, where faith in the ultimate triumph of British arms never weakened, this Allied advance, with its note of calm confidence and its stiring tale of success, may be recalled in the coming years as a turning point in the European crisis.—Toronto Globe.

If Carranza could only see the New York Sunday papers and get some idea of the tremendous size and enthusiasm of the crowds who cheered the troopers on their way to Mexico he would probably conclude not to interrupt the policy of "watchful waiting."—Mail and Empire.

"Kitchener's Army" has gone into action gloriously; and if the keen eyes set in the grim, iron face, could look up through the grey waters that wash the Orkneys, there would be quiet satisfaction in the eyes and a smile of content on the iron face. The long days of steady preparation have been justified. The young lads from the counter, the machine and the farm have hardened into soldiers, who have broken the lines of Prussia and stormed the impregnable trenches of trained militarism.—Montreal Star.

The Poets' Corner

TO MY CHUM.

A Soldier's Verse Letter.

How are things going with you, Old Chum,
Since the day when we last met
I should very much like a hand-shake
And a chat o'er a cigarette.
But as that is quite out of the question,
These Verses to you I send
To show that I've not forgotten one
I'm proud to call—"My Best Friend."

I am well, and as happy as ever,
Though girls, I'll admit, are rare,
So flirting is "off," and its best so,
As we haven't much time to spare.
For if we've to carry out orders,
And train well to do our "bit,"
We must "stick it," without any "slacking"
For the Fight's to the man who is "fit."

So buck up, old Sport, and drop me a line,
About things that were and are;
For the Postman seems to link up the past,
Though the distance between us is far.
Remember me to all my old friends,
And the "Flappers," too, by the way;
And just a word to my working pals,
From a Chum, in Camp, "O.K."

PERSONALS.

Ontario Women.

Chatham, Ont.—"Some time ago I had a general breakdown. It terminated in quite a bad case. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription was recommended to me by a friend who used it and received much benefit. I began taking it and in six months I was completely cured of my ailment and have never had any return of same. I can recommend this medicine as being good, if one will give it a fair trial."—MRS. JOHN ACKERT, 67 Edgar St., Chatham, Ont.

One or two for stomach corrective, three or four for cathartic.

CUTTING ENGLISH FORESTS.

Canadians Now at Work on Richly Wooded Crown Lands.

The timber problem supplies a very interesting sidelight on the war, says an English writer in The Toronto Star Weekly. It is being dealt with speedily and efficiently, and very shortly the expert Canadian lumbermen who are over here engaged in the scientific method of thinning out certain of our most famous woodlands and hewing and shaping the timber for immediate use will be working at full pressure. To get to work in earnest they are only awaiting the arrival of their milling machinery.

At present they are marking down and surveying certain tracts of forest land, "blazing" the trees—mainly the soft wood trees of pine and fir—and so arranging their scheme of attack that the beauties of our rural scenes shall not be unnecessarily marred.

In the beautiful forest of ———, certain parts of which have been earmarked for slaughter, a newspaper representative met a little party of pioneers surveying. They were brown, lithe woodsmen—half-soldier, half trapper, and wholly romantic. They were diagnosing the cases of certain tall, feathery-topped pines very much as a doctor deals with his patient, and jotting down their calculations in a charted casebook. Already behind them could be heard the battle-music of saw and axe, broken into now and again by the sudden scream of the steam-driven "circular." Sundry gaps appeared now and again in the dark line of foliage—each gap meant the fall of a giant, and no giant has ever been dismembered so speedily as he. Half an hour ago a king of the glade, he was now a neat pile of railway sleepers ready for the track.

"If we had all our tackle here," said one of the pioneers, "I guess we'd be able to turn you out a complete box of matches from the waste product of that tree—and do it while you wait!"

This keen-eyed young man seemed to know everything there is to know about the trees and the forests of the inhabited globe, and how to make the best use of them. "You in Great Britain have over two and a half million acres of forest," he said, "against Prussia's twenty-four million. And as a wartime asset, trees and their product are so much fine gold—properly handled—as the Germans and the French handle them.

"The German system of forestry is governed by strict military rule and carried out on an absolutely scientific basis.

"In France the work is even more advanced. There the term of maturity for cutting the forests is determined by a committee of skilled officers and divided up into so many years, with each series of years representing so many blocks of forest to be felled. The annual cutting is so arranged as to cover a certain extent of ground, so that when one block is felled another reaches maturity. In Germany every tract is carefully surveyed, and great care always taken that in the high forest there is a good stock of self-sown trees ready before the old crop is removed."

Served in French Army.

Captain Aug. Bibet, who has been serving in the French army since the beginning of the war, reached Toronto recently to spend perhaps a month of the period he is invalided on account of the wounds he received in action. He was twice in the casualty list. In one case a bullet passed through his chest, but though the injury was for the time disabling and very painful, it did not touch a vital point. His other wounds were in the legs. Before he was completely recovered from the effects of the first injury, which he received in the Vosges, he left the hospital to take part in the fierce fighting in Champagne. He served for a time as an officer in the 44th French Infantry, and then in the 23rd. He had the great distinction of receiving two greatly coveted decorations, that of the Legion of Honor and that of the War Cross with the Palm. These were sent to him by General Joffre when he was in the hospital at Lons le sauniers.

Captain Bibet has many friends in Toronto, where he lived for twelve years before the outbreak of the war, being for the last two years of that period a member of the university staff. He speaks in the warmest terms of the devoted spirit of the French people, of the resolution of the men in the fighting lines, and of the natural certainty of victory, everybody being ready to make whatever sacrifices are required for the defence of their country. To his friend, Mr. Rochereau de la Sabliere, he expressed his regret to find that there are still in Toronto able-bodied Frenchmen of military age who have not answered their country's call.

A Message From the Sea.

A message from a Canadian troopship was picked up the other day by a coast guard, near the head of Tealasay Bay, Lewis. The message consisted of a bottle containing the menu card used on 14th June last on a liner that was bringing troops from Canada. On the back of the card is written: "This bottle was thrown overboard 1300 miles from Montreal, Canada, on the 14th of June, 1915. If found, please drop me a line addressed to Trooper F. Gaunt, 2nd Divisional Cavalry, Canadian Expeditionary Force, Post Office, London. If you do not receive an answer, please write Trooper F. Gaunt, Petrolia, Ont., Canada."

Shows Fine Spirit.

Private Lord of Brockville, discharged and pensioned as a result of wounds received in the battle of St. Julien, tried to re-enlist in Kingston in the artillery, but had to be turned down. He was willing to give up his pension to get into the fight again.

A GREAT DAIRYMAN.

Late Senator Derbyshire was a Builder of the Cheese Industry.

Senator Daniel Derbyshire, who died in Brockville a few days ago following an illness of ten days of paralysis, was one of the most interesting figures in the agricultural world of Ontario.

Born in the heart of one of the great dairying districts of Ontario, at Plum Hollow, Leeds County, December 11, 1846, Mr. Derbyshire was connected during the greater part of his life with the industry which he saw rise to immense proportions. So intimately and to such an extent was he associated with the dairying industry that he became known as the "Eastern Ontario Cheese King," being for twenty-five years President of the Eastern Ontario Dairymen's Association.

What the late Speaker Ballantyne was to the dairy industry of Western Ontario, "Dan" Derbyshire was to the dairy industry of Eastern Ontario. For about a quarter of a century the latter was President of the Eastern Ontario Dairymen's Association; he might almost be said to have been the association during that period. In physical stature, in personality, in enthusiasm, he was the dominating figure of all the annual conventions held during the period of his Presidency. Even after laying down the office of President he was a regular attendant at the annual convention, and always presided at one session at least. His work was not confined to the more or less spectacular duties of convention week. He went up and down the concession lines and urged the formation of syndicates for the building of factories, and largely as a result two-thirds of all the cheese for which Ontario is famous is made in the territory within the limits of his activities. Mr. Derbyshire was also chiefly instrumental in inducing the Eastern Association to take up factory instruction work, and, when the Department of Agriculture assumed the task later on, he loyally aided in making the new departure a success. His activities were not confined, either, to the purely factory end of the cheese industry. Everywhere he preached better cows, and corn as the basis of feeding the cows. In short, to Dan Derbyshire more than to any other one man Ontario is indebted for the pre-eminence she has long enjoyed in cheese-making.

He entered the business as a manufacturer in 1874 at Athens. He came to Brockville in 1879, and two years later became local representative of A. A. Ayer & Company. He served as Councillor and was Mayor of Brockville in 1889 and 1890. He was a big man in more ways than one, standing six feet four inches in his stocking feet. After unsuccessfully contesting the riding of Brockville in the Liberal interests in 1891 and 1900, he was elected in 1904, and three years later resigned and was called to the Senate, Hon. G. P. Graham being returned in his stead by acclamation.

Senator Derbyshire was a ready wit, also an authority on agricultural matters in the House and Senate. He was Grand Master for Ontario of the Oddfellows in 1909-1910, and was also a prominent Mason of several degrees. He was a prominent member of the Baptist denomination.

To Advertise Canada.

The Dominion Government is going into the moving picture business. It is not doing so with the idea of making money, but with the object of interesting people, both in and out of Canada, in the natural resources of this Dominion.

Arrangements have, it is understood, been concluded and camera men have already started at work filming scenes from one end of Canada to the other. These will comprise views of the country's scenic beauties and pictures of various of its industrial systems. They will be carefully chosen so as to present the Dominion not only as a garden of nature, but also as a land of opportunity. They represent the application of the most modern and popular of pictorial devices to the work of promoting immigration and interesting capital in this country, and will be of use in a variety of ways and by many different branches of the Government service.

Mr. Francis Holley, Director of the Bureau of Commercial Economics, Washington, now recognized as one of the greatest modern educational institutions in the world, was in Ottawa recently in connection with this matter. It is understood Mr. Holley has interested the Canadian Government in the project, and that he has offered to exhibit any views that may be taken free to millions of citizens of the United States throughout the medium of the bureau. The offer is one which, it is likely, will be gratefully accepted by the Government.

The use of moving pictures with a view to promoting immigration and trade is in line with the Government's desire to use every means to prepare now for the development which it is expected will come after the war.

May Baulk Plan.

There is an expectation at Ottawa that the bill which has been introduced in Washington to restore the halibut trade from Prince Rupert and Canadian railways to Seattle and United States railways, will not become law. The bill proposes that the shipment of goods in bond through a foreign country (Canada), be recognized only when the shipments are bonded from one United States port to another. Canada has taken a third of the North Pacific halibut trade, because of the marketing facilities at Prince Rupert where the fish is shipped in bond for points in the central and eastern States. The effort of the legislation now proposed would be to turn this trade back to Seattle and the Government is watching the situation with considerable interest.

PRESTIGE FOR DUFF.

Justice in Fuse Enquiry Has Enhanced His Reputation.

Whatever reputations are made or unmade by the Royal Commission which probed the Kyte charges, the already high prestige of one man has been powerfully enhanced. Justice Lyman P. Duff has often been referred to as the "brains" of the Supreme Court of Canada.

When Justice Duff was asked by the Government to act with Sir William Meredith on the Fuse Commission he began well by stipulating that he would not accept one cent for his work. He regarded the investigation as a patriotic duty to his country, included in "his bit," in the successful prosecution of the war, and he threw the best of his time and ability into the task. His work and attitude during the six weeks of investigation were the subject of highest praise from every quarter concerned. His grasp of the minutest detail in the mountain of evidence submitted to the commission was declared by counsel engaged on the case to be nothing short of marvellous. His comments and observations—absolutely fair and fearless—mercilessly cut through technicalities and irrelevancies and went straight to the heart of the real questions at issue. His fine mastery of the case was strikingly shown in the course of Mr. Carvell's admittedly able address in summing up the evidence. Of all the great lawyers before the commission none had so thoroughly digested all phases of the subject matter as the industrious and clever member for Carleton. Yet time and again Mr. Carvell was checked and corrected in respect to some of the most intricate details by Justice Duff; this despite the fact that Mr. Carvell was closely following carefully prepared notes, while Justice Duff depended upon memory.

It was inevitable that two such strong characters as Justice Duff and Sir William Meredith should fail to see eye to eye in respect to various phases of the evidence. Long before the inquiry closed they found themselves in open conflict. Justice Duff seemed inclined to lay considerable stress upon the price paid the American Ammunition Company for graze fuses. Sir William Meredith on the other hand, appeared to take the view that the question of price was subsidiary, that urgency was what counted most. Neither commissioner went to much pains to conceal his opinion.

Justice Duff has had a somewhat meteoric career. At the age of 22 he was graduated from Toronto University, taught mathematics, and studied law on the side, and at 24 was admitted to the bar of Ontario. For a short time he practised law at Fergus, but finding the field too restricted he went to British Columbia and opened an office in Victoria. His success was immediate. In a few years he was recognized as one of the leaders of the bar on the Pacific coast, and away back in 1903 he was associated with the late Hon. Edward Blake in the celebrated Alaska boundary arbitration case. His work in the latter connection attracted such favorable attention that he was called to the Supreme Court of British Columbia. In 1906 Sir Wilfrid Laurier appointed him to the Supreme Court of Canada.

Canadian Dressings in War Zone.

Women who have given hours of loving toil to the making of surgical dressings will be comforted to know that the work of their hands brought comfort to many, even in the midst of the recent awful slaughter. Captain Harry Blaylock, assistant Red Cross Commissioner in France, has just written headquarters in Canada saying:

"On Saturday, learning that our troops were heavily engaged at the front, I left immediately for headquarters to see if we could render any assistance. Of what I saw I can say but little. Our losses were severe, and our men had fought splendidly. I was with the D.D.M.S. day and night, and it was the first time I had seen advanced dressing stations, field ambulances, and casualty clearing stations at work during a heavy action.

"They are magnificent. In one dressing station in an old mill, piled on every side with sandbags, as the place was heavily shelled, doctors and orderlies tended the wounded as coolly as if in their surgeries at home—with lanterns for light and the floor for a dressing table.

"We were able to give much assistance. When a shortage of stretchers threatened, I was able, with aid from the British Red Cross, to supply 200 from Boulogne in six hours. Also, our lorries were going incessantly, taking up sterilized dressings, etc. By midnight the battle had died down and we began supplying the base hospitals."

Will Oppose U. S. Scheme.

Following a conference between officials of the Marine and Public Works Departments, the Shipping Federation, the Dominion Marine Association, the Toronto Harbor Commission, and the Montreal Harbor Commission, the Government has decided to support, if necessary, the opposition to the bill now before the United States Congress to divert water from the Great Lakes for the Chicago Drainage Canal. The British Ambassador at Washington has been informed of the Canadian attitude. The Chicago scheme would involve the diversion of a large flow of water from Lake Michigan, thus affecting the level of Lakes Erie and Ontario.

Both Legs Up.

A lieutenant from Riverdale Barracks, Toronto, was drilling his men one morning. The order was to extend the right foot straight out. One man raised the left instead, and the lieutenant, noticing the two legs together, shouted: "Who's that blockhead with both legs up?"—A. B.

Shooting a White Chamois.

A stuffed and mounted white chamois buck that rests in the court museum at Vienna is directly connected, through tragic superstition, with the beginning of the great European war. A white chamois—which is really not so snowy as the word implies—is so much of a rarity that throughout the Austrian Alpine region superstition attaches to the slaying of it. Whoever kills such an albino, say the huntsmen and mountaineers, dies within the next twelve months.

This particular chamois was shot on Aug. 28, 1913, by the Archduke Francis Ferdinand, accompanied by his wife, near Bluehubach, in the Salzburg Alps. When the game was lying at her feet the professional hunter, kneeling over it and calling attention to the whitish tint of the fleece, told the heir to the Austrian throne of the current belief. But Francis Ferdinand merely smiled. Ten months later exactly he was murdered at Serajevo.

The Device on Turkish Stamps.

The curious symbol in the center of Turkish stamps, an intricate and mysterious device, is the "toughra," or signature of the sultan. It is said to owe its origin to Sultan Murad I. who was unable to write his name. St. Nicholas quotes from an article on "What Philately Teaches" as follows: "He (Murad I.) signed imperial decrees by dipping his fingers in ink and placing them on the documents with three fingers close together and the little finger and thumb extended. In the course of time this was adopted and, so to speak, consecrated as the signature of the sultan. It was also elaborated and arranged to form a written phrase, while preserving in a general way its original form. The toughra contains certain characters which are permanent and minor ones which change. The latter are the names of the sovereign and his father." Mystic significations in course of time have become associated with this toughra.

Origin of the Name Siberia.

In 1582 Yermak, a Cossack chieftain, with a band of warriors "chosen for their bravery rather than for their morality," set out to chastise and subdue a powerful Tartar tribe east of the Ural mountains. When Czar Ivan IV. heard of it he was badly frightened, for he feared to stir up the fierce Tartars. He frantically sent orders for the expedition to return. But it was too late. Yermak and his men had already crossed the mountains. When they approached the city of Sibir, the stronghold of the Tartar chief, they found an army thirty times as large as their own awaiting them. But they were far better equipped with arms and ammunition than were the Tartars and administered to them a crushing defeat. Sibir was captured and became the nucleus of the expansion of the Russian empire in Asia, giving its name to the new country—Siberia.

Fragments of Guineas.

Few geographical names have in turn swollen and shrunk in importance as "Guinea" has. Originally this or something like this appears to have been the name of a forgotten little town and "kingdom" in the Niger region. Then the name expanded in European use to signify everything from the coast opposite the Canaries to the boundary of Southwest Africa and gave us not only the coin called after its gold and the guinea fowl, but also, by a natural error, the "guinea pig"—really the Guinea pig from South America. Now those tiny fragments, the Spanish, Portuguese and French Guineas, alone preserve the name on the map, together with the gulf.—London Chronicle.

PAINFUL SWOLLEN VEINS

Quickly Relieved and Reduced

Mrs. R. M. Remler of Federal, Kansas writes an interesting account of her success in reducing a severe case of enlarged veins that should be encouraging to others similarly afflicted. She suffered with badly swollen and inflamed veins (in fact one had broken), for more than seven years before she became acquainted with Absorbine Jr., and used it. Absorbine, Jr., was faithfully applied for several weeks and, to quote from her letter, "The large knots in the veins left, it was all nicely healed, and has not bothered me since."

Absorbine, Jr., is an antiseptic liniment—healing cooling and soothing. Safe and pleasant to use. $1.00 and $2.00 at your druggist's or postpaid. Liberal trial bottle postpaid for 10c. in stamps. W. F. Young, P.D.F., 457 Lymans Bldg., Montreal, Can.

GOD'S BLESSING BRINGS RICHES

Through Christ a Great Blessing Is Coming.

Blessings Future and Blessings Present—Blessings of Knowledge—Blessings of Wealth—Blessings of Mind and Heart — Special Blessings for the Church—The Bride of Christ to be Fabulously Rich—Blessing or Divine Favor and Fellowship Even Now.

PASTOR RUSSELL

New York City, July 2.—Pastor Russell spoke here today at the New York City Temple, W. 63rd St., near Broadway. His discourse, as usual, was both interesting and instructive. He said in part:

Our topic for this occasion is found in the wise man's words: "The blessing of the Lord it maketh rich; and He addeth no sorrow with it." (Proverbs 10:22.) The blessing of the Lord is here put before our minds as in contrast with His curse. For more than six thousand years the whole world has been under the Divine curse pronounced in Eden. (Genesis 3:14-19.) When our Heavenly Father created man in His own image and likeness—"very good," as He declares—He was conferring a great blessing, one not sufficiently appreciated perhaps by Father Adam and Mother Eve—the blessing of Divine favor and fellowship, the blessing of living amongst the perfect conditions of an Edenic home, in which everything was favorable to happiness.

We have every reason to believe that God has as good a purpose in connection with the creation of mankind as in connection with the creation of the angels, and that the present greatly different condition of man as compared with that of the holy angels is the difference between a condition of sin and one of righteousness. The angels who live in a state of holiness and happiness are those who kept their own estate. This some of the angels failed to do, but left their own habitation. These God has restrained under chains of darkness to await the great Judgment Day. (Jude 6; Genesis 6:1-6.) In his fallen condition man is sick, mentally, morally, and physically. Because of sin he has come under a Divine curse—not, as once we thought, a curse of a devilish kind, a curse of eternal torment, but that which the Bible declares—"Dying, thou shalt die."—Genesis 2:17, margin; Ezekiel 18:4, 20; Romans 6:23; etc.

Our text suggests that a great blessing is to come from God to all men when the curse upon mankind has been removed. That a universal blessing is yet to come upon Adam's race is made very clear in the Scriptures. This blessing will come through our Lord Jesus Christ; "for as by a man came death, by a man also comes the resurrection of the dead. For as all in Adam die, even so shall in Christ be made alive, every man in his own order."—1 Corinthians 15:21-23; Hebrews 2:9.

The curse pronounced in Eden was a world-wide sentence, which reached to all of Father Adam's posterity; and as the curse brought all mankind into condemnation through Adam, so it is the Divine purpose that a release from this condemnation shall come to all through Christ. Every man, woman, and child of Adam's race, living and dead, is yet to experience an individual opportunity for life everlasting through the death of our Lord Jesus. But this blessing will be everlasting only upon certain conditions.

Few Seeing Eyes and Hearing Ears.

The proposition which God has made is that all who have gone down, and all who are going down, to death through sickness and sorrow because of Adam's transgression will be brought up again, but will not be further blessed contrary to their wills. Let us illustrate this point by referring to condemnation under human law. Suppose that you had a friend in prison, and that in some way you had secured a remission of the penalty and an order for the liberation of that individual. The responsibility is then his. If he rejects the pardon and the release, the blessing will be of no avail. But before he can be responsible for the rejection of the blessing, he must know that he has the opportunity to go free from condemnation. Even then he might be brought from the prison and be told that he could go free; but if he should then say, "I prefer to remain in prison," he would lose the benefit of your friendly action entirely.

There are some Christian people who claim that the world's only opportunity for salvation is now. They cite the proclamation that whosoever believeth in Christ shall have everlasting life, and declare that this offer does not extend to anyone beyond this life, and that thereby the responsibility to accept this offer rests upon all now. The Bible indicates, however, that not many now hear or see, not many understand, even the first principles of the great blessing which God has provided. The majority believe not because Satan has blinded their minds through ignorance, superstition, and priest craft. Moreover, vast multitudes have died without ever having heard of Christ. Since intelligent faith in Him as a Saviour is absolutely essential to salvation, according to the Scriptural declaration, how can these have any opportunity for salvation if the present life ends all hope?

To His disciples the Master said, "Blessed are your eyes, for they see; and your ears, for they hear." (Matthew 13: 16, 17.) The intimation is that now few hear or understand. Again, our Lord said, "To you it is given to know the mysteries of the Kingdom, but to them that are without all these things are spoken in parables and dark sayings, that seeing they may see and not perceive, and hearing they may hear and not understand; lest at any time they should be converted, and I should heal them." Here again, in our own day, we see that it is given to some to know the mysteries of the Kingdom; and to others, the majority, it is not given.

How inexplicable this is without the key! The explanation is that God's time to enlighten the world at large has not yet come. Only a few are now in the proper condition to be profited by the Truth. For others who are not in that condition of honesty of heart it is better that they do not know too much about God's arrangements, for the knowledge would give them the more severe condemnation. The Lord sees that this knowledge is not given to any except those who are in the right attitude of heart and able to exercise the necessary faith. Upon others God's Message makes little or no impression even if they should hear with the outward ear. Weakness of heredity or handicaps of training, or both, hinder them.

The Blessing Coming Upon the World.

"The blessing of the Lord it maketh rich." All who have the hearing ear and the understanding heart realize this blessing. Something has entered into their lives the like of which was never known before. During the next Age the blessing of the Lord will come upon the world, but will operate quite differently. The arrangement for the next Age, as we see from God's Word, is that, first of all, Christ will take the Kingdom, and will have absolute control of the whole world. His first step will be to bind that old Serpent, Satan, who has been deceiving the nations for 6,000 years. Christ will restrain him, that he may deceive the nations no more, that the people may be relieved from that deceptive influence, that they may the better appreciate the Plan of God, which will then be made known to all.

Will not that be a blessing from the Lord, a blessing of knowledge, when the world is shown that God, instead of being the greatest devil that they could imagine, is a god of sympathy and compassion? Will they not be glad when they learn that God has for a thousand years turned the whole world over to His Son, that our Lord may reign to the intent that the blessing of life everlasting may be granted to all who will receive God's gracious offer into good and honest hearts? God's blessing will make rich in body, in mind, and in moral quality whoever receives it.

The Apostle Peter declares that these Times of Refreshment shall be "Times [years] of Restitution." (Acts 3:19-21.) Restitution means restoration. When Adam fell, he gradually lost his moral and physical perfection, and went down, down, down, into the tomb. So have all mankind, his posterity. Adam and all his race are to be offered restitution—a restoration from sickness, from sorrow, from death, a restoration from mental, moral, and physical disabilities—back, back, back, to the image of God which Adam lost by disobedience in Eden, but which our Lord Jesus redeemed for all mankind at Calvary.

These wonderful blessings are all to be given to the race by Messiah's glorious Kingdom. Whoever will accept these blessings of God will receive riches beyond power of human pen now to portray. Just think what this will mean! Suppose that we had the power now to bring the world back from its selfish, mean condition to the image and likeness of God. Where would the European war be in two minutes? Where would all selfishness and sin be? The removal of all these evils is just what God purposes to do, not by magic, but along better lines. If such a change could be wrought by magic, it would go by magic.

Why Evil is Permitted Now.

God purposes that man must learn a great lesson—that sin burns and devours like a fire. The true Church of Christ have learned that lesson. The world is learning a similar lesson, and will learn it still more fully. The great Time of Trouble now coming upon the nations will enforce that lesson as it has never yet been realized. Then, under the Messianic Kingdom, the world will learn righteousness; they will climb the ladder back to perfection. The Lord sees that this will be far better than magical changes could be.

Now there are sin, sorrow, misery, poverty, all imaginable difficulties, and even death itself. But then, the Lord tells us through His Word, there will be no more curse, no more poverty, nor sorrow, nor crying, nor dying. The earth will become a Paradise. The blessing of the Lord will make the world rich, and He will add no sorrow with it. If any should then have sorrows, it will be because they add the sorrows themselves. Whoever will be obedient to the laws of the Kingdom will be blessed of the Lord. All who will love righteousness and hate iniquity shall have the blessing of the Lord, making them richer and richer, until by the close of the Millennial Age they will be absolutely perfect, as perfect as are the holy angels, as free from pain as are the angels—no more insanity, no more broken hearts, no more curse!

Present Blessings to the Faithful.

Even in the present time it is true that the blessing of the Lord maketh rich His people now. "But," says one, "not many of them are very rich." I am not so sure about that. To be rich is to have all that one desires. If one is a true child of God, he will desire the things which God sees best for him to have. He will wish God to give him whatever Divine Wisdom approves. In proportion as he is yielding his life to God, in that same proportion he is getting his desire, and therefore he is rich.

There are plenty of people who cannot get the peace which they covet. Many rich people lack much that they crave. But those who get the riches of the Lord are rich indeed; for they have the peace of God, which passeth all understanding. It is the blessing of the Lord which makes His people rich—rich in the blessed sense of sins forgiven, in the realization that God no longer condemns us, that we are His children, joint-heirs with Christ, if so be that we suffer with Him.—Romans 8:17; 2 Timothy 2: 11, 12.

In harmony with the Call which God has been sending forth during the Gospel Dispensation, He has received us as His children. He has been calling out of the world a certain company. The Call goes to the world, but not with the purpose of gathering the world. God's purpose now is to take out from the world "a people for His name." (Acts 15: 13-17.) To illustrate: If a young nobleman should come to this city to seek a bride, he would choose a young woman of especially desirable qualifications to bear his name. He would select her from amongst all others. Similarly God is now choosing a Bride for His Son, to take the name of Christ. (Jeremiah 23:6; 33:16; 2 Corinthians 5:21.) For more than eighteen hundred years this has been God's special work.

Gospel Church Almost Complete.

This work of choosing the Church is almost complete. Probably there are a few more vacant places, but not many, so far as we understand the Word of God. We must be very near the time when the last member shall have come into the Bride class. In the parable of the Ten Virgins (Matthew 25: 1-13), we read that when all the wise virgins had gone in to the marriage, the door was shut. This does not mean, however, that when the door to the Marriage of the Lamb shall have closed, the door of mercy shall also be closed. As long as there shall be any proper use for mercy, there will be mercy. Only the Church as yet experiences mercy from God. But during the next Age all mankind will receive it.

It is not the door of mercy that is closing now, in the end of the Gospel Age; for that door will be open throughout the incoming Age. Nor is it the door of opportunity for salvation that is about to shut. It is the door into the Bride class, into the Marriage of the Lamb, that is soon to close; and when once it is closed, no more will ever get into that class. No other class will ever receive offers as good as those now offered. The Bride of Christ will be fabulously rich. Hers will be the highest honors. She will have all the riches of grace promised in the Word, all the loving-kindness which her Lord has provided for her.

But even while still in the flesh the Church class are greatly blessed. The peace and rest of heart which we enjoy is conducive to physical health. This does not mean that all of the Lord's children are well and strong physically, but that, all things considered, their health is likely to be better than it would have been with the same amount of activity had they remained in the world. Even in a temporal way the Master's words, "Come unto Me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest," have great force. This rest in Christ, this realization that we have the God of the Universe as our best and truest Friend, as our constant Helper and Guide, lifts a great load from the heart, and brings a joy, a freedom from anxiety, that none others than the Lord's own people can understand.

We may not be richer in the sense that we shall have more wealth, finer homes, or greater influence in the world. This will be very unlikely. Nor do we desire these things. But we have the true riches, which far outweigh all these other things; for they cannot bring happiness nor peace of mind. The Heavenly riches give the spirit of a sound mind. This makes the brain clearer, the judgment more reliable, the nerves more steady, the heart more bouyant.

"Eye Hath Not Seen Nor Ear Heard"

The glories which God hath in reservation for His faithful, loyal children are things that eye hath not seen, nor ear heard. (1 Corinthians 2: 9, 19.) Wonderful indeed will be the riches of the world when mankind shall have been fully restored to human perfection and to an Edenic home. But far more wonderful will be the riches of the Church, the Bride of Christ. She shall be made like her Lord in His present glorified condition—far above angels, principalities, and powers—"partaker of the Divine nature."—1 John 3: 1-3; 2 Peter 1:4.

These Heavenly riches are to be attained in the resurrection, when the faithful overcomers shall be richly endowed with all the good things which God hath in reservation for those who love Him, and who prove their love by present-time devotion, sacrifices, etc. But there is also a foretaste of those Heavenly blessings granted to the faithful in this present life. These Heavenly riches granted us now the Apostle speaks of as riches of grace. (Ephesians 1:7,18.) They include faith, hope, joy in the Holy Spirit and an ability to see and to appreciate with the eye of faith the things which actually are not yet seen. The Apostle also declares that these treasures of wisdom and grace—knowledge of Divine good things in reservation, and the fellowship with God which permits us to anticipate these blessings—are all hidden in Christ. (Colossians 2:3.) Only after we have come into Christ, as members of His Body, can we have the opportunity of finding them.

"If you can't sleep nights, why don't you see a doctor?" What! And add another bill to the lot that's keeping me awake now?"

She talked and talked and talked.
Till he said to himself with a groan:
"Ye gods! have I married a woman,
Or is it a gramophone?"

The holiday in the American markets had a quieting effect. The opening was no surprise, in view of the rise on Saturday, but Liverpool quotations came in higher, and some very good buying developed. The shorts covered as quickly as possible, but the export houses were the real buyers, taking between two and three million out of the local market, some of it at the top prices of the morning.

A Woman Magistrate

THE appointment this week of Mrs. Arthur Murphy ("Janey Canuck"), as a police magistrate for Edmonton, with jurisdiction over all cases in which women and girls are concerned, is another striking recognition of the unusual qualities possessed by this quite wonderful Canadian woman. The West has produced many women imbued with the frank and buoyant spirit of that big, new land, and several of them have succeeded as authors in expressing that spirit in such a way as to compel interest not only in Canada but far beyond it. Of all these Mrs. Murphy strikes one as being most truly western of all—keen and joyous, with a big, broad mind and a generous, expansive personality. Physically as well as mentally she radiates the most refreshing human qualities. Her writing naturally has these qualities, too, but it is also exceedingly admirable from a technical standpoint. Little wonder that Mrs. Murphy's influence is constantly increasing in broadening fields.

This exceptional woman was born at Cookstown—the South Simcoe village famous as the birthplace and present home of Hon. J. S. Duff, Ontario's Minister of Agriculture. She is quite frank in telling you that the date was 1868. Emily Ferguson was her name and she came of a noted Simcoe County family of Tory politicians, being a niece of the late Col. T. R. Ferguson, and a granddaughter of the late Col. O. R. Gowan, both of whom were members of Parliament. Sir John A. Macdonald was a guest at the wedding of her parents.

Yet, in spite of all this, in one of her books on the West she defended the cost of construction of the Grand Trunk Pacific, pointing out that while it was more expensively built it was sound and solid; "not cobwebs strung on a muskeg."

"Janey Canuck" believes in fair play in all things. In the same book, "Open Trails," she had a word to say for the French nuns at St. Albert, who have on their monastery windows, not a cross and the lilies of France, but a cross and maple leaves. Also she had something to say about a matter which we have now forgotten about—the notice, "No Englishman need apply"! She said (this was long before the war, of course): "I delight in that Englishman who, on seeing such a notice, raised his eyebrows and said: 'By Jove! Copied off the gates of hell!'"

Mrs. Murphy was educated in Toronto, at Bishop Strachan school, winning the Alex. Manning medal for general proficiency. In 1887 she married Rev. Arthur Murphy, a Church of England clergyman, and for many years has lived in Edmonton. Latterly Mr. Murphy became interested in mining and farming as well as in church work, and Mrs. Murphy took a hand at both and at a hundred other things. She knows all about mining, a lot about timber and farming, can side a broncho with anybody, is a considerable traveler, a curler, and a collector of Canadian fossils.

An extraordinary variety of work has been done in the West by Mrs. Murphy, including an organization of district nurses, women's clubs, hospitals, improved law regarding dowers, etc. She was organizer and first president of the Women's Canadian Club at Edmonton. She is a magnetic platform speaker and a charming, genial conversationalist.

"Janey Canuck's books include "Janey Canuck Abroad," "Janey Canuck in the West," and "Open Trails." They are not stories in the ordinary sense, but impressions of a penetrating, sympathetic observer of Western life, skillfully and charmingly recorded. Robust is the best word to describe her work as a whole, for it is all strong, sane, and refreshing. Agnes Deans Cameron, the noted Canadian Western writer, now living in the United States, has a keen admiration for Mrs. Murphy.

Toronto women were once described by Mrs. Murphy as wearing "a cross between the English and American modes; good material in good style." She also said that "Toronto takes its new jokes from the theatres," but adds: "The city is very fair, resourceful, tireless, and unafraid; a city worthy to be greatly loved."

THE PILOT SNAKE.

He Is a Bold Burglar, and Birds Are His Chief Victims.

Maybe you've been in the woods some day and heard a squawking and fluttering in a tree over your head. You look and see a pair of frightened birds darting this way and that about their nest on a limb. You look closer, and you see a long, black snake creeping along the limb to the nest. In a minute he will have devoured the young birds or eggs in the nest and then stretch out on the limb for his afternoon nap. The name of this robber is the pilot snake.

He's one of the boldest burglars among our snakes, and birds are his principal victims. He can climb trees, clamber over bushes and race over the ground with equal speed. He grows to be from four to six feet long, and in the woods he looks terrible, but he isn't.

He's entirely nonvenomous, and he doesn't "charm" birds, as many people believe. It may be that a bird will become so frightened at seeing one of these reptiles attacking her nest that she will become virtually helpless. But as for charm, that's all a myth. The pilot snake doesn't need to charm his prey. He's too good a climber.

Often the pilot snake is mistaken for the blacksnake. The latter has a white throat and is bluish rather than black. The young pilot snake has white spots. In addition to birds and eggs, it eats insects and even small animals. It will climb a tree and crawl into a squirrels' nest to devour the young squirrels.—Our Dumb Animals.

Every Woman Can Have Beautiful Abundant Lustrous Hair

The clever women of Canada have learned that Parisian Sage possesses the peculiar power to turn dull, lifeless-looking hair into lustrous, fascinating hair.

And that is why a head of dull appearing hair is a rarity nowadays, for why should any woman neglect the opportunity to make her hair beautiful when it adds so greatly to her charms?

Parisian Sage not only beautifies the hair, but it makes hair grow abundantly, stops it from falling out, and removes every trace of dandruff.

PARISIAN SAGE

It is the ideal hair dressing for the whole family, because it is not sticky or greasy, and possesses a refreshing and invigorating quality not found in ordinary hair preparations.

It makes the scalp feel splendid the minute you put it on the head. Sold by druggists everywhere for 50c. a large bottle.

For aches, pains, rheumatism, etc., try Parisian Mustard Cerate. Its effect is wonderful. Use in place of mustard plasters, poultices or hot applications. Will not blister. 25c. a tube.

"Meat Takes Another Jump"—a familiar headline in your daily newspaper. But why worry about the cost of something you don't need? The most expensive foods are generally the least nutritious. In Summer health and strength come from a meatless diet. Two Shredded Wheat Biscuits, heated in the oven, covered with berries or other fruits and served with milk or cream, make a complete, satisfying, nourishing meal at a cost of five or six cents. All the meat of the whole wheat.

LETTERS FROM OVERSEAS

France, June 18th, 1916.

FROM PIPER D. McINTOSH

My Dear Cousin.—It is Sunday morning, and I have just attended communion service. It was held in a barn, which is our home during these days of recuperation after the trying days through which our regiment has recently passed. But previous to the Sacrament of Communion, which was attended by comparatively few of us, there was the regular divine service for which all ranks paraded in a green pasture near by. The opening hymn was a very beautiful and appropriate one; the same which filled the dome of St. Paul's during the recent memorial service for Lord Kitchener: "For all the Saints who From Their Labors Rest." As we sang it, I could not but be reminded of many of my former comrades, especially those from Belleville, who were my special friends and who, from their labors in "our just cause", are now resting. But no man here knows where they rest, whether in the shell-searched Ypres salient in a last long sleep, or whether it be in an unrestful prison camp, beyond the barriered Rhine, where the virtue of endurance must still be exercised Percy Jones, Spargue, Lloyd, and Geo. Dickson, my four friends, who enlisted from Belleville along with me are all among the missing. For eleven months we had served together, tented on the same camp ground at Barriefield where summer suns were glowing and wintered together on the Flanders front, when rain was dripping, mud was oozing and naught availed save the faith and endurance.

To-day, I alone, am left to tell the tale, and to play the "Flowers O' the Forest," on my pipes. Just a few days before they went up the line, we attended together the Cinema at the Y.M.C.A., and on that occasion Sprague's brother from the signallers was with us, and we all had a cup of tea at the counter before returning to our huts. On the day they went up the line I shook hands with them, and Jones remarked to me, "They say we're going to have a hot time up the line this trip," but he was quite cheerful as usual. He then gave me his new service-cap to keep for him till he returned, and he went up the line wearing my old one. I still have his, and am wearing it now. Being in the band I had to remain behind at transport headquarters, while my four friends went down to the trenches in steel helmets, destined to undergo the heaviest bombardment ever faced by British troops in any war. From the survivors of this deluge of shot and shell, which broke suddenly upon our line about 2.30 on the morning of June 2nd, I can get no definite information of the fate of my comrades. It seems they were in the supports with their company, with Sprague on gas-guard. But although their fate is yet unknown, it is an open secret that on that day all the boys did their duty, as Canada expected they would.

On previous occasions when I have seen with them under fire, they always behaved well, and Jones in particular was a bold and doughty soldier, always bearing in mind the issue at stake, and preserving unimpaired the spirit of the volunteer. When more faint-hearted comrades were looking backward to Canada, his bold and fearless eyes were ever straining eastward to Berlin. But he never disguised his attachment to the folks at home He spoke with tender affection of his sisters, whose photographs he cherished and carried in his pocket, and this unfailing remembrance of the home associations lent a moral distinction to his character, which was always something of an inspiration to me. He never for a moment regarded the uniform he wore as a sufficient excuse or a license for unbecoming conduct or language.

At present we are having beautiful weather. All the crops around looks well; the trees are beautiful, many of which are graceful elms. Under the shade of their spreading bows we spend many an industrious hour of practice with our pipes. When on the march our pipe-band can always be relied upon to awaken the interest of the French people, and the women usually come to their cottage doors to see us swing past to such immortal tune as "Hielan," "Laddie," "Bonnie Dundee," and "Pilbroch O' Donald Dhue." At present I'm in good health and enjoying our divisional rest. I am glad to know you are all in the very best of health and enjoying the nice summer weather. Close with kindest regards to all, trusting soon to hear from you. I remain,

Your loving cousin,

Piper D. McIntosh, 4th C.M.R.

Mrs. Gamble has received the following letter with a box of wedding cake from England:

Dear Mrs. Gamble.—Before this reaches you you will have heard from Bobbie. I believe you call him Brillen, but all the Canadians call him Bobbie, so we do the same. He has spent his six days' leave with us, and returned to Folkestone yesterday to attend a Masonic banquet, he having joined the Masonic order since coming to England. I am sure it would have pleased you to have seen him when he left here. The change and home comforts appeared to do him so much good. His foot is not quite well yet. There are plenty of men who enlisted at the beginning of the war, who are still in England. I wonder they are not sent out and allow our lads, who have been fighting so long, to return, but, of course, mere women are not expected to know anything about these things. No doubt Bobbie will give you a fuller description of his week with us. On the 16th was my youngest sister's wedding day. The affair was postponed twice on account of leave at the front being suspended; so that when the day did arrive the best man had joined the colors, and the bridegroom invited Bobbie to act in his place, which he did real well. The affair took place in a beautiful old town on the River Thames. A place called, Abingdor, six miles from Oxford. The church is years old, and beautiful, and took Bobbie's fancy. It was a quiet war wedding, and passed off nicely, and made quite an event for Bobbie. We motored to Abingdor, fifty-five miles from Devises, passing through some very pretty villages, most of the houses having thatched roofs.

On Saturday we went to Bath, another beautiful old city, noted for the waters. The Canadians have a hospital there, with 1000 beds; I am told they have a very good time there. We hoped that Bobbie may be attached there; it is quite an easy distance from here.

One day Bobbie met a Canadian in Devises from Belleville, Bomb. F. Day, of the 2nd Battery, and brought him to our house for tea. It was his last day's leave, and I was so sorry, as I would have liked to mother him; he is only 21. However, by the time he left us he was all cheered up, talking to Bob of Canada; what they were going to do when they got back, and of old times. It seemed like a tonic to them.

Now, dear Mrs. Gamble, do not worry about your boy; he is more fit in every way now than when he came to Devises, after Salisbury Plains. Please accept our kindest regards, and accept this wedding cake which is my sister's.

TYNIE MILLARD,
The Limes, Aron Road, Devises.

Note

This is one of the kind ladies of England, who made our Canadian boys happy and comfortable at her beautiful home in Devises at the beginning of the war, and who has been devoting her time to them ever since.

NINE YEARS HIS SENIOR

The following is taken from the Vancouver Daily News-Advertiser of June 29:—"Ex-Premier visits Mrs. DeBeck."—Sir Mackenzie Bowell, at one time Premier of Canada, who is 93 years of age, came over to New Westminister yesterday to make the acquaintance of one who is still older, Mrs DeBeck, who celebrated her hundred and second birthday on Tuesday."

MUSIC AND DRAMA

"AN ALIEN" HERE TONIGHT

A Finished Production in Which George Beban Shows a High Order of Art

Peace has its victories as well as war. It has also its tragedies. There are few peaceful tragedies more hard that those which aliens, without money, have to bear in this great land. One of them formed the substance of a successful vaudeville sketch some years ago. It was called most happily, "The Sign of the Rose," and the impersonator of the central character, Mr. George Beban, grew quite famous. His sketch has been remade and renamed. It appears at Griffin's Opera House, to-night and Thursday night under the title of "An Alien," in the form of an 8-reel motion picture. In "An Alien" there is no blunder. The introduction and development of the pathetic story told is left to the motion pictures. The story in itself will always move one by its simple sadness. It is a story of a tender-hearted dweller in the east side world, an Italian, Pietro Massena, who lives happily, though sordidly, with Rosina, his loved infant daughter, until one Christmas day a millionaire, frenziedly hunting for his child, who has been abducted, accidently runs over Rosa in his automobile. Pietro is suspected of being the kidnapper, and is trapped by a police myrmidon. But as a second tragedy seems threatening, the truth comes out and Pietro is allowed to go to his dead Rosa. Mr. Beban gives an artistic portrayal of the poor Italian laborer, Piero Massena. Frugal honest tender-hearted full of that childlike simplicity which has always been a charming characteristic of the southern Italian.

THE PATENT MEDICINE IS REVEALED TO PUBLIC.

The patent medicine danger, constitutes the latest 2 part episode of the Universal special serial, Graft, which is announced for exhibition at the Palace Theatre to-night and Thursday, matinee and night. Harding, having secured the diary containing the secret of the Graft Ring from Dorothy, sets out to crush H. S. Blanchard, head of the Patent Medicine Trust. Blanchard, who is cornered in his office, determines to meet the crisis half way, so he invites Harding to his office over one of the big retail drug stores for a conference. Harding has been investigating some of the evils of the patent medicine business. Some of the cases which under his observation follow:—Two young men, out for a good time, and the saloons closed. They purchase some of the patent medicine containing a large percentage of alcohol, and become wildly intoxicated. While in this state they fight, one being seriously injured, and the other arrested. One of the bottles of medicine, which they have given to a "Down-and-Outer," causes that worthy to become a hold-up man, resulting disastrously for both himself and his victim. A young girl takes a couple of headache powders, which contain a drug. A "Cadet" has watched her; follows her out of the drug store and has no difficulty in getting her into a house of ill-repute in her dazed condition. Later the girl becomes a "Dope" fiend. Armed with this knowledge, Harding sets out, and after many thrilling adventures succeeds in bringing the guilty culprits to justice. In addition to the above serial "For the love of Mike and Rosie," a new 3 reel L Ko comedy scream is also announced for exhibition, in addition to three other comedies and dramas.

HUH? ELECTRIC TYPIST!

Writes 130 Words a Minute, Making No Mistake

Apropos the discussion as to whether stenographers should be caged, wives should note an electrically operated typewriter, which writes form letters automatically from a perforated paper record or master sheet. The new machine is said to write at the rate of 130 words per minute and to do the work of two fairly rapid typists. It is a perfect "typewriter," for it makes no mistakes.

The paper records are perforated on another machine provided with a standard keyboard. The automatic typewriter is operated by a 1-20th horse-power electric motor. It is possible to fill in the name and address of the person for whom the letter is intended and then start the paper record mechanism running for the balance of the letter. The mechanism can be shut off at any point and a special sentence or paragraph inserted.

The work produced by this machine is identical with that produced by a most skilful typist.

KAISER'S TROOPS MASSING TO STOP THE BRITISH ADVANCE

EMPEROR OF GERMANY ARRIVES ON THE VERDUN FRONT

IRISH PROBLEM FINALLY SOLVED

Lloyd George's Proposals Are Substantially Adopted—Exclude Six Ulsters

LONDON July 6.—Special—It is understood that the Cabinet has substantially adopted Lloyd George's proposals for the settlement of the Irish home rule question. As the decision was unanimous, no Ministerial resignations are now apprehended.

Lord Lansdowne and Walter Long, who hesitated to accept the suggested arrangement have now come into line on the ground of Imperial necessity.

Sir Edward Carson has already notified the Government of the acceptance of the scheme by the Irish Unionists, and John Redmond on his return from Ireland, officially announced his adherence to the Nationalists' proposals.

Under Lloyd George's plan a home rule Parliament will be immediately set up in Dublin for all of Ireland except six of the nine Ulster counties, the six to remain under the British Parliament till the end of the war.

Any Kind of Man is Needed by Germans

The Conflict Has by No Means Reached Its Highest Limit

LONDON, July 6.—Special—The Reuter correspondent, under date of July 4 sends the following from the press camp, British army in France:

"While the battle of the Somme has already assumed the proportions of the biggest battle on the western front, the maximum strength of the conflict has certainly not yet been reached. The Germans are throwing men into their resistance as fast as their means o' transport will permit, and while many of these troops are reserves in the strict meaning of the term, the mass of them have been hurried from other theatres of war, but not a single soldier from the 90-mile British front. Judging from the prisoners taken the enemy seems to have arrived at the stage where he is obliged to build up his defences with the very dregs of his human resources.

"An interesting feature of the battle is the partial return to conditions of old warfare. But this is only temporary. It is still the era of the triumph of the machine over man, and although circumstances may occassionally bring the infantry face to face in the open, yet the scream of the high explosives and the crash of shrapnel form an imperative mandate to dig in or be wiped out."

BRITON SLEPT BY CANDLE LEFT ALIGHT BY FOE

LONDON, July 6.—Special—As an instance of the amazing rapidity with which the British troops advanced, a British Colonel took his first real sleep since the fight began in a German dugout where his predecessor's candle still burned on the table.

GERMANS ATTACK THE CATHEDRAL OF VERDUN

Allied Detachment Penetrated Enemy's Trench and Found it Filled With Dead Bodies—Allied Long Range Artillery Does Effectual Work—Guns Captured by Allied Troops Are 76 Cannons, Hundreds of Machine Guns

Canadian Press Special.

PARIS, July 6.—Afternoon statement—North of the River Somme there were last night a number of local engagements and counter-attacks by the Germans, who took from us two little woods situated one kilometre north of Hem. An attack by our troops resulted in our gaining another wood situated on the north-eastern boundary of the same village. South of the River Somme the night passed quietly along the major part of the front. A counter-attack directed by the Germans upon Belloy was easily repulsed.

The number of cannons captured by the French troops counted up to the present reaches 76. We also have taken machine guns to the number of several hundred. The exact figure in both cases has not yet been learned.

There have been no infantry engagements on either bank of the River Meuse. The Germans have bombarded our second lines in the region of Chattancourt, and there have been fairly spirited duels of artillery in the sector of Fleury and at Fumin Wood.

The Germans have delivered a ferocious attack upon the Cathedral of Verdun last night. They endeavored to systematically reach this building with large calibre shells. One of our long range pieces of artillery was successful in dispersing a convoy of the enemy in the direction of Heudicourt to the north-east of St Mihiels.

In Alsace, in the vicinity of Burnhaupt, one of our detachments penetrated a German trench, which was found to be full of dead bodies.

Col. Harry Baker Died Like a True Canadian Hero

Letter From Adjutant of 5th Mounted Rifles Tells The Thrilling Tale

OTTAWA, July 5.—The first detailed account of how Lt.-Col. Harry Baker, M.P., member for Brome, and commander of the 5th Mounted Rifles, lost his life in the battle of Zillebeck is given in a letter written at the front to the Colonel's sister by Capt. A. Roades, adjutant of the regiment. The letter was sent to Sir Robert Borden by Miss Baker and showed the Prime Minister had written a letter of condolence.

Captain Rhoades wrote: "From 9 a.m. on June 2 until 9.30 p.m. we were subjected to an intense fire from guns of every calibre. The battalion was in support about 500 yards in rear of the first line trenches and in such a position that we could not get any adequate protection from the constant rain of heavy shells which seemed to reach out every corner of our line. To keep a stout heart at such a time when you cannot see your enemy or get a chance to return any of the fire is no easy task, but for over 12 hours your brother not only made whatever dispositions were required from time to time with care and calm judgment, but by his cheerfulness and calmness set such an example to us that none could be otherwise than truly inspired. He always had a cheery word to say to everyone as he passed along the line and the answering smile was always forthcoming, indicating clearer than anything else could have done the love and perfect confidence each felt in his commanding officer.

Tact is very often the art of seeming to be interested in other people's troubles.

105, But He Works Farm

Rufus Avery, of North Augusta, Is a Well Preserved old Man

NORTH AUGUSTA, July 5.—Certainly a remarkable old gentleman is Rufus Avery who resides a mile outside this village, and is now in his 105th year. Mr. Avery was born on April 3, 1812.

In looking over Mr. Avery's small farm of 25 acres your correspondent found that he had done ploughing and planting and has a nice little crop solely by his own exertions. There are also some 20 rods of rail fence, which the centenarian has relaid, wired and staked.

Mr. Avery retains quite perfectly all his faculties and grows quite eloquent in reciting his early experiences in the clearing up of wood land and hewing a home for himself in the primeval forest.

He was born on the farm now owned by Mr. Moon, on the 3rd line of Augusta, about three miles east of Stone's Corners. His father was a U. E. Loyalist, coming from New Hampshire. is mother was a daughter of Roswell Everetts, and by this union nine children were born. Rufus was the eldest of these. He was 38 years of age when he married Miss Almeda Baxter, daughter of Charles Baxter, who resided near Metcalfe's Corners.

In his boyhood days he lived with his uncle a Mr. Haley, and attended school at Gosford. To a newspaper correspondent he stated that his teacher being a cripple, the boys used to draw him to the school in the winter on a handsleigh. The teacher's name was George White.

His first wife died after 30 years of married life, after which he married Miss Martha Briggs, who is still living.

The old gentleman had no family, and this leaves him without anyone to take care of him and to smooth his pathway in his declining years. He thinks he has one brother still living in Michigan, but he has not heard from him for several years.

MAN CRUSHED WHEN HORSE RUNS AWAY

TORONTO, July 6—(Special.) —Samuel Bennett of Bolton sustained serious injuries early last evening when a horse which he was driving took fright just west of Weston and started to run away, throwing him out and overturning on him a 600-lb. bale of wood from the Bolton Woollen Mills. He was brought in to the General Hospital, where it was found that his collarbone was broken, and also a small bone in the wrist and the left hip joint.

HIGH PRAISE BESTOWED UPON CANADIANS ACCEPTED BY ALL

LONDON, July 5.—"The general staff is satisfied with the results so far. We are all confident that, as it has so often been in the history of the empire, our efforts began slowly, but staying power has shown itself and steadily month by month it is going to increase until the end we are all determined to secure has been reached by the bravery of our soldiers."

Thus spoke Bonar Law, colonial secretary to the overseas parliamentary visitors who to-night were dined by the high commissioners jointly. He went on to deal with what the old country had done, remarking that he not only had the old sympathy for Canada where he was born, but that he also retained many of her prejudices.

"I believe," he declared, "that never has the mother country done better or even so well. There has never been the slightest sign of jealousy here that so much has been said of what the Canadian troops have done and so little of what our own soldiers have done.

"I am not going to say anything about the present government. It is of a peculiar kind and I said at the beginning that it was a government which would have no friends to back it when it was wrong.

Bay of Quinte Summer School

Interesting Talks on Idylls of The King—Evening Mass Meetings

The delegates had a rich treat in two addresses by Prof. G. F. Stewart on "The Idylls of the King." Referring to the ancient order of knighthood he mentioned that men who were t receive the rank spent the night previous in prayer in the church, and that in the days of coarseness, brutality and drunkenness, knighthood had value. Tennyson's idyll of the king is a beautiful allegory of social moral and religious truths. Arthur's knights of the round table meet in the hall with 4 zones of sculpture, representing respectfully, beasts slaying men, men slaying beasts, warriors, perfect men, and men with growing wings.

The poem represents sense at war with soul. King Arthur is the hero. he represents the soul. The poem written at various times, really was the history of all men of all generations, and is an epic of that eternal warfare between the sensual and supersensual going on through the ages, and gives the progress, with varying fortune, of the battle between good and evil in us all. Will the soul in the midst of evil subdue or be subdued? The answer, true to experience, is a mixed one. The king attempts to subdue his kingdom. He seeks to drive out the beasts, and to establish and build a new order. He succeeds in a measure, but sin creeps in and grows. The Round Table is the ideal of the new society. King is centre and knights gather about him. The principles of the Round Table are obedience to the king, fidelitiy to the truth, the vows of purity and of service. The knights were to ride abroad redressing the wrongs; but disloyalty to the king is manifest. Then the subtle pervasive passion of love was degraded to mean and base purposes. Lancelot and Guinevere, the Queen, intend no wrong but subtle passion does its work. The unfaithfulness of the Queen and knight leads to distrust among the other knights. This affords an opening for the forms of evil. The knights distrust one another; hate and slander come in the person of Vivien. Merlin the embodiment of knowledge, shows that mere wisdom is not enough to save from evil. The breaking up of Round Table was due to sensualism and esceticism, which Tennyson regarded as a contradiction to religion. There arose a sentimental reverence for things counted religious. Some of the knights went in search for the holy grail. Their time, pledged to the king, was spent in an unreal quest, and the lesson for us in that holiness is found in our daily contact with men, in doing good. No one can find happiness by searching for it.

Rev. W. P. Rogers, B.A., gave an eloquent address on methods and aims in Christian endeavor. Every institution must answer "What good purpose do you serve? The Epworth League should kindle the latent intelligence until it flings the flashing of its searchlight into every avenue of life, radiating lines of light, liberty and life. How? By living its motto. "Look up! Lift up!" This practical age stamps with disapproval visions, yet we owe much to them. The ancient prophet saw coming an age when men should see visions, and this was fulfilled by Peter at Pentecost. When our vision is circumscribed out work is paralyzed. Even from purely physical point of view "eyes have we but we see not." "Consider the lilies." God designs that the flower, the rainbow, the heavens shall speak to us of Him. The physical way be an avenue of approach to intellectual and spiritual. Men of vision succeed when men of theory fail. Columbus had a vision and discovered. When God manifested Himself to Moses in the burninf bush it was a great day for Moses, but just as great a day for the children of Israel, for Moses got a vision of their needs. Ezekiel had a vision; Saul had a vision. The Christian Era has had men of vision, who were not disobedient, but have flung themselves into the fight for better things and have thus earned for themselves the name of Moral Reformers. No man is entitled to that name who does not give himself to the fight. Sanonarola, Luther, Harriett, Beecher Stone and Wendell Phillips were cited as some of those having vision who enter the conflict and endure the suffering. The men of vision and action win out in time. We have visions. Are we obedient?

The delegates took a trip by the "Brockville" to 12 o'clock Point, Wednesday afternoon.

CUT COMMUNICATIONS OF DEFENDERS OF LEMBERG

Russians Rout Enemy on Right Bank of Dneister River — Capture 1,500 Men—Cavalry Attack Austrians in Mass Formation Northwest of Kalomea—Break Through Wire Entanglements at Vulka-Galouzeskal and Take 1,000 Prisoners

LONDON, July 6.—Special— The Russians have advanced twenty-one miles west of Kolomea, and, battling in the Carpathians, have cut the Delatyn-Korosmezo railway, one of the main feeding lines the Austro-German organization, and part of the Lemberg system. Reporting this success tonight, the Petrograd War Office also announces that in a terrific battle on the right bank of the Dniester River the Austro-Germans have been put to flight and are now in a disorderly rout, pursued by the Russians. The Austrians report a furious mass attack by Russian cavalry, which they claim they repulsed.

Allied military critics have insisted that the cutting of the Lemberg railroad would compel the Central Power forces to fall back on the wide front, and place Lemberg in imminent peril.

The battle has extended along almost the entire eastern front, and from Riga to Bukowina the huge army groups of Kuropakin, Kaledine, Letchitzky and Brusiloff are engaged with the Teuton legions of von Hindenburg, Prince Leopold, von Linsingen and Von Bothmer, while pounding the defeated army of Pflanzer-Baltin.

On the Galician and Volhynian fronts the Russian War Office reports a series of unbroken victories. West of Kolki an Austro-German army has been defeated, while at Vukla Galuzyiskaya three lines of Teuton defences have been carried. The Russian left wing, which has swept into the foothills of the Carpathians, has according to an earlier report from Petrogral, captured Sudzavka, on the Kolomea-Delatyn road.

The Russian official communication from General Headquarters to-day reads:

"On the Lower Styr and on the front between the Styr and Stokhod, and farther south as far as the region of the Lower Lipa, everywhere there have been most desperate battles.

"In the region of Vulka-Galouziskai we broke through three lines of barbed wire entanglements fitted with land mines. In a very desperate fight on the Styr, west of Kolki, we overthrew the enemy and took more than 1,000 prisoners, including one hundred and seventy officers, together with three guns, seventeen machine guns, two searchlights and several thousand rifles.

EDWIN MONTAGU TO BECOME NEW MUNITIONS MINISTER

LONDON, July 6.—(Special.) —Edwin Samuel Montagu is to succeed David Lloyd George as Minister of Munitions, according to The Daily Telegraph.

Edwin Samuel Montagu, at present Chancelor of the Duchy of Lancaster, formerly was Financial Secretary to the Treasury. He was born in 1879, and is one of the youngest members of the Asquith Cabinet. He is a Jew and a cousin of Herbert Samuel, President of the Local Government. Board in the Asquith Cabinet. His elder brother, Baron Swaythling, is head of the London banking firm of Samuel Montagu & Co.

Man does not always get what's coming to him. In a dry town sometimes, your barrel of potatoes with the keg in the middle, is delivered to another party.

Kaiser Calls For Troops To Stop The British

Sees Necessity of Hedging Allied Advance at any Cost—Desperate Action May be Looked For

Canadian Press Special

NEW YORK, July 6.—A News Agency despatch from London, says the Kaiser has arrived on the Somme front, accompanied by members of his general staff, who will direct the defense of the German lines. He has established headquarters not far from Cambrai opposite the British front. It is reported orders have been given to stop the British at any cost. Great bodies of Germans are being massed between the Ancre and Somme to stem the British advance. Allied aviators report the constant arrival of troops on trains and a Holland despatch confirms reports that heavy concentration behind the British lines from Ypres to the Somme. There are many indications that the Germans will launch a very heavy counter attack against the British lines.

LAST LINE OF THE ENEMY PIERCED BY THE ALLIES

PARIS, July 6.—(Special.) —The full force of the French offensive is again being exerted both north and south of the Somme, but principally southward. In this direction the French are now in the outskirts of Peronne, the great railway centre which is their first objective in their effort to cut the German communications.

Sormont Farm, taken this afternoon, is only two miles from Peronne and adjoins its suburban houses. The importance which the Germans attach to this point is shown in their fierce counter-attack last night when they rushed the French lines back to the Village of Belloy-en-anterre, which they momentarily held. This village lies between Assevillers and Estrees, both held by the French, so that the German rush temporarily made a dent in the French advance. This dent was quickly straightened out when fierce hand-to-hand fighting placed the town again in French hands.

The number of German prisoners taken is now close to 10,000 while the extent of the munitions captured is shown in the fact that sixty guns were taken by a single army corps. Meantime the movement north of the Somme is necessarily retarded in order that the French left wing may act simultaneously with the British right wing.

The British have been facing an extremely heavy resistance and large German reinforcements were hurried forward all day yesterday by the Cologne-Cambrai railway which runs to the very centre of the German front attacked by British. The stubborn resistance all along this front has prevented the British from keeping pace with the French advance to the south.

ADVANCES BY ALLIED TROOPS

Raids Successfully Carried Out Men and Guns Captured in Quantities

Canadian Press Special.

LONDON, July 6.—Near Thiepval we made a further slight advance and captured a number of prisoners, the War Office announced to-day. South of La Bassee Canal, after the discharge of gas and smoke, we made some successful raids into the enemy's first line. In one of these the Royal Welsh Fusiliers especially distinguished themselves, capturing forty prisoners, a trench mortar and machine gun.

In another raid, the Highland Light Infantry successfully entered the enemy's trenches west of Hulluch. A machine gun emplacement was destroyed, many Germans were killed and some prisoners taken. There was no change of importance on the rest of our front.

BERLIN DESPATCHES SAY FRENCH REPULSED

Canadian Press Special.

BERLIN, July 5.—An army headquarters' official statement today recites the failure of the French to advance in the Verdun sector at several points, and repulse of the French attack northwest of Rheims with serious loss. The capture of 274 French prisoners around Thiaumont redoubt on Tuesday, evacuation of the Village of Hem, by the Germans, and capture of Belloy by the French, and a partial transfer of Count Von Bothmer's lines on the Galician front after repeated Russian attacks had been repulsed.

ADMIRALTY THANKS THE JUTLAND HEROES

Canadian Press Special.

LONDON July 6.—The Secretary of the Admiralty has sent Sir John Jellicoe a letter from the Lords of the Admiralty, congratulating the officers and men of the Grand Fleet upon their conduct in the naval battle off Jutland. Wife Finds Husband Bigamist

LONDON, Ont., July 5.—Looking through the pockets of her husband's clothes while he was away from home with the 135th Battalion, Mrs. George W. Barrett says she found letters that aroused doubts of the legality of their marriage. The outcome of her investigations was that Private Barrett was placed under arrest today, and will be tried next week on a charge of bigamy. The allegation is that Barrett was married in Guelph, under the name of Powney, to Miss Ada Walker of that city. Later he came to London and joined the 135th Battalion, and while a member of that organization made the acquaintance of Miss Rosanna Pinkham and was married to her in December by Rev. H. H. Bingham. After her home discoveries, Mrs. Barrett claims to have communicated with Mrs. Powney and found that their descriptions of their husband or husbands agreed. Barrett denies that he ever went under the name of William J. P. Powney, or was ever married in Guelph.

NEW BOYS' SECRETARY COMING NEXT MONTH

They are of the Irish Cobbler variety, and especially relishable for table use. During the ten years Mr. Ackerman has resided at his present abode, he has never failed to have new potatoes on the first of July. This year, he tells us, one hill provides two meals for the family. DRUG CLERK TELLS HOW TO CURE INDIGESTION Recommends to Sufferers the Best Stomach Remedy in Belleville To-day.

"It is a wonder some of us have stomachs left," remarked a well-known drug clerk recently. "While all drug stores sell a score or more of stomach remedies for which there is a wide demand, most of them are just pepsin pills which digest the food that is in the stomach at the time. They have no curative or strengthening effect on the stomach at all, and of course do not reach or cure the cause. So the same people keep on coming here and buying and using them until they are real chronic dyspeptics. When anyone really asks my advice, I swear by and recommend ordinary bisurated magnesia, which doesn't digest the food at all but just acts as an antacid and sweetens the sour, fermenting contents of the stomach." That stops the pain, heart-burn, sour rising wind, blowing, fullness, etc., in just a few minutes, and the stomach digests its food without help or trouble, which is the proper way."

"Doctors make mistakes sometimes too," he continued. "My own aunt had all kinds of trouble with her stomach for years. She bought and used several styles of digestive pills but got worse right along, as naturally she would. Finally she went to a doctor, who nearly scared her to death by telling her she had cancer of the stomach. She came to me with his prescription and told me what he said. I thought it was nonsense. I sent her to another doctor whom I knew very well and he didn't tell her anything, but just gave her this same thing, bisurated magnesia. She took it two weeks and never has had any stomach trouble since and that's three years ago. She's my own aunt and I know this for a fact. Yes, a lot of bisurated magnesia is sold in Belleville. All the druggists have it. I suppose, and all you take is a teaspoonful after every meal. It's all right."

BRITISH ARE NOT LOSING THEIR HEADS

On the eve of the Franco-British offensive on the western front, Major Moraht, the military critic of the Berlin Tageblatt, had the following comments on the situation which are of an unusually sober character for him and which seem to indicate that pessimism is at last creeping into German circles:—

"Such a study indicates that all the warring nations find themselves in a critical stadium. Our enemies, like ourselves, now stand on the pinnacle of their strained endeavors. Gradually they have learned in the course of the war to launch their attacks against the central powers simultaneously. We must honestly admit that the organization and the conduct of the war on the part of our enemies has grown more energetic and more uniform. They have learned something from us, and their great resorces in men and money, together with their many lines of communication on the open seas, enable them to make the final victory more difficult for us to expect.

"Of their strength, we would be blind were we to overlook these phenomena at the end of the second year of the war, and that could not be consonant with the German character were we unwilling to realize the truth. Appreciation of the whole situation, however, nevertheless give us no grounds for looking pessimistically into the future. If our enemies' war organization has made progress, so have we and I assert that in this respect we still, as before, lead the way.

The will to win is a pre-requisite of our final success.

"So far as one can see, this unity has been shaken by nothing, and we are confident that the bands forged by our common interest will in future continue to bind Turkey and Bulgaria to us devoted, self-sacrificing activity.

"On the side theatres of the war, our enemies no longer make an attempt, unless secretly, to separate our eastern powers. On the other hand, our enemies have had success in that, despite the strongest violations of the neutrals, they have known how to prevent every one of them from openly joining our side.

"The situation on the western front is approaching a climax. The Russian offensive brought no relief from our pressure. Decisive battles, which will undoubtedly be hard, are still before us, but we do not doubt we shall be successful.

"The English are going ahead very systematically and very cautiously, reconnoitering at many points by tactically unimportant thrusts and letting their artillery work at long range, having undoubtedly great masses of ammunition available.

"Our English enemies are not making the mistake of losing their heads and rejoicing, like the Italians, seeing great things in little successes. The English have actually become very sober.

"They avoid boasting and are not calculating on a quick repetition of the Russian and Italian successes. Because of this very sobriety of judgment, we again and again recognize the English determination to hold on for victory, regardless of the length of time it may take. I repeat, without an earnest settlement with England on the battlefield in the west, we shall never come a step nearer peace."

Body and Brain Thrive On Grape-Nuts FOOD

A Volume of Truth

—in fact, many volumes would be required to tell of the purity, deliciousness and satisfaction that goes with every ration of the famous whole wheat and barley food, Grape-Nuts.

Whole wheat is sweet but when malted barley is added then comes a nut-like flavor more tasty and satisfying than is possible in any food made of wheat alone. But the barley does more than heighten the flavor—it gives this food its great digestive qualities.

It is a fact that Grape-Nuts supplies, as does no other food in such splendid proportion, all the nutriment of the grains, including the vital mineral elements often lacking in the daily diet, but which are imperative for mental and physical vigor.

Grape-Nuts is especially processed for easy digestion and yields a wonderful return of sturdy brain, nerve and muscle energy.

Grape-Nuts is always ready to eat—just tilt the packet and add cream or good milk—a delicious dish, richly nourishing and highly satisfying.

Seventeen-Year-Old Girl Killed Marian Lambert

Will Orpet Innocent, She Writes in Letter Signed "Dare Devil," "I Hated Her Through Spite. Do Your Worst. If You Harm Orpet, Beware!"

The Montreal detective office was the scene of unusual activity Wednesday morning, doubt and skepticism giving way to certainty as Chief Carpentier read and reread a remarkable letter which was turned over to his department by Chief of Police Campeau. In it a seventeen year old girl confessed to killing Marian Lambert, the young woman who was poisoned by candy at Waukegan, Michigan, and for whose death William Orpet, a student, is now on trial, charged with murder.

The writer of the letter, who is now in Montreal, confesses to the crime through jealousy of the good things which Miss Lambert possessed and which she coveted, she says. She declared she is not afraid of the police and dares them to do their worst.

Admitting that she never saw Orpet, she says that her only motive was revenge and spite at Miss Lambert's apparent prosperity. She admits falling in love with Orpet through seeing his picture in the newspapers, following the death of Miss Lambert.

The letter which caused the detectives mixed feelings of doubt and anxiety, is addressed to "The Chief of Police, Montreal. Important," and reads as follows:

"I killed Marian Lambert because I hated her through spite. The man held is innocent, and I will not let him suffer for me. I defy the forces of police. Get me if you can, and I issue this defiance: Do your worst, I love Orpet and if you hang him, beware! Innocent blood be upon your heads. I never saw this man Orpet, and only fell in love with him through his picture. I wanted everything Marian possessed and as she had him I now want him. I love him, and I want him just to spite Marian's dead body.

"I will tell you more; he is innocent. I defy you, though I am just a girl if seventeen years. If you do aught to him I promise to tell all. I am in Montreal reading about the case, hearing of it and talking about it; no one ever thinking I killed her."

"DARE DEVIL."

Investigation as to the source of the letter was begun this morning with little to aid the police in their search for the writer. The letter is written in lead pencil and is a fair hand, although the spelling was imperfect.

LETTERS FROM OVERSEAS

FROM PTE. C. POST

Mrs. Post residing at Rossmore, Prince Edward County, received the following communication from her son:

Abbey Hospital, Woburn, Beds.

Dear Mother:—Just a few lines to let you know that I am well and hope this letter finds you the same. I have not heard from you for a couple of weeks, but that is not strange, for I have been travelling some during that time, and no doubt letters are following me around France, Belgium and England looking for me. How is dad and all the rest? I am writing well. My leg is all healed up now, and I am walking around. I am writing this in the Abbey Hospital at Woburn in England. It belongs to the Duke of Bedford and the Duchess is one of the sisters here. She certainly is very kind and good. They use us fine. We have all kinds of things to eat, and a fine bed, and when we came in last Saturday we even had a man to bath us and take us to our bed wrapepd in a dressing gown in an invalid's chair. Some change from the trenches. When we go outside of the Abbey we can walk all day I guess and see something new each time. They have all kinds of deer, and every kind of wild animal you ever heard of in their park here, you might think that kind of funny but it is so, and they have lots of room too, for the estate is about twenty miles square. The flowers are all in bloom, and talk about trees, they have trees from all over the world here, and some of them just does one's eyes good to look at them. Believe me, it is Heaven compared to the trenches, for it was certainly terrible out there when I got hit. No doubt you have read about the scrap at Zillebeke, before now. The papers didn't say much, but the Canadians certainly have done great there. It is wonderful how any came out alive, for when we went out to dig ourselves in like rats we could not walk in places for stepping on the dead and wounded. The ground was literally alive with human bodies, both Germans and Canadians; but more Germans, for we sliced them up some. We stopped as high as five attacks inside of twenty hours, so you see we had some work, for they came over in massed formation, and by the thousands, just like bees.

Well I guess I will close for now. I remain

Your loving son,
PTE. C. POST.

MUSIC AND DRAMA

FRANCIS X BUSHMAN, HERE TOMORROW IN "PENNINGTON'S CHOICE"

Francis X Bushman, the favorite of thousands of patrons of filmland, will make his appearance on the screen at Griffin's Opera House to-morrow night, and Saturday matinee and night, in "Pennington's Choice," with Beverly Bayne, another picture star, loved and adored by thousands, appearing in the role opposite him. The role played by Mr. Bushman affords him ample opportunity to display his remarkable strength and prowess.

As a New York clubman he must first prove his courage among the woodsmen in the Canadian northwest before the girl of his choice will consent to be his wife. Miss Bayne has a part that fits her equally well, and the unusual love story interwoven in this intense drama, centres around her.

There is an unusually strong supporting cast which includes Wellington Playter, Helen Dunbar, Lester Cuneo, William Farris, H. O'Dell, Morris Cytron and James J. Jeffries, former champion prize fighter of the world, the latter being shown in a boxing scene with Mr. Bushman. "Pennington's Choice," is a strong 5 act wonder-play, and is being offered in addition to three other selected comedies and dramas.

"THE ALIEN" PROVED AN ABSORBING PRODUCTION

It was well said by the New York Herald: "If there was a dry eye in the Astor Theatre last night it must have been a glass one," for a more affecting production has never been screened at Griffin's Opera House than "The Alien," as presented to a large audience last evening. The two extremes, wealth and poverty—the home of the millionaire, and the hovel of the Italian—are vividly produced. The indolent son of a deceased financier, supposed to be heir to thousands, flies high in social life; he borrows from friends, giving his expectations as verbal security. The will, upon being read cuts him off with one dollar, an allowance for actual expenses being alone specified. The fortunate brother, a man of honor, refuses to advance money to liquidate the renegade's debts; the beautiful child of the fortunate brother is kidnapped and held for a ten thousand dollar ransom.

The home of the Italian laborer, containing Pietro Massena and his motherless child Rosina; a home of love and contentment. Here is where Mr. George Beban shines as a film star. His deep affection for the little daughter; the simple presents at Christmas; the children at play on the street; the skidding automobile, which causes little Rosina's death; the heartrending scene as the father, returning with presents for his child, looked down upon the stricken figure; his appearance at a florists; his arrest as the kidnapper of the millionaire's child; his patience in multiplied afflictions; and final release, brought out a series of acting that went like darts to the hearts of the awed assemblage.

Then came the discovery of the true culprit, the recovery of the child, and promise of recompense to the bereaved Pietre. The characters in the photo-play, which consists of eight rolls, are above the standard, the scenes are true to life, the subject uplifting. With several shorter films, this great play will be repeated this evening. It is worthy of patronage.

THIS IS THE 678TH DAY THE BRITISH EMPIRE HAS BEEN AT WAR WITH GERMANY.

A TIMELY RESIGNATION.

It is now more than thirty years since Senator Landry was innoculated with Nationalism. Then his adviser was Mr Wilfrid Laurier; now when the disease has returned in a more virulent form he has Sir Wilfrid Laurier as his guardian and advisor. It was after Louis Riel paid the penalty for the massacre of innocent British men, women and children that Senator Landry, at that time a member of the House of Commons, gave adherence to Nationalism in the following resolution:—

> "That this House feels it its duty to express its deep regret that the sentence of death passed upon Louis Riel for High Treason was allowed to be carried into execution."

And this resolution was heartily endorsed by Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

Bilingualism has again brought these two racial agitators into close fellowship. Laurier, Landry and Lavergne with the assistance of Bourassa and Belcourt are seeking to have Canada ruled by Quebec.

Senator Landry has resigned the speakership of the Senate. His prompt action forestalled his dismissal. The Borden Government has no place for such agitators nor for traitors to the great cause of France and England to which this country is committed. Sir Robert Borden's acceptance of Speaker Landry's resignation clearly shows the opinion the Government entertained of him.

CANADIAN-RUSSIA TRADE.

Natural calculations suggest that a large trade between Canada and Russia will be developed immediately after the war. This commerce will be of great interest to Vancouver, as it should pass through this port. In the last year the foreign commerce through the port of Seattle has doubled the record of any previous year, and most of the increase is due to trade with Vladivostok. It is not forgotten that some of the trade was lost to Vancouver because there were no cranes and other equipment there to handle some of the heavy pieces. We believe that a good deal of the freight shipped to Siberia through Seattle originates in Canada. After the war it should be arranged that freight shipped to Russia from Canada under preferential arrangements will go by way of Canadian ports if they are able to take care of it.

Mail and Empire: The German Government realizes that the most deadly force with which it has to contend is Britain's navy. Britain's command of the sea means the doom of Germany's military power. By its blockade of German ports the British navy is steadily diminishing the resources and weakening the fighting power of the enemy. Germany's enormous export being practically suspended, her ways and means for continuing the war are being gradually lessened, and large importation of war material is both physically and financially made impossible. There is reason to believe that the process of economic exhaustion has been carried very far in Germany by the embargo the British navy maintains on German

The new defence budget of the United States as outlined in despatches from Washington will appropriate some $622,000,000, divided about equally between the army and navy. The United States, like some other countries more directly concerned, has learned since August 1914 that its political military administrators did not know what modern war was like, and neither army nor navy is ready for such work as is being done in Europe. The Mexican trouble helped those concerned to appreciate the weaknesses of the situation, and the figures of army and navy outlay are being revised so as to make the fighting departments more nearly equal to the possible demands upon them than they have been. The controllers of the Ways and Means Committee have also been doing their bit, the outcome of which is a revenue bill introduced in the House of Representatives which is intended to raise $210,000,000 a year to meet, besides the demands for defence, the generally increased outlays of the public services.

Bishop Lawrence, of Massachusetts, announces that $3,000,000 has been raised of the $5,000,000 pension fund for Protestant Episcopal clergymen. It is expected that the whole amount will be in hand by March 1917. This is said to be the first religious pension fund that has "gone through the crucible of scientific scrutiny," which means that the system has been carefully worked out after a study of the vital statistics of more than 98 per cent. of the Protestant Episcopal clergy. It is figured that once the system is established, it can be supported through an additional annual payment of 7.4 per cent. of the current salaries in the church. All of the 68 dioceses in the United States have adopted the plan.

Toronto News: The miracle has been performed. Five million British men are in khaki. The United Kingdom is one vast armament factory. Half of Northern France is occupied by probably 2,000,000 British troops, not parks but forests of the world's most powerful guns, and stores of munitions that would compel the envy of Napoleon, and all the other military captains of the past. One hundred years ago, 200 years ago, and again 300 years ago, the stubborn, if slow-moving, British rescued human freedom from the all but successful assaults of world-conquering tyrants. Once more they are about to repeat that splendid performance.

Montreal Gazette: Interest is being developed in the election of a member of the Ontario Legislature for North Perth. The sitting member, a Conservative, resigned, and the Liberals think they can win the seat in the by-contest. The Conservatives are in the great majority in the Legislature, and the loss of one member would not be a matter of much immediate consequence. The result may have more than momentary meaning, however. The election will be the first in which a constituency will pass upon the recent prohibitory legislation of the province.

The Commonwealth of Australia has been seeking to borrow $20,000,000 in London by the issue of four and six year debentures. The rate of interest deemed necessary to secure par is 5¼ per cent. The amount received is to be turned over to the state governments of Victoria, Queensland, South Australia, Western Australia and Tasmania to meet the cost of public works. They must need public works in an urgent way in Australia when they are ready to pay such a rate for money to secure them.

Sundays, the question of yes or no has got down to the number of tickets the company will sell for a quarter. Is the conscience of the citizens carried in their change pockets?

Newspaper men of Calgary who made exhaustive investigations of last year's crop conditions, after a trip through the south country, say no finer crops were ever seen in Southern Alberta. It looks as if last year's phenomenal record would be surpassed in some districts. The wheat should soon be heading out.

The Balkans are attracting more attention than for some time. Military activities are being revived, and the successes of the Entente Allies are reported to have caused a renewal of the propaganda of pro-Entente politicians in both Greece and Roumania.

There is a campaign in London at present against tipping in hair-dressing saloons. If it is successful the people may feel like demanding that it be extended to hotels and other places where the practice prevails. The open palm is a painful sight to the ordinary traveller abroad.

Without war on hand the people of the United States are being called on to pay $210,000,000 a year in war taxes in addition to their ordinary fairly heavy national burdens. Still they are fortunate. If they had a real big war on their hands the levy might be ten times heavier.—Montreal Gazette.

In Alberta the crop acreage is only 6 per cent. less than it was last year, and Alberta has recruited several thousand men in excess of its proportion of the 500,000. Recruiting does not seem to have hurt agriculture nearly as much as most people thought it would.—Mail and Empire.

The Poets' Corner

CUPID IS POPULAR.

(From the Springfield Republican.)

There is nothing in creation
That will interest us so,
Or throughout the human system
Radiate so warm a glow,
Or to which so much attention
By the world at large is paid,
Or that has such approbation
As the courting of a maid.

Father Adam first began it
Back in Eden, it is said,
And as fast as countries people
The contagion to them spread;
And to-day there is no region
Found beneath the shining sun
Where a maiden is not courted
And a maiden is not won.

Cupid has a long engagement
With the hearts of human kind,
And will even shoot an arrow
At an animal, I find;
While the birds are special victims
Of his all-embracing darts,
And the rascal never misses
In his gunning after hearts.

Not a living thing escapes him,
High or low, or bound or free,
In the palace, in the hovel,
On the ground or in the tree;
And the world is only happy
And contented, I have found,
With a dozen Cupid victims,
Full of arrows, standing round.

—Jake H. Harrison.

EVICTED

New gray hairs are adorning my venerable dome. The sheriff came this morning and shooed me from my home. My good wife, Jane Mirandy, is weeping by the gate, and little Bess and Andy can't keep their smiles on straight. Life treated us so gayly, that living seemed like play, but now it's willowwaly, alas, alackaday! We used up every dollar, as fast as it was earned, and now we sit and holler for the coin we burned. We laughed at plodding neighbors, who picked half their scads, the product of their labors, the dollars of their dads. While they were toiling, plugging, with fun from them afar, we went around chug-chugging, in a mortgaged motor car. We heard the sages gabble of rainy days and woe, but laughed and joined the rabble, to see the movie show. We hit the higher places regardless of expense, and now the sheriff chases us from our residence. Well may you weep, Mirandy, and squirt the tears around, come our croppers, we view things with alarm; and we shall join the paupers, out at the county farm.—Walt Mason.

LITERARY NOTES.

ROD AND GUN.

The July issue of Rod and Gun is replete with material of interest to the sportsman, whether he be fisherman, hunter, dog fancier, gun crank or what not. Bonnycastle Dale contributes the leading article, "The Pursuit of the Maskinonge"; F. V. Williams gives a chapter in the adventurous life of a Seal Pup; Geo. H. Sarver relates an experience in which British Columbia sportsmen are attacked by grizzlies; Edward T. Martin describes a fight put up by a wild goose when attacked by a retriever. Other stories and articles, in addition to the regular departments are: Burns of Benwell, A Good Friday Visit to Jack Miner's Preserve near Kingsville; Yachting in Cape Breton; Miseries of Fishing; A Tenderfoot lost in the woods of Cloud's Bay, Port Arthur, etc., etc. The July issue is a good one to tuck into the outer's kit when setting forth on his vacation.

Acknowledges Magnitude of Allied Offensive

Germans Conclude Britain is Not in This War For Her Health—Means Hun Defeat

AMSTERDAM, July 5.—The beginning of the Anglo-French offensive is announced by the German press, under heavy headlines.

"From the great Champagne battle of last autumn," says The Cologne Gazette, "we know the imposing preparations with which the French general staff introduces such enterprises, and we can be certain that on the enemy's side nothing will be lacking as regards technical means for piercing our lines. For seven days artillery fire was poured over our trenches and our brave troops must have greeted it as a deliverance when at last the enemy storming columns came on.

"We should not be deceived by the fact that enemy reports already speak of great successes. Only within the next few days will it be possible to ascertain how far the general attack has brought the enemy."

"The Cologne Volksche Zeitung refers to the difficulty of holding the foremost German trenches in the face of the enormous energy of the attack, but notes that the attacking forces have not yet succeeded in piercing the German front.

"Although Germany confronts the coming battle with confidence," says this newspaper, nevertheless, the moment is without doubt fraught with significance and is perhaps decisive. England for the first time has to bear the main burden.

"The English army in France," it continues, "is strong and well equipped England's industry, after it was organized for the war, has scored great achievements in the manufacture of guns and shells, and, thus prepared, it believes it can now at last join the war dance on the soil of Northern France. As regards the military fitness of the English troops it has now an opportunity to show what it is."

A Student of Languages

For the Purpose of a Sojourn Abroad

By LOUISE B. CUMMINGS

"Lizette," said Mrs. Carrington to her maid, who was dressing her hair, "I expect to go abroad in the autumn. I shall go first to Italy, then to Switzerland, then to France. I shall get on very well in France, because I have learned to speak the language in talking with you. I have been studying Italian, but in order to converse in that language I need practice in it such as I have had with you in French. I am thinking of getting another maid for that purpose. Not to interfere with you, she will have the care of my wardrobe and wait upon me when you are otherwise engaged."

"Will you give her the care of your jewels, madame?"

"Not at all. You will remain in charge of them. I have perfect confidence in you and would not think of intrusting them to the care of any one else."

This announcement was to prepare Lizette for the coming of one she might otherwise think was intended to take her place. Mrs. Carrington applied to her Italian teacher to furnish her with a woman who would accept a maid's place, but who could speak Italian more correctly than one usually occupying a menial position. He promised Mrs. Carrington to interest himself in the matter.

In due time a young woman appeared with a note from Signor Speretti, the Italian teacher, introducing her and vouching for the correctness with which she spoke the Italian language. Her name was Bianca Morelli. She seemed rather younger than the age she gave, which was twenty-two, not appearing to be more than eighteen. Instead of having the black hair and eyes usual to Italians, she was a blond. Since Mrs. Carrington needed her to converse with and Signor Speretti vouched for her pronunciation and general knowledge of the Italian language she was engaged.

Indeed, Bianca was found not to be of much use for any purpose except that for which she was especially needed. She had nothing to do with her mistress' toilet; that was attended to by Lizette, but when called upon to bring some article of clothing she manifested a singular obtuseness. On one occasion when told to bring a tea gown she brought a bath robe. On another, when the Italian was called upon for a brassiere, she handed in a brush and comb.

Lizette laughed at the girl for her stupidity, but her mistress believed that Bianca had not been brought up with well to do women. She had doubtless associated with those who wore only the plainest clothing. But Mrs. Carrington could not understand, if this had been her condition, how she could speak the language of a well bred person. Bianca explained by saying that she had never had a sister; that her parents, though they had been well to do persons, during their childhood and youth could not give her the variety of dress enjoyed by other girls of her class.

Bianca had not been long in the house before her mistress began to notice that the relations between her two maids had changed. Lizette had at first rather patronized Bianca, sympathizing with her stupidity as to her duties and instructing her in them. All of a sudden her manner toward her fellow servant changed. The freedom with which she had treated her disappeared and was replaced by a reserve. Then, too, she was at times inclined to speak harshly to the Italian, while at other times she would seem singularly complacent.

Mrs. Carrington one day spoke to Lizette about this change.

"Lizette," she said, "I know the difficulties of servants constantly under the same roof getting on with each other, but I do hope that you and Bianca will not disagree. I am rapidly becoming able to give her orders and understand what she says to me in Italian. Now, if you and Bianca quarrel I shall have to send her away, and that will be the end of my practice in Italian. Try to get on with her for the few months that remain before we go abroad."

This brought no explanation of the status between the two maids. Lizette did not admit that there was any ill feeling on her part for Bianca, and she did not deny that there was. She was "doing" her mistress' hair when the subject was broached and went on brushing the glossy locks without a word. But Mrs. Carrington saw by a reflection in a mirror before her that her maid was perturbed by what she had said and was evidently concealing something.

Mrs. Carrington was more interested in keeping her two maids on amicable terms than in ferreting out the cause of this singular change that had come between them. Nevertheless she noticed that Bianca seemed to have an influence over Lizette. On one occasion, when the mistress had called Lizette without getting a reply, she went to the servants' quarters to see what was the matter. Opening a door without warning, she came upon the two maids in earnest conversation. The French girl was talking rapidly and gesticulating; the Italian was unruffled and listening to what the other was saying.

"Lizette," said the mistress, "I have been calling you for some time."

"Yes, madame. I didn't hear you, madame."

Mrs. Carrington returned to her room, followed by Lizette. As soon as they were alone together the mistress said:

"Lizette, of course what goes on between you and Bianca does not necessarily concern me, but I don't want any mystery in my house. Though I want Bianca for practice in speaking Italian, I will send her away at once if she is interfering in any way with my domestic arrangements."

"She does not interfere, madame," was the almost inaudible reply.

Mrs. Carrington was puzzled. She said no more, but kept up a good deal of thinking about this strange status between the two maids. Had it been between Lizette and the butler she would not have been surprised, for a concealed love is a common mystery. But the lady could not understand any relationship between two girls that needed to be kept secret.

One evening when Mrs. Carrington was dressing for a function calling for her most resplendent adornments she sent Lizette for her jewels. They were kept in a safe set into the wall. Mrs. Carrington and Lizette were the only two persons who knew this combination. Lizette went to the safe, opened it, but when she looked in the box containing the jewels they were not there.

Mrs. Carrington, hearing something fall and Lizette not returning with the jewels, went into the hallway and saw the girl lying in a heap before the safe. Running to her, she picked up Lizette, who at the same time came to herself and looked with terrible distress at the empty jewel box lying on the floor beside her. Mrs. Carrington took in the situation at once.

The lady on this occasion exhibited great presence of mind. She closed the safe door and turned the combination to lock it. Then she raised Lizette and supported her, taking the jewel box with her, to her own room and, locking the door, placed her on a lounge. No suspicion of Lizette was entertained, for she had evidently met with a surprise. She said that she had never given the combination of the safe to any one.

Mrs. Carrington went to a telephone booth and rang up a detective agency, giving the chief a brief statement of the case. He advised that the loss of the jewels be kept a secret, and it was arranged that Mrs. Carrington should add to her staff of language instructors a German, who should really be a detective.

Mrs. Carrington gave out to the household that she had become suddenly indisposed and kept her room, Lizette remaining with her. The next morning the mistress was relieved to learn that none of her servants had disappeared. After breakfast Professor Sweitzer appeared, and it was announced that he would remain a short time in the house to ground Mrs. Carrington in the rudiments of the German language.

He had a private conversation with Lizette, and after it was finished told her mistress that she knew who had taken the jewels, but would not peach. The next item of news he gave his employer was that Bianca was a man.

Mrs. Carrington, as soon as she had recovered from her astonishment, saw through the strange status between her two maids. The man had doubtless revealed himself to Lizette and had very likely made love to her. Both she and the detective felt sure that the so called Bianca had stolen the jewels, and the question was how to prevent his knowing that the theft had been discovered and his slipping away before he could be secured. He showed apprehension on the introduction of Professor Sweitzer into the household, but no sign of intended flight.

The practiced eye of the detective was not deceived in the Italian's makeup, though it had deceived every one in the house. Of course, this fact being known, no other evidence was required that he was the thief. The professor not only kept his knowledge from the household, but disarmed any suspicion the rascal might have that his sex was suspected. This he did because he wished to recover the stolen jewels as well as the criminal.

However, no time was lost. Calling for a couple of assistants the detective arrested Bianca. Of course the Italian knew that his game was discovered, and it was all up with him. Without putting his accusers to the trouble of making an examination he confessed that he was a man; that he had learned of Mrs. Carrington's desire for an Italian maid and had disguised himself for the purpose of securing the situation and plunder. He had got Lizette under his influence and concealed himself behind her when she opened the safe, thus learning the combination. He had taken the jewels during the night before the loss was discovered and was watching for an opportunity to get away with them. They were concealed where they would not be easily found, and Mrs. Carrington decided not to prosecute him if he would give them up. This he did, and, so far as she was concerned, he was not troubled.

When Mrs. Carrington went abroad she took Lizette with her, having forgiven her for having been captivated by the Italian, which was her only sin, for she was not suspected of any complicity with his dishonesty. Her mistress was enabled to call for what she wanted in Italy and understand, in a measure, what was said to her. She prized the little Italian she had learned from "Bianca," inasmuch as it had nearly cost her her jewels.

The Corn Aches

You apply a little Blue-jay plaster. The ache ends instantly, and it never will return. You can prove that in one minute. A million women prove it every month. A corn will never pain again after Blue-jay once goes on it.

Monday

No Corn Pain

On Monday you won't know you have a corn. It is gently disappearing. You know that corn is done for. You know it won't come back. You may also know that soreness will not follow. For Blue-jay is as gentle as efficient.

Tuesday

The Corn is Gone

In 48 hours Blue-jay ends 91 corns in 100. The other 9 per cent are tough corns which need another application.

Such has been the history of 70 million corns, since Blue-jay was invented. And any user will assure you that such results are certain. Prove that fact tonight.

Fundamentals.

If your outlook on life is wholesome and you have nothing worth while to think upon it is permissible to let your mind drift to the subject of fundamentals. Fundamentals are all right as long as you don't take them seriously. But if you begin to believe what you say about basic principles and elementary laws you are likely to become an uplifter or a Black Hand artist. The trouble is that when you get to brooding over such massive matters and the eternal consequences that attend them you invariably come to the conclusion that humanity is dallying in the primrose path, and then, nine times out of ten, you decide to reform something.

The golden rule of reforming is: Do unto yourself as you would like to do unto others. But nobody pays any attention to it. It is just as popular in theory and as unpopular in practice as other fundamental laws of conduct are. Uplift, like charity, should begin close up.—Judge.

Old Friends.

Those that have loved longest love best. A sudden blaze of kindness may by a single blast of coldness be extinguished. But that fondness which length of time has connected with many circumstances and occasions, though it may for awhile be suppressed by disgust or resentment, with or without a cause, is hourly revived by accidental recollections. To those who have lived long together everything heard and everything seen recalls some pleasure communicated or some benefit conferred—some petty quarrel or some slight endearment. Esteem of great powers or amiable qualities newly discovered may embroider a day or a week, but a friendship of twenty years is interwoven with the texture of life. A friend may be often found and lost, but an old friend never can be found, and nature has provided that he cannot easily be lost.—Samuel Johnson.

The Only Difference.

A Massachusetts congressman went to England a few years ago and spent some time studying the British parliament at close range.

Immediately on his return he was asked if he couldn't make an analytical comparison of the house of commons and the house of representatives. He wrinkled his face up learnedly and spoke as follows:

"The two houses are a good deal alike. The members there swagger in just as nonchalantly as they do here and have much the same knack at paying no attention to what is going on. About the only great fundamental difference between the two lower houses that I could discover after a great deal of thought and study was that in the house of commons they have more cuspidors."—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Palestrina was a revolutionist in his day, but is now virtually obsolete even for the severest classicists. Gluck was as radical an innovator as Wagner, yet it is only occasionally and with difficulty that one of his works can now be briefly resuscitated. Beethoven was a madman even to many of the best musicians as late as 1805, when, as that musical veteran, Professor Haupt, himself said, the "Fifth Symphony" was rehearsed in Berlin for the first time and the orchestra dashed the music from the racks, declaring it was crazy and could never be played. Now this same "Fifth Symphony" is considered a model of form, and its composer is the cherished idol of conservatives and classicists.

WALL COVERINGS.

What Kind of New Paper Will You Choose Now?

A WIDE RANGE THIS YEAR.

An Expert Tells How to Treat Walls and Colors So That Rooms Opening Into Each Other Give the Idea of Spaciousness and Harmony.

The day is already dawning when instruction in color values and house decoration will be a part of the course of study in every school. Then, and then only, will all of us be able to choose tasteful furnishings, restful walls and harmonious color schemes. Even if only a few artists be "born" all of us can be taught the principles of art and how to express it in the home.

Let us begin with a study of walls and wall coverings, because they are really the true framework of the room. They form the background for all pictures, ornaments, curtains and hangings. Therefore they must be chosen first if we are to have rooms that are restful and that also express best their relation to the windows and lighting.

We can be thankful that the days have almost gone when decorators offer us papers with climbing onions and interlocked rhubarb plants. Gone, indeed, are most of the medallion wall papers with their huge twelve inch repeating unit. We have today a selection from a wide class of more neutral papers in shades, such as putty, buff, sand, gray, etc., in which the variety is given not by the color, but by the texture, tiny stripe, dot or fleck in the grain of the paper itself.

While these neutral papers are not suitable or necessary in every room, it should be borne in mind—

That light colors make rooms appear larger.

That rooms opening into each other should not be papered with tones in violent contrast, but that similar or harmonious tones are best.

That long, narrow hallways and rooms with northern and eastern exposure are preferably treated with warm, light tones.

That light backgrounds with undecided pattern make the best surface on which to show off pictures, hangings and other furnishing.

Low ceilings will appear still lower if the wall space is broken by a frieze, plate rail, molding or other horizontal line which divides the space, so that it is best, particularly in our small rented homes or flats, to avoid papers or coverings with a break in the pattern near the ceiling or halfway down.

Horizontal stripes also make ceilings appear higher and are thus particularly suited to the small, low celled room. Papers with high gloss finishes, while attractive in bedrooms, are out of place and undignified for living or dining room or library. Everybody knows, but does not always follow the point, that warm, bright colors and tones are needed in "cool" rooms with north or eastern exposure, while those receiving southern and western sun can have their walls treated with the less heating colors and shades, particularly grays, blues and neutral tints.

Many fabric coverings for walls are on the market. In permanent homes they are most desirable because they do not mar, tear or show usage. The small rented bedroom should be tinted or painted for hygienic reasons, but in all rooms, whether fabric or paper covered, choice should be guided by means of light and art.

FOR AFTERNOONS.

LET THE CHILDREN DIG.

Nothing Pleases Small Ones Better Than a Garden Patch.

If you live out of town or spend your summers there, let your children study nature first hand in their own gardens. Nothing will teach them more quickly of trees, flowers, birds and vegetables than the planning and developing of a small garden.

Of course each child can personally manage only a very small garden. This can be in the form of a bed or in the form of certain possessions at various places in the big family garden. For instance, you might give into one child's keeping a climbing rose over a summer house, a dwarf evergreen in the far corner of the shrubbery border, a row of beans (a short one) in the vegetable garden and a little patch of flowers in the flower border. In this way the child has a chance unconsciously to study trees, flowers and vegetables.

If possible, make the child interested in all the details of garden growth. If the child can sketch let him sketch leaves and flowers and roots, seeds and seed pods and all the other parts of the plants he works with. Let him keep a little notebook for his sketches. Without doubt they will prove so interesting as he collects them that they will form the nucleus of an interesting lot of sketches, which he will refer to even when winter has made gardening impossible.

Buy a bird house or two for the child's garden. By watching the chance inhabitants who occupy it from year to year he will become familiar with birds, for his interest in one pair will lead to an interest in all birds.

Perhaps an interesting book or two will stimulate the child's desire to garden. There are children's bird books and gardening books and simple guides of all sorts. Then there are botany books, fascinating when mastered in the open, but rather dry work to most children indoors.

Let the child have possession of the fruits of his garden—vegetables, flowers or fruits, whatever they are. It is a mistake to give a child anything, even a raspberry bush, unless the gift is free and complete.

VOTES IN CANADA

How Three Provinces Rapidly Got the Suffrage.

POLITICS AND TEMPERANCE.

1916 Brings Success to Canadian Women After Years of Indifference—No Speaking In the Streets Allowed, a Forum Is Demanded.

Three Canadian provinces have this year given complete provincial suffrage and eligibility to women. "How did the women of Canada get the vote so quickly?" is the question asked Miss Inez Perry of Toronto. "Suffrage was as dead as the much famed doornail all over Canada," said Miss Perry. "Trying to arouse public opinion was just like beating one's head against a stone wall. I suppose you don't know in the United States about the queer discrimination we Canadians make against married women. Only widows and spinsters enjoy school suffrage in Quebec, and married women may not vote on tax questions in Ontario. In fact, the law rubs in its lack of confidence in married women in Ontario more than elsewhere, for it permits the husband of a woman who pays taxes to vote in her place and because of her tax qualification. In 1914 Toronto had a referendum on the question of the married women's right to vote, which showed two to one in favor, and, while the laws of Ontario are still stiffly opposed to suffrage, the demand for it is growing steadily. And the three powers that are shoving suffrage events right along in Canada are the temperance cause, the war and the wonderful woman of Canada, Mrs. Nelly McClung."

MISS INEZ PERRY.

Miss Perry is a young, alert figure, full of life and energy. She, like many other Ontario suffragists, followed Lady Eaton into temperance manifestations. "Here also the war and temperance work and the suffragists worked together," explained Miss Perry, "for the war has pushed prohibition on as fast as it has pushed suffrage out into the light of day in the British colonies of North America. Yet when I asked Lady Eaton how she came to be so enthusiastic for temperance what do you think she told me? 'Just Billy Sunday; that's all.' Your Billy Sunday had preached his famous 'booze' sermon, and she had heard it. She was immensely impressed with what he said. It seems as if the grouping of so many motives into one and voicing them through such a wonderful woman as Mrs. McClung is what has brought the vote to the western Canadian provinces and has given us new hope in Ontario."

Miss Perry explained how she became a suffragist. "My sister and I were just taking a quiet stroll in London when we saw a poor little handful of about fifty suffragists being ridden down by more than a hundred police. It seemed so unfair to trample women down for what they honestly believed that it turned me into a strong suffragist that very day, and I came back to Canada to 'do my bit.' One of the things we are working for right now in Toronto is a people's forum. We can't speak in the streets there. One of our first speakers is to be Mr. Poulteney Bigelow from your side of the boundary."

INTERNED AT HALIFAX

ALIEN ENEMIES THERE HAVE A GOOD TIME.

They Are Sure, However, That Citizens of Allied Countries Interned in Germany Have a Much More Beautiful Life Than They Have, But Proofs of Statement Are Not Forthcoming.

THE Halifax Camp for alien enemies is in the "Citadel." It is dignified and comfortable but somewhat gloomy. High stone walls surround the fortress, and over them one looks down the steep hill to the crouching city and blue, blue waters, says a writer in The Toronto Sunday World. The view is very beautiful, though one German officer objected to it. He had been imprisoned at the beginning of the war at St. Lucia, and he liked the scenery better there. However, he allowed that the food was better in Halifax and that he liked the officials better. I longed to comfort him by quoting the ancient adage: "Heaven for climate, but hell for company!" but manfully refrained.

Major Adams, the commandant of the camp, took me through the building and introduced me to a number of the prisoners. The first group of whom I was introduced looked rather uncomfortable and suspicious. The men at Amherst had regarded my visit and me as joyously as though I had been a traveling circus with real bears and elephants; and when I had proceeded to invite them to give me their views on immortality, sauerkraut, submarines, and the siege of the Dardanelles, their joy had suffered no diminishment. With these officers, however, it was different. The atmosphere was chilly.

Later on, the atmosphere was lurid, not chilly.

The Germans and I exchanged a few polite banalities; then the commandant conducted me to another little group. Here again it was no better. I had a thousand questions on the tip of my tongue, but as I looked from the faces of the prisoners to the face of the commandant, I felt that it would be waste of time to put these questions. These officers evidently felt that they were being butchered to make a Canadian holiday, and resented the butchering. I, being their butcher, naturally resented their resentment, and felt indignant with them for refusing to proceed as lambs to the slaughter.

I determined to get some information out of them "quick sticks," as an elderly relative of mine expressively remarks.

"How do you think the war is going?" I briskly inquired of the nearest officer.

He jumped.

"I think it is going well," he answered, proudly. "Very goot!"

"Do you?" I replied. "I don't agree with you."

"When do you think it will end?" he asked. Two or three of the others drew a trifle nearer and waited with interest for my answer.

"I think," I said at length, profoundly, "that it will end in about a year."

To my surprise the Germans laughed.

"You really think so?" asked one, looking more friendly.

"Yes," said I, rather surprised. "What do you think?"

"A month," he answered cheerfully. "Not more than a month."

"What?" I exclaimed in amazement. "You really think that Germany will make terms in a month?"

"Will dictate terms," he amended, smiling pleasantly at me. "She will have finished all in a month."

I got my breath. I laughed. I opened my mouth to speak——

. . . .

The commandant looked at me anxiously.

"There are some officers over there whom I think you would like to meet," he said firmly.

I knew it would happen. Always, always, both in Halifax and Amherst, just as I was getting into a really interesting conversation, I was solemnly trotted away to "fresh fields and pastures new." Now there is a great deal of the bulldog in my composition. As I walked meekly away with the commandant I silently registered a vow. I kept the vow. A little later on I shall tell what the vow was, and how I kept it; and if the commandant ever sees this I know that he will forgive me.

The Halifax prisoners seemed to be very comfortably housed. They had pianos, games of cards, and various other contrivances for killing time. Yet they did not seem nearly so contented as the men at Amherst. One can understand this, of course. Most of the Amherst prisoners are accustomed to a life of toil, and the ease, good food, warm bedding, and freedom for pleasure represented to them a very tolerable holiday. But to these officers imprisonment was a bore.

"Have you everything you want here?" I asked one.

"Yes, thank you," he replied, politely, but not enthusiastically. "Except that the rooms are pretty dark—and, as you see, eight officers are housed in one room. Now, in Germany——"

"Yes!" I cried. "In Germany?——"

"Only three or four officers are put together in one room," he averred. "And then—although we have nothing to complain of—but in Germany the prisoners get a much better time."

Visions of the "better time" afforded to prisoners in the fatherland floated red before my eyes. I remembered Major Vandaleur and the treatment meted out to him. I thought of the men whose jailors had accosted them as "English swine." I thought of hunger and cold and insult endured by wounded men—and I looked at the officer. He jumped.

"They do have a better time," he averred earnestly. "I see you do not believe me—but they do. In one place"—I think he said it was the "Wurtz" mountains, but I am not quite sure—"the prisoners are taken for long walks every day in the beautiful hills. Sometimes they are taken to a restaurant in the town for their mid-day meal. Sometimes"——

"Do you realize," I interrupted him suddenly, "that this is the most interesting and most extraordinary thing that I have heard for many a long day? Where did you learn these things?"

"In letters from home," he answered. "Many of us have heard."

"Won't you?" I asked, "let me have a copy of these letters? If you can find them—if you can give me these extracts relating to the treatment of prisoners—I shall see that they are published in Canada, and I shall look up the exact reports which have been made by neutrals of these camps."

"I can do better," he stated positively. "Somewhere I am sure I have a picture of some of the German camps—a reproduced photograph. If I can find it you shall have it."

I thanked him. Up to date I have received neither the extracts from letters nor the reproduced photos.

Ontario Provides a Hospital for Soldiers Suffering From Shock.

Ontario has again come to the front in a most tangible way in connection with the war. This time it is not with a gift of money, but in the equally practical and necessary way of caring for those who are suffering through the stress of battle. Recognizing that the war has produced special conditions among the disabled soldiers, the Canadian Hospitals Commission has arranged with the Ontario Government, through the Department of the Provincial Secretary, to establish a military hospital for the treatment of mental and shock cases.

For this purpose the present hospital for mental diseases at Cobourg is to be converted into a military hospital, with a staff and equipment provided by the present organization of the Department. This means that soldiers from Ontario who are brought back suffering from shock will be received into an institution specially maintained to give them proper treatment. So far as is known, Ontario is the only Province where such an innovation has been attempted, and it is regarded by those who are familiar with the wastage produced by the present war as one of the most needed branches of the medical service.

The Cobourg hospital will be made immediately available by the transfer of some 180 female patients to the new institution at Whitby. Special equipment such as continuous baths, vapor baths, electro-therapeutic baths and other apparatus will be installed at Cobourg, while detached buildings will be erected from time to time to provide for an increased accommodation up to 500 patients. The staff will be selected from the most competent in the various institutions of the Province, and should the demand warrant it, part of the new hospital at Whitby can also be used.

In making use of the facilities of the Province for this work the Canadian Hospitals Commission is not divesting itself of any responsibility. The arrangement with the Ontario Government provides for a fixed allowance per day for each patient. In this way a large capital expenditure is avoided on the one hand for the Dominion, and there will be no delay in commencing treatment for those men who are now on their way to Canada or will be immediately sent here.

Only Four Blinded Canadians.

A statement issued by the Military Hospitals' Commission recently calls attention to the fact that an entirely erroneous idea prevails regarding the number of the members of the Canadian expeditionary force who have lost their eyesight as a result of their war service. Various agencies have been started for the collection of money in order to provide homes and special training for blinded Canadian soldiers, and unauthorized persons are making collections for this purpose.

"It should be distinctly understood," said Secretary Scammell, "that these collections are quite unnecessary."

The Military Hosptials' Commission is entirely competent to deal with all blinded soldiers who may come under its care.

"Up to the present four blinded soldiers have returned to Canada, four only; not four hundred or four thousand, as some people imagine. Of these, one was trained at St. Dunstans, England, and is now earning his livelihood as an insurance agent in his home town; his typewritten letters are a model for many sighted typists. Another lives on a farm with his friends, who are well to do. A third is suffering from shock blindness, and may regain his sight. This man returned from Liverpool on the Hesperian, and when thrown into the water after the ship was torpedoed he regained his sight temporarily, but has since had a relapse.

READY FOR GARDEN PARTY

Gay Silks in the Shape of Coats Garnish White Frocks.

With the vogue for white gowns comes the contrast of gay coats, hats and parasols. The picture shows a dashing garment of many colored brocade set off with patch pockets and belt of silk cord and tassels. Worn with a white net skirt and picture hat, this is the ultra outfit for outdoor functions.

YOUR NEW BUNGALOW.

Hints About Furnishing the Small Summer Cottage.

There are many houses in excellent taste and more or less modern where the latest novelties in painted ware, furniture and the like are decidedly out of place, but just picture a dear little bungalow on squatty, colonial lines aching to be furnished with just these odd little painted bits of brightness.

If the hall seems a bit somber you may set on the table besides the white candle base lamp painted with birds and flowers and topped with a colored silk shade, a white rack of tin for letters. At first you might think it a toast rack, but you wouldn't want to put toast between flowers and birds in gaudy coloring. It's just the receptacle, however, for exciting things like letters.

Near a side door on a small table or from a hook on the wall place a bright green painted tin basket to hold the gardening tools. A garden hat of cretonne may hang from it. They will help in the decorative scheme.

In the sunniest window of the living or dining room you may have a white wicker flower stand. It is fitted with a tin trough which lifts out for refilling, watering of the plants, etc. An arch of white wicker extends over this box, and one can just imagine a small climbing rose finding its way along this trellis. A white bird cage is suspended in the middle directly above the plant box, where a silver throated canary may trill his loudest among the plants and flowers.

Right in the same living room or on the porch one may tuck this mending basket without any fear of its jarring on the artistic and critical eye. It is a nice, plump market basket of stout wicker, rather round as to shape. Two flaps of stiffened cretonne are edged with a cotton braid and maybe lifted up like the lids of a market basket. This will be found a dustproof hiding place for mending or light sewing when the outdoors beckons.

On Being Natural.

The world has established certain standards of etiquette for those who would be recognized as well bred and cultured. The earlier in life these standards are adopted the better for the woman. Fortunate, indeed, is she who has cultivated early in life a soft voice, poise, grace of carriage and the "pretty" way of doing things. She need have no fear that in a moment of excitement she will forget herself and be guilty of a faux pas.

Absolutely destructive of naturalness in manner is self consciousness. This affliction amounts at times almost to an obsession. It causes women to shout who wish to speak low; it leads often to an assumption of bravado, causing criticism that may be unjust, but is invited and unavoidable.

It is a gentle art, the art of being natural; one that is essential to every woman who wishes to be regarded as interesting, attractive and popular. No woman with an ounce of brains will allow herself to become the victim of affectation if she would get the most that is possible out of life.

Rich Strawberry Shortcake.

Two cupfuls of flour, quarter of a cupful of sugar, four teaspoonfuls of baking powder, half a teaspoonful of salt, one egg, a third of a cupful of butter, one tablespoonful of lard and a third of a cupful of milk. Mix carefully, roll in two cakes and bake in two pie tins. When browned split and butter generously, fill layers with fresh strawberries crushed in sugar, pile berries atop and over all pour a pint of sweet cream.

A Sleepy Time Story For the Littlest Folks in the House.

FORGETFULNESS OF A KING.

How He Caused His Daughter a Great Deal of Unhappiness—What a Fairy Accomplished.

Hello, said Uncle Ben to Polly Ann and Little Ned; I'm just in time to tel' you a story. It is about

THE PRINCESS' WISH.

Once upon a time there lived a little princess. She was so beautiful that the king gave her anything she wished. One day she expressed a desire for a doll, a truly wonderful doll, that could talk and walk and sleep in a flower. This the king promised to get for her. He forgot all about it the next day, however, and was much surprised to hear his little daughter say to the queen: "Mamma, I am quite unhappy. Father has not yet given me the doll I asked for."

The king immediately sent out and got her a doll that could walk and talk and was so small that it could sit in a flower. But this was not what the princess wanted. She wanted a doll that really lived. In vain did the king advertise by heralds for such a doll.

Meanwhile the princess was sitting at the window gazing out at the stars. She did not care for the many beautiful toys lying around her. She had foolishly set her heart on that doll. A beautiful rosebush climbed up to her window and was literally covered with the sweet smelling flowers. While the princess was gazing at one of the buds she saw a little green worm creep toward the heart of it. Now, the princess detested any kind of a worm, but when she heard a timid, soft voice say, "Help me, ah, help me!" her heart was touched. Reaching forward, she brushed off the worm, which fell to the hard stone pavement below. Then a little flower spirit rose up from the flower and said to the princess: "For saving me from such a horrible death I will let you have one wish. Tell me what you want most." So the princess wished that she had a doll that could walk and talk and sleep in a flower.

The fairy looked grave. "There are only fairies that do all you want, and I know that I could not get you one. For the great service you have done me, however, I myself will be your fairy. But I cannot come off the rose vine, for I belong to one of the roses. You can sit here whenever you want to, and I will come and talk to you."

The princess was happy then, for she had all she wished. Forever after that, with the little fairy to guide her along the path of life, the princess lived happily.

The Common Hen.

When you come right down to natural history facts there is no beast or bird about which a boy or girl knows more than about the common barnyard hen, which is a very industrious individual. But there may be some boys and girls who do not know that the hen and her male companion, the rooster, came originally from Asia. In the jungles of India they used to roam wild and were great fighters. When a couple of them engaged in battle the one that was victorious would shout it out with loud crowing.

There is also a negro variety that has not only black feathers, but a black skin.

You no doubt have seen the Cochins that came originally from China, and you may have heard or read that the Greeks and Romans and the Egyptians thought a great deal of the hen.

A Valuable Tree.

Whittier, in Los Angeles county, can perhaps claim the most valuable fruit tree in California. It is an avocado (alligator pear) and is insured against wind and fire by Lloyd's of London to the amount of $30,000. This tree in 1914 produced 3,000 pears, which averaged the grower 50 cents each; it also produced $1,500 worth of bud wood, making a total production of $3,000 for the year.

A Menagerie Infant.

Not long ago the menagerie of a great big circus received an addition that was hailed with delight by the circus folks. It was a baby camel, a cute and awkward little fellow, covered with soft brown hair. Sad to say, the baby's mother was unable to nurse him, so the kind hearted keeper fitted a rubber nipple on the neck of a bottle, and little Mr. Camel soon learned how to take his meals.

SO DEMURE.

JUST NERVES.

Don't Let Lowered Vitality Run You Down in the Spring.

If you should go to the doctor and tell him that you are given to being gloomy and blue at times; that you have apprehensions of dreadful things; that you are supersensitive; that you are constipated, given to headaches and vertigo or to other similar ailments the doctor would know that you were suffering from a case of "nerves." Naturally when you realize that these symptoms are signposts to "nerves" you can appreciate how impossible it is for a nervous woman to appear charming and beautiful. If these facts were only understood more universally by women they would be ashamed to admit they had "nerves," and they would do all they could to cure them.

No matter how talented a woman may be, how clever, how well read or how interesting, if she is a nervous wreck she will find that little by little her friends will see less and less of her until in time she will find it a rare thing to have a caller. Not because the friends mean to be unkind, but because human nature is so constituted that it longs for happiness and warmth, not for sorrow and gloom.

The fundamental cause of nervousness is lowered vitality. So the wise woman will do everything she can to keep her vitality up to its highest mark. If she feels that her vitality is ebbing away she will stop everything and concentrate on building up the system, the nerve force and supply.

Rhubarb Pie.

Three cupfuls of rhubarb, one cupful of sugar, two tablespoonfuls of flour, one tablespoonful of milk. Crust: One and one-half cupfuls of flour, two tablespoonfuls of lard or shortening, one-half teaspoonful of salt.

Sift the flour and salt into the bowl; add the shortening and rub in very lightly with the tips of the fingers until well mixed; add a few drops of cold water at a time until you can shape. Divide in two parts; roll out thin. Dust pie tin with flour, put in dough, cover with one tablespoonful of flour; then add the rhubarb, which has been washed, skinned and cut into one-half inch pieces; sprinkle with one tablespoonful of flour and brush edges with milk. Roll out the top crust, cover and press edges together. Make two or three cross cuts on top (for the steam to come out), brush top with milk and bake in a moderate oven thirty-five to forty minutes. Rhubarb pie is one of the most difficult to make, the rhubarb being so watery. Always be sure to put flour under and over the rhubarb before adding the sugar.

Strawberry Sunshine.

Take four cupfuls of white sugar and half a cupful of water. Boil these together for four minutes; then add four cupfuls of large strawberries and boil ten minutes longer. Pour out in shallow dishes and set in sun for two days; then put in jelly glasses and cover with paraffin. This is the most delicious way of preparing strawberries, as they retain their natural flavor.

Honey and Nut Sandwich.

Use white bread spread with honey into which some chopped nuts have been mixed.

"My first husband had much better sense than you have." "I can't see it. We were both foolish enough to marry you."

APPETITE FIRST.

Good Digestion Depends on Satisfaction With Meals.

Pleasure is absolutely required for the proper digestion of food, that thrilling telephone message to palate and stomach which the sight and smell of good things bring about. This delicious anticipation starts the gastric juices flowing, liberates the secretions of saliva in the mouth, and so prepares the way for speedier digestion and assimilation than would come without it. When the mental pleasantness is absent, in fact, one can never be sure of the stomach's acceptance of food. The nausea one so often feels after eating is a sure indication, among others, that the stomach and palate have had little interest in the diet. Hence the tremendous importance of good cooking, since the finer qualities of the senses are needed to charm away the indigestion forever lurking in foodstuffs.

If we could live without eating we surely would, but since we cannot there is nothing to do but get all the good that is to be found in food. The natural waste of the body is one twenty-fourth of its weight daily, and consequently we have to supply like materials. These elements of the body, chemically speaking, are nitrogenous and non-nitrogenous. The nitrogenous foodstuffs are both animal and vegetable, and are taken into the body in the form of proteids, which are subdivided into numerous other essences necessary for life and health.

All of these essences are constructive, the builders of energy, mental and physical. They stimulate the changes natural to the body and generate its heat. When food is badly cooked the power of the unseen helpers is lost or weakened, and malnutrition, if not actual ill health, is the result. It is food which makes our blood, bones, and flesh, so if we want these good we should have the food good. That mysterious thing called the soul is also in bondage to the fineness or coarseness of our eating, all of the substances appropriated by the veins and lymphathics seeming to change it to some degree.

Light Sleepers.

Should you be a restless sleeper, should sleep come to you only by fits and starts, try simple remedies and do not plunge into narcotics or stimulants—at least not until the others have failed. A famous English physician is quoted as saying:

"I can cure the worst case of insomnia in this manner: When the patient has retired give her a heaping bowl of bread and milk with just a dash of salt to season it. This will draw the blood from the head to the stomach, it will quiet the nerves and put the entire body in a healthy glow, and in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred the patient sleeps restfully."

Another tasty dose to take which will induce sleep is a cold orange just before retiring. There are certain sedative as well as stimulating qualities in an orange, and it is probably one of the most efficacious fruits that can be taken for this purpose.

Putting Women on Land.

Since the beginning of the war the National Land Council of England has been training and placing women on the land for stock-breeding, fruit and market gardening, and other branches of agricultural work. Upwards of 400 women have been training, and over 2,000 have been placed for ordinary farm work and market gardening. They are now organizing individuals and large and small groups for the spring and summer work.

Minced Clams on Toast.

Materials. — Twenty-five clams, four tablespoonfuls melted butter, two tablespoonfuls chopped parsley, salt, pepper and lemon juice and two-thirds cupful clam liquor.

Directions.—Open and mince the clams, saving all the liquor. Melt the butter, add the minced clams and liquor, cook three minutes and put in the parsley and lemon juice. Heat thoroughly, season and serve on toast.

Apple Snowballs.

Boil two teacupfuls of rice in milk until nearly done; then strain it, pare and core as many apples as there are portions to be served, put a small quantity of sugar and a clove in each apple, lay on a small floured cloth, covering each with rice, tie each ball separately and then boil until the apples are tender. Half an hour will usually be enough. Serve with a good Rocky mountain sauce.

Scarcity of Bottles.

Empty bottles are being collected and sold by Boy Scouts in Belfast. The scarcity of bottles at present makes this a very remunerative occupation. The movement originated with the Boy Scouts' Association, of which the Lord Mayor is president, the idea being to raise funds to provide a recreation hut at the front.

Escaloped Cabbage.

Cook cabbage in boiling salted water until tender, drain and chop if desired, put in a buttered baking dish, pour over a white sauce, cover with buttered crumbs and bake until brown.

Raisin Clusters With Salted Almonds

Take small clusters of selected raisins, make a small incision in blossom end of each raisin and remove the seeds. In each incision force a salted almond, leaving more than half the almond exposed.

Glazed Sweet Potatoes.

Wash, pare, and cook in boiling water until tender or use canned sweet potatoes. Cut in lengthwise slices, put in a buttered baking dash, spread with butter, sprinkle with sugar, and bake until brown.

A sharp appetite doesn't mind a dull knife.

NEW LINGERIE.

Suggestions For Women Who Make Their Own Underwear.

Women who do no other sewing sometimes make their own lingerie, at least part of it. Although the modern lingerie is so dainty, so elaborate, it is quite possible to make it if one follows the new patterns carefully, for they are, of course, designed by the best designers that money can hire, and they are, withal, practical.

To begin with, there are the usual patterns in the new silhouette. All underwear has taken on flaring lines. So there are patterns with a flare for all the lingerie one might desire.

There is the new petticoat that measures from three and a half to four yards around the bottom, a petticoat every one will need to wear with the summer's full skirted frocks. Such a petticoat can be finished in scallops or deep points at the bottom, or a straight flounce trimmed with lace or ruching can be used. And it can be made with or without an extension under the flounce and with or without a dust ruffle.

There is a most attractive pattern for a nightgown with revers, back and front. There is a V shaped opening back and front, and little revers turn back from this opening. The gown is belted in at the empire waist line or left hanging, but the belted form seems prettier.

There is, too, the sleeveless nightgown, with points of the front and back meeting on the shoulders. This, too, is left flowing or else belted in, as one prefers.

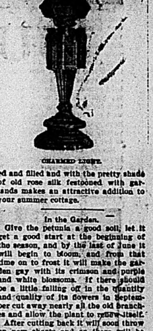
There is a simply made princess slip with the required width at the bottom. It is in two pieces, shaped in at the waist and fitted by means of ribbons run through beading at the belt. It is made with ribbon or lace straps over the shoulder or with a shaped neck.

A lovely nightgown pattern for flouncing shows the embroidered edge toward the neck and with an inset strip of the flouncing back and front to form a shallow yoke above the high waist line.

MELLOW GLOW.

A Lamp For Summer Porches and Bungalow Living Rooms.

With the lightening up of winter heaviness for summer convenience comes this lamp of glass standard hung with crystals. It is easily cleaned and filled and with the pretty shade of old rose silk festooned with garlands makes an attractive addition to your summer cottage.



CHARMED LIGHT.

In the Garden.

Give the petunia a good soil, let it get a good start at the beginning of the season, and by the last of June it will begin to bloom, and from that time on to frost it will make the garden gay with its crimson and purple and white blossoms. If there should be a little falling off in the quantity and quality of its flowers in September cut away nearly all the old branches and allow the plant to renew itself.

After cutting back it will soon throw up new shoots and on these will be borne flowers quite as large and fine as those which characterized the production of the earlier part of the season, and there will be plenty of them until the coming of cold weather.

Broiled Swordfish With Horseradish.

Wash and wipe dry and season with salt and pepper slices of swordfish or halibut. Broil ten or twelve minutes, over a charcoal fire if possible. Serve with a horseradish sauce. Cream one-third cupful of butter, add two rounding tablespoonfuls grated horseradish, one teaspoonful made mustard, one saltspoonful of salt and two tablespoonfuls of hot vinegar.

Rhubarb Conserve.

Three pounds of sugar, three and a half pounds of rhubarb cut in small pieces, juice of three lemons and grated rind. Boil this thirty minutes; then add a cupful of chopped blanched almonds. Chop about the size of a bean. Boil from twenty to thirty minutes longer. Put in jelly glasses. This is very fine.

Deviled Almond Sandwich.

Chop the almonds and spread rather thickly on bread and butter. Press the slices together and cut in pretty shapes.

MILITARY MATTERS AT BARRIEFIELD HEIGHTS

RANGE EXPERIMENTS

Under the direction of Lt.-Col. Brown, G.S.O., a series of experiments will be conducted on the ranges in camp, to establish a trajectory table for the Colt and Lewis machine guns. At present, all instruction is given according to the tables of the Maxim, the Vickers, the Lee-Enfield or Ross Rifles, and as there is some dispute as to the reliability of these tables when applied to the machine guns in use in the C.E.F., it is felt that a table should be compiled to settle the question of the trajectory of such important weapons as the Colt and Lewis guns. The fact that both weapons are using the .303 ammunition which is being used in the Ross Rifles, is not satisfactory proof that the trajectories are identical, as there are elements that govern the velocity of a bullet, other than the explosive used. The experiments which Lt.-Col. Brown, G.S.O. intends directing, will prove interesting, and will furnish information very much needed in the machine gun instruction of the C. E. F.

THE 238TH COMING

There is a rumor that Barriefield camp will probably have the 238th battalion here from Ottawa. This battalion is recruiting rapidly, and a few months in Barriefield would be helpful to its training. The 235th of Bowmanville, and the 240th of Renfrew, are also possibilities, and if Barriefield gets these, together with the field batteries and ammunition column from the Dry Dock Barracks in the city, it will help to compensate for the loss of the four battalions who have left for Valcartier.

OVER 200 JITNEYS

There are now well over 200 jitneys carrying passengers from the camp to the city. It was at first thought that the work would fall flat on the removal of some of the battalions, but there seems to be no difference in the number on the road.

The cars have certainly made money this year, although at the end of the season due to the condition of the road there will be a big bill of deperciation in the value of some of the cars.

Constant running at a high rate of speed over such a road tears the best of cars to pieces, and only the most careful drivers will be able to keep this at a minimum. The traffic has been constant, however, and the cost of running will be more than overcome by the income from the trade.

NOTES

The men of the 155th Battalion are undergoing inoculation. Over 600 of the men have already had their first torture, and many are complaining of sore arms.

A board on clothing met in the lines of the 155th Battalion yesterday afternoon. The board was composed of Lt.-Col. Gillespie, chairman, with Major Wallbridge and Capt. Noble as members.

Four recruits in camp from Belleville yesterday afternoon for the 155th Battalion. Lt.-Col. Adams keeps getting new men every day.

The lines of the 155th Battalion are clean, orderly, and well drained.

Sergt. H. Holton, 155th Battalion, has returned from attending an armourers' sergeants' course at Quebec.

The 93rd Battalion men certainly appreciate their "big top," and it is in use every night. The men seem to thoroughly enjoy themselves playing the piano or listening to others giving out music. It is such an attraction that the number going to the city has considerably lessened.

The executive of the West Peterboro Liberal-Conservative Association presented a pair of field glasses to Capt. J. H. Burnham, M.P., paymaster of the 93rd Battalion. President C. E. Moore and W. H. Moore, K.C., made the presentation. A resolution approving Capt. Burnham's representation of the riding and commending him for enlisting and for his gifts to the Red Cross and other patriotic work was passed.

WEDDING BELLS

SCHILROTH—GEROW

A very interesting wedding was solemnized last evening at the home of Mr. A. Gibson, Dundas St., when Miss Ida Jean Gerow, a well-known young lady of this city, was united in the holy bonds of matrimony, to Mr. Geo. Christopher Schilroth, of Detroit.

The wedding ceremony was performed by Rev. J. N. Clarry, in the presence of a number of intimate friends.

The bride was becomingly attired in a gown of white corded silk, trimmed with white crepe de chene and pink rose buds, and carried a bouquet of white bridal roses. The bridesmaid, Miss Elsie Schilroth, sister of the groom, was tastily gowned in a suit of black taffeta silk, trimmed with pink crepe de chene and pink rose buds, and wore a corsage bouquet of pink sweet peas. Mr. W. B. Gibson, assisted the groom.

After the ceremony the bridal party partook of a bountiful wedding feast, which was all that could be desired.

The happy young couple will leave this city on Monday for Western points, and after a short honeymoon will reside in Detroit, Mich., where the groom has a costly furnished residence awaiting his bride.

The great popularity of the bride was manifested by the many beautiful wedding gifts received, which were sent from friends, far and near.

The many friends of the young couple will unite with the Intelligencer in extending best wishes.

ALKALI MAKES SOAP BAD FOR WASHING HAIR

Most soaps and prepared shampoos contain too much alkali, which is very injurious, as it dries the scalp and makes the hair brittle.

The best thing to use is just plain mulsified cocoanut oil, for this is pure and entirely greaseless. It's very cheap, and beats the most expensive soaps or anything else all to pieces. You can get this at any drug store, and a few ounces will last the whole family for months.

Simply moisten the hair with water and rub it in, about a teaspoonful is all that is required. It makes an abundance of rich, creamy lather, cleanses thoroughly, and rinses out easily. The hair dries quickly and evenly, and is soft, fresh looking, bright, fluffy, wavy and easy to handle. Besides it loosens and takes out every particle of dust, dirt and dandruff.

The Acting Sub On a Destroyer.

A Naval Study of a Youngster's First Night Out When He Is Alone in Command.

(By "Taffrail" in the London Daily Mail).

He was a very junior young officer indeed when the powers that he first gladdened his heart and ruined his clothes by sending him to a destroyer. A mere sub-lieutenant with "(acting)" after his name, which, as any proper "sub" will tell you, is a sign of extreme juniority. Moreover, the single gold stripe on his monkey jacket was still suspiciously new and terribly untarnished.

Not so very long before he had been a "snotty" (midshipman) in a battleship, a mere "dog's body," who had to obey the orders of almost every officer in the ship except those few who happened to be junior to him. It is true that he exercised his authority and a severe discipline on those midshipmen who had the misfortune to be a year or so younger than himself, and that he expressed a lordly contempt for the assistant clerk. But he lived in the gun-room, slept in a hammock, kept all his worldly possessions in a sea-chest, and bathed and dressed in the company of fifteen other boisterous young gentlemen.

But Always Busy

Then he had his watches to keep at sea and his picket boat to run in harbor, while his spare time was fully employed in mastering the subtleties of gunnery, torpedo work, and electricity, and in rubbing up his rapidly dwindling knowledge of engineering and x and y. It was well that he did so, for at some distant period when the war ceased he would have to pass certain strigent examinations before he could be confirmed in the rank of lieutenant.

So on the whole he had been kept fairly busy, more particularly as watch-keeping at the guns with the ship at sea in all weathers in war time was not all jam.

But when he was sent to a destroyer he found the life was more strenuous, for the little ship spent far more time at sea. The weather was sometimes very bad indeed, and at first he was sea-sick, but it was always a consolation to have a cabin of his own, to live in the wardroom, and to be treated as a responsible officer instead of a mere "make learn."

He had to work at least six times harder than he had on a battleship. For one thing, he had all the charts to correct and to keep up to date, no small labor with pencil, dividers, parallel rulers, and much red ink in these days of war, prolific minefields, dangerous areas, extinguished lights, and removed buoys. He also assisted with the ship's gunnery, and at sea kept a regular three watches, eight hours out of every twenty-four, with the first lieutenant and gunner. But it was the sense of responsibility and the feeling that he was doing really useful work which gladdened his heart and kept him keen and energetic.

Lots To Learn

"Have you ever been in a destroyer before?" his commanding officer had asked him as soon as he joined.

"No, sir."

"Ever kept officer of the watch at sea?"

Again the answer was in the negative.

"Well, you'll have to do it here, my son. If you want to know anything come to me. There's nothing much in it so long as you keep your eyes skinned. You'll soon learn."

The skipper had said there was nothing in it, but the first night at sea he found himself alone on the bridge in charge of the ship he thought differently.

A light cruiser squadron and two flotillas of destroyers were steaming at 20 knots in close formation without lights. The night was as black as the wolf's mouth, and the rapidly rising wind cut the tops off the short seas and sent them flying over the bridge in constant showers of spray. Moreover, the perpetual pitching and rolling soon gave our friend a squeamish and altogether nasty sensation in the region of his waistcoat, and in ten minutes, by which time the water had found its way through his oilskins and was trickling merrily down the back of his neck, he felt miserable.

The ship was in the middle of a line of eight destroyers. Two hundred yards ahead of him he could just discern the dim black blur of the next ahead and the occasional splutter of white-grey foam in her wake as her stern lifted to the seas. At times when a driving rain squall came down from windward, he seemed to lose sight of her altogether, and, through in experience and in his anxiety to catch up, increased the revolutions of the engines not wisely but rather too much. The next thing that happened was that the squall cleared, and he found himself almost on top of her, and had to put the helm over and sheer out of line to avoid a collision. At the same time he reduced speed to drop back into station. Sometimes he reduced more than he should, with the consequence that the next astern nearly humped him, while the leader shot ahead and vanished into the darkness like a ghost.

The Deadly Sin

It was then that the horrible thoughts of being scrubbed for the deadly sin of losing touch with the flotilla and meandering about the ocean like a lost sheep looking for his next ahead. If he did not succeed in finding her somebody's blood would be required.

It was rather trying for a novice, and many times he remembered the commanding officer's standing orders. "Do not hesitate to call me if you are in doubt or difficulty," they said, with the "Do not" underlined twice. Should he rouse the skipper or should he not? He was asleep in his clothes on the cushioned settee in the charthouse underneath the bridge and would be up in ten seconds if required. But the acting "sub" did hesitate to call him unnecessarily. After all, it was quite possible that the "C.O." might be rather peevish if he was hauled out for no reason. He was not really "in difficulty," he persuaded himself, and he certainly did not wish to patent the fact that he could not keep the ship in station whatever the circumstances.

No: he would not call him. He solved the problem by increasing the speed of the engines ever so slightly above the normal, and five minutes later heaved a sight of profound relief as the black shape of the next ahead hove up out of the darkness.

In an hour his helpless feeling had gone and he was jogging merrily along without any difficulty.

Skipper Kept Sure.

But the skipper, who was accustomed to the ways and tricks of newly joined officers generally, and sub-lieutenants in particular, had been awake the whole time. He always slept with one eye open at sea, and as the charthouse was immediately beneath the bridge and the shafting of the wheel and engine-room telegraphs passed within a few feet of his head, he knew at once from their agitated movement when anything really desperate was happening. So when the helm went over and the revolution telegraph revolved frantically five or six times in quick succession he yawned wearily, flung off his rug, and sat up.

"I won't go up and interfere unless he sends for me," he thought to himself. "He must learn." He had been a "sub" in a destroyer himself. The summons never came.

At three o'clock, by which time the dawn was breaking, the "C.O." did appear on the bridge.

"Well, Sub?" he asked. "What d'you think of station keeping at night?"

"Quite easy, sir," said that young officer blatantly, quite unaware of the acoustic properties of the charthouse. "As easy as falling off a log."

"Did you have any difficulty in seeing the next ahead?"

"Not much, sir. It was a bit dark at times, though."

The "C.O." smiled to himself. He knew.

The "sub." he has passed out of the "acting" stage, is now an expert at the game, and, to use the phraseology of his latest confidential report, is "energetic and trustworthy" and a most promising and capable officer."

Canadian Press Special.

OTTAWA, July 7.—It is officially announced that the Ninety-Fourth, One Hundred and First, and One Hundred and Fourth Battalions, Eleven and Thirteenth Canadian Mounted Rifles with artillery, and Royal Canadian Regiment drafts and Army Service Corps detachments, totalling 5,992 men, have arrived in England.

VIOLENT FIGHTING ON WHOLE WESTERN FRONT

Enemy Starts Heavy Assault at Dawn, and Gain Temporary Footing to The Extent of Three Hundred Yards, But are Beaten Back With Heavy Losses—Allies Gain New Positions Where They are Firmly Established

Canadian Press Special

LONDON, July 7.—(Official statement.)—This morning in certain factors of the battlefield east of Albert resumed a vigorous offensive at dawn. The Germans at same time launched heavy attacks on our new trenches in the vicinity of the Ancre and north of Fricourt, with the result that violent fighting is now in progress along the whole front between the Ancre and Montauban.

Up to the present several important tactical successes have been gained by our infantry in the vicinity of Ovillers, La Roisselle and Cont-Almaison, but northwest of Thiepval the enemy succeeded temporarily in regaining two or three hundred yards of lost ground. Operations of last night, before the resumption of the offensive reported in the foregoing statement are described in an earlier official statement as follows:—Last night the enemy heavily bombarded our new positions at Bernaffay Wood and Mont Auban and near La Roisselle, using in some places lachrimatory shells. Eastward of La Roisselle, after severe fighting in which the enemy suffered heavy casualties, we captured another trench on a front of one thousand yards, where we are now firmly established.

Southwest of Thiepval a determined attack on our new lines was completely crushed. The enemy's artillery was particularly active in Loos salient and opposite Hulluch. Our artillery shelled the enemy's communication trenches and billets at various places. We successfully sprung two mines, opposite Auchy and Hulluch.

ENEMY AIRSHIPS RAID TOWN SLAUGHTER WOMEN AND CHILDREN

Canadian Press Special.

PARIS, July 7.—(Afternoon statement.)—The night passed quietly on both sides of the River Somme. On the left bank of the Meuse there was intermittent bombardment last night while on the right bank artillery fighting became very violent in the vicinity of Thiaumont works and in the sectors of Fleury and Chenois. At the Le Pretre Wood the enemy yesterday delivered a small attack upon one of oru trenches, but they were at once driven out of the position, where they succeeded in gaining lodgement. In the same sector a surprise attack by us was in all respects successful along a front of two hundred yards. Our grenade throwers cleaned out trenches of the enemy, and we brought back some prisoners.

German aeroplanes yesterday threw down several bombs on the open town of Lure. Eleven persons killed and three were wounded. All the victims were either women or children except one soldier. This was an act of reprisal for our aerial activity of July 6th, when one of our air squadrons dropped with success forty bombs on the railway junction at Hem, west of Charleville. On return trip from this point there were a number of engagements with German machines in which our escorting aeroplane took part. Two German machines were brought down, one near Mezieres and other in the region of Leffin court.

Valuable Find Seventy-Two Miles From Ottawa is Reported

OTTAWA, July 5.—New and valuable deposites of Gatineau zinc have been discovered by a mining engineer, C. D. McFarlane, and a prospector, Dennis Callahan, formerly of Haileybury, in the vicinity of Burbidge station, which is about 72 miles from Ottawa. The discovery is of special interest in connection with the use of zinc in munitions masuracture.

Callahan made a discovery last fall which attracted much attention, and McFarlane was called to investigate. The deposits looked good and men have been working in the vicinity since. This spring, however, they have made what is claimed to be much more valuable discoveries north of the limestone area in which they were first prospecting.

They have trenched across the ore vein at intervals of 1,400 feet, showing ore in places from six to fifteen feet. Mr. McFarlane, who states that the deposits are rich, says that the mineral is much better than that found previously.

Present quotations for spelter are around 11 and 12 cents per pound, but the normal price in Canada is six cents. Mr. McFarlane states that at this price the deposits so far uncovered would pay handsomely. A company probably will be organized to operate the mine.

An American expert who investigated the discovery found the duty and cost of exportation to the United States would be prohibitive, so a new industry may spring up in the Gatineau district.

GUNS ADVANCED FOR THE SECOND PHASE OF DRIVE

Another Stupendous Allied Offensive In Preparation — Foch's Forces Continue to Progress North of Peronne — The Initial Rush to be Re-enacted With Even Greater Force Purpose is to Drive Germans out of France

LONDON, July 7.—(Special.) —The great offensive movement of the allies on the Somme, designed to drive the Germans from France, has entered its second phase. The sixth day of the battle was marked by a realignment of forces by both sides in preparation for the greater clash to come. The territorial changes during the day were of only minor importance, although the fighting was sharp and determined at many points of the line.

The first rush through the shell-swept German lines at an end, the French and British are already represented as preparing to re-enact the operation by which they were enabled to sweep forward to within two and a half miles of the German key position of Peronne. The big guns are being brought up across the conquered territory for a renewed preparatory bombardment against the German second and third lines.

This situation having been foreseen, every effort is being put forward by the Ministry of Munitions to keep the supplies of shells for the armies in the field unhindered. The workers at home, knowing that now as much depends upon them as upon the soldiers in the field, are working three and four shifts to turn out the much-needed shells.

Some dissatisfaction is being expressed at the meagre reports received from Gen. Haig. The newspapers are takingthi s matter up and inquiring why it is that, while the French commanders find time to let the people know just what the men are doing in the field, the British populace has to be satisfied with brief, unsatisfactory information.

TURKS COUNTERED BY RUSSIANS IN TERRIFIC ENGAGEMENT

PETROGRAD, July 7.—(Special.)—In energetic fighting in the Caucasus the Russians are striking for Baiburt and they are also on the advance in the region of Platana. The official statement of general Caucasus headquarters follows:

"In the region of Platana our troops are progressing. Between the Taurus and Choruk we repulsed enemy counter-attacks and drove back a Turkish attack on Choruk, in which our men carried an enemy work on the heights. In their attacks the Turks used asphyxiating bombs.

"In the region of Baiburt where some enemy positions were carried, we captured a large quantity of arms, cartridges, grenades and other war material.

"In the direction of Diabekr, in the eastern Emphrates valley our forces attacked with the bayonet Turks who took offensive at dawn and drove them westward, leaving over one hundred dead."

NEARLY HALF A MILLION

Russian Troops Put That Many Teutons out of Fighting Condition

PETROGRAD July 7.—Special— Nearly half a million Austrians and Germans have been put out of commission since General Brussiloff began his great advance a month ago yesterday. The grand total of prisoners to date is in round numbers 235,000, of which 4,500 are officers.

Without the actual figures regarding the dead and wounded careful estimates by military experts, based on the best information, place the latter at 200,000 to 220,000. The Austrians predominate overwhelmingly among the prisoners, but among the dead and wounded it is said that a fairly large percentage are Germans. The German losses in stopping the Russian advance on Kovel and in counter-attacks made in solid ranks were enormous.

The booty captured reaches incalculable figures. It is figured that 250 guns of various sizes and upwards of 700 machine guns is a conservative estimate. In addition vast quantities of munition, supplies and transports have fallen into the hands of the Russians.

He was prominent in Masonic circles, and was Past District Deputy Grand Master of Erie District, No. 1. He was also very active in the affairs of the Presbyterian Church, and held an official position for years.

MILITARY MATTERS AT BARRIEFIELD HEIGHTS

MUSKETRY AT THE CAMP.

The "casuals" of the 93rd Battalion are now being given their instruction in musketry. This battalion will soon be leaving for the front, and the work must be finished up as soon as possible. The battalion is excused from all work except this, so that every opportunity is afforded for its rapid completion.

In instructing the soldiers in musketry at Barriefield camp, the work amounts to practically an examination of what was done during the winter months and what is being done by the battalion now. The men are first tried out on gallery ranges. Here the instructors learn the real value of the men as marksmen, and they are then advanced to the ranges. The 100 and 200 yard ranges are used for this, and the firing is done in every conceivable position.

So far the results have been entirely satisfactory, and when the men leave this district for the front they will most certainly take away a splendid musketry record.

Capt. W. E. Swaine is in charge of the work, and has an able staff of assistants, who, being thoroughly experienced in instructional work, are able to use the time to the best advantage.

BRINGS MORE RECRUITS.

There is a decided improvement in recruiting. It is believed that at no other time during the past two months have so many men joined in one day as on Monday. The artillery office at Ottawa headed the list with 23 recruits for the 73rd depot battery at Kingston. This was the record day for the office for some months. The Forestry battalion enlisted 13 and the Construction battalion got a goodly number of recruits. The 207th had a large list, and many more are applying to join this battalion. The 230th also did well. Nothing succeeds like success, and the officers think that the big fighting in France has something to do with the readiness of young men to enroll.

MAJOR PONTON REMEMBERED.

Major R. D. Ponton, Instructional Cadre, was presented with 500 cigarettes, a bog of cigars, and a large panoramic photo of the 93rd Battalion by the officers of that battalion in appreciation of the work that the Major has been doing since the 93rd was organized. During the winter Major Ponton was in Peterboro on many occasions as assistant to Lieut.-Col. W. J. Brown, G.S.O., looking after the training of the battalion, and the progress made then and now at Barriefield is due to a great measure to his interest in their work.

Canadian Shells In Russian Drive

Czar's Men Get 50,000 a Week From Canada—Put Through an Exacting Test at Petawawa Camp.

A correspondent of the Toronto Globe at Petawawa camp writes: Canada can at least claim a share in the praise heaped upon the Russians in general and General Brussiloff in particular for the results which have accrued since he commenced his great "comeback" in Bukowina. Russia called for shells, and Canadian enterprises answered to the tune of 50,000 shells a week. These tremendous outputs have been piled up during the past months, and your correspondent has been authoritatively informed that a large portion of these shipments has been used in the big Bukowinian drive during the past weeks.

From Petawawa to Bukowina

From Bukowina to Petawawa seems a far-off cry, yet the two are connected, because large quantities of the shells that were used on the eastern front were "proved" on the testing grounds here. In this camp is located a strip of territory over which the Russian flag flies. A devoted company of Canadians and Russians have spent many wearisome months in these northern wilds making it possible that Canada, too, should give the world some forcible proof of the virtual indissolubility of the allied pact at this stage of the history of the world.

Night and day, month in and month out, the hills re-echo and the air reverberates with the sound of gun-fire and exploding shells. During the day the targets are swept with shrapnel, at night the much vaunted high explosive is allowed to do its deadly work, and the process of proving the shells reveals to the lay mind the diabolical genius of men who devote their lives the invention of life-destroying implements, and the amount of nervous energy, used in the most exacting task of setting explosives to act as ordered after they leave the cannon's mouth.

Col. Mackie In Charge.

The Canadian officer in charge of the grounds is Lieut.-Col. H. J. Mackie, Intelligence Officer of the Petawawa Artillery Camp. The Canadian Car & Foundry Company are the shell contractors, and he, as an artilleryman, is in charge for the company. Captain Goodima, an expert Russian ordinance officer, is in charge of the company of Russian experts who watch and take part in the tests on behalf of his government.

When war broke out Lieut.-Col. Mackie was travelling in Russia, and the promise of many war contracts for the allies prompted him to interest the Russian government in Canadian industries. As a result Canalions of shells and were enabled to establish themselves in the munition adians received orders for many milmarket despite the alleged efforts of the Shell Committee to sidetrack orders to American concerns.

Order Soon Completed

Of the original order for 5,000,000 shells obtained by this company, approximately a million and a half have been shipped by devious routes to Russia, the value of which is totalled at $12,000,000. By November next it is anticipated that the shipment will have been completed, and an $85,000,000 order cleaned up.

Since Canadian industry recoiled from the shock of the financial depression at the inception of the war, and established itself in the munition business, the Russian government has been gradually organizing a complete "purchasing department." on this side of the Atlantic. Instead of relying on agents, the authorities have established high state dignitaries in the United States, where they conduct their "councils of war" and pass upon everything before it is sent overseas. Russian Generals travel throughout the North American continent directing the purchasing agents and offering them their expert advice. Two of these Russian officials have been in Petawawa during the past week superintending the testing of shells and arranging business matters on behalf of their home government. Generals Krahroff and Wittorf, who were introduced to the Duke and Duchess of Connaught by Lieut.-Col. Mackie, who is himself a personal friend of the Governor-General, are the men who have practically the last word to say before Canadian shells go to Russia.

According to Lieut.-Col. Mackie, the Russian system of testing shells is the most accurate in the world. Every antic a shell is expected to cut is known to them, and a shell that receives the hall-mark of perfection from a Russian examiner is said to be one that will do all that is expected of it. Incidentally, the Russians have nothing but praise for the Canadian shells, for the reason that percentage of rejections is so small a fraction as to negligible.

Russian Guns Imported

Russian guns have been imported for testing purposes, and on account of their deadly aim and destructive powers, although only of a three-inch calibre, they are thought almost as much of as the French 75's. The shells themselves have great penetrative power. The shrapnel shells will kill within an area of 600 square feet after exploding, while the high explosives—of all-Canadian ingredients—will melt away trench parapets, etc., with almost as much ease as water will wash away sand.

Exacting Tests.

The testing operations include the taking of night photographs of the explosions. They are driven through wire screens to test their velocity and power, and the slightest deviation will mean the throwing away of hundreds of shells. At the targets they are examined under all kinds of conditions, all with the one end in view, that they will be sure of exterminating the maximum number of men.

In the elaborately fitted up laboratories on the grounds expert chemists test the powder and the "T. N. T." which is the high explosive now produced in Canada as a new industry brought here as a result of the war. The specially constructed magazine, protected by military guards, contains enough ammunition to strike fear into the hearts of any would-be border-raiders. In short these proving grounds at Petawawa consist of a veritable arsenal, and they show that Canada can do, even in the war business, when put to the test.

WHAT ABOUT A LADIES' BATHING HOUSE?

Dear Sir—I have heard much favorable comment or our beautiful bay; its quaint nooks; its shining waters. etc. I have also noted that we have boat-houses galore. But one thing we need—and we are sadly in need of it—is a ladies' bathing house. As conditions now are our lady friends cannot go bathing but in the open; there are even no conveniences for changing from street attire to a bathing costume. We have many strong lady swimmers in our city, but the refreshing bath is barred because of the lack of a bath-house. There are plenty of spots where such a convenience could be erected. Will some one not move in the matter? Our genial Mayor is by no means averse to such improvements—he is not a man of single-track brain, and we are sure that even a suggestion of such a favor to our ladies will set him in action in their behalf. We certainly need it. Shall not our wish be gratified?

THIS IS THE 679TH DAY THE BRITISH EMPIRE HAS BEEN AT WAR WITH GERMANY.

AS OTHERS SEE HIM.

One of America's most influential newspapers, The Boston Transcript, referring to the great work accomplished by Sir Robert Borden, as Canada's Premier, had the following to say in a recent issue:

> Canada owes him a great deal for his conduct of affairs, and when all is known, and the full story is told, history will, we believe, pronounce that he has displayed great qualities—qualities which were necessary for the great part our neighbors have played in this struggle.

This is the sane, impartial judgment of one of the most competent observers in the journalistic world of this continent. It is an estimate of the Prime Minister of this country which no true Canadian can read without feeling a thrill of pride. During the last two years Sir Robert Borden has guided the Dominion through the most critical period in the history of the world. The problems that his predecessors in office had to solve were child's play in comparison with those that confronted him. He has rested under a burden of responsibility heavier than that of any other Prime Minister since the Confederation, and through it all he has kept the honor of the nation unsullied and has made the name of Canada known and revered through the civilized world.

It is easy enough to find fault with the Prime Minister. Sir Wilfrid Laurier had hardly given voice to his famous promise not to criticize "while there is danger at the front" before he yielded to the temptation of partizanship to make capital out of petty mistakes that are inseparable from big achievements. But throughout all the Opposition's campaign of attack, criticism and vilification, Sir Wilfrid Laurier never ventured to say what he would have done that Sir Robert Borden failed to do, or what he would have left undone that Sir Robert Borden did.

For an answer to all such criticism we have only to go to that eminent British Liberal, John Morley, who, in a noted lecture on the "Liberty of Citizenship," says:

> "To rebuild history in imagination and to avoid in our minds the errors that have been made is not at all a difficult art. It is no more difficult than to get rich out of yesterday's stock market. But the statesman who stands in the front of the advancing line and facing the future has no control over the past. His domain is the present and he strives to influence what is to come. He must act before he knows how things are going to turn out."

Morley admirably describes the difference between the Borden Government and its critics in the conduct of our part in this war. The Prime Minister is the man who has been, and is to-day, "in the front of the advancing line," and who has to act before he knows how things are going to turn out. Sir Wilfrid Laurier and his followers sojourn in the calm shades of irresponsibility, their only task the rushing into print and upon the platform to censure the man who is bearing the brunt of the battle.

WANTED—A REDMOND.

Thrilled with the expression that "there are no John Redmonds to be found in the Province of Quebec, a prominent English Liberal newspaper of Ontario gives ventilation to Sir Wilfrid Laurier's failure to secure recruits to any extensive number from among his French-Canadian compatriots.

Deploring the racial strife abetted and encouraged by the French-Canadian leaders, our contemporary compares the situation in Quebec to that which existed in Ireland previous to the Sinn Fein outbreak, and says:

> There is no John Redmond in Quebec. . . . There would be a chance of achieving unity for all Canada. But there is no John Redmond and therefore Bourassa must be allowed to set the pace in all the other provinces of confederation.

The Ottawa Free Press, the Liberal organ at the Capital, sees in the complainant's declaration a direct "repudiation of the counsels of Sir Wilfrid Laurier." No other interpretation can be attached to the remarkable article. Who but Sir Wilfrid should have been the John Redmond of Quebec? Who else but the outstanding French-Canadian of his time should be expected to lead and inspire his people? But alas! what a difference between the French-Canadian and the Irish leader! The one at the first sign of peril sacrifices the success of a cause for which he battled all his life and rallies a united people, despite the intrigues of faction, under the banner of Common Cause. The other, for forty years the chosen oracle of his people, has no word to utter for the cause for which nine thousand Canadians have fallen the past month; but instead surenders to a faction who have made the Empire's extremity their opportunity to further despicable ends.

No, unhappily for the peace and harmony of this Dominion, there is no John Redmond in Quebec. The man who for nearly half-a-century was supposed to speak for the French-Canadians of Canada is either silent or impotent to-day. With the exception of a few mildly expressed admonitions in English-speaking Brome, he has had no word for the people he was supposed to lead and to inspire. Why is it? What has afflicted his spirit? What of the oft-repeated pledges of the past in regard to Quebec in the time of Empire peril? How can the patriotism of French-Canadians find expression in view of the apparent somnolence of the one who was supposed to guard the watch tower and in whose hands the trumpet lies?

Whether or not to be taken with a grain of salt, a report is current that von Bethmann-Hollweg, the German Chancellor, recently answered a delegation which urged a resumption of submarine warfare by saying that Germany had only twenty sea-going submarines left, and the shortage of metals prevented building any more. It was also said that Austria and Turkey were threatening to make separate peace if submarine attacks on neutrals should be resumed. Neither story looks convincing. The second one will soon be put to a test if the threat to renew submarine warfare is put into execution.

At a recruiting meeting in Toronto the other day, a man expressed himself to the effect that the men joining the military service included some of the scum of the earth. He sought to straighten matters out for himself by saying that his reference was to French-Canadians. The men who are making mischief out of the situation created by the war, says the Montreal Gazette, are not of one province nor of one speech. If all the truth about what French-speaking Canadians are doing and are trying to do in the way of their duty was fully told in the other provinces such an excuse for a gross libel would never have been offered.

Ottawa Free Press: The Toronto Star is usually so fair in the discussion of political questions that we cannot understand its domineering attitude in regard to the bilingual question. Ontario may be perfectly within its rights in passing Regulation 17, and Ontario may be quite correct in stating that in Regulation 17 there is nothing that anybody has any cause to kick about; but there are a whole lot of laws that Ontario might pass if it had a mind to but does not, and sometimes legitimate grievances and injustices are hidden in the most innocent-looking regulations.

Had Terrible Pains in Kidneys and Back.

Dear Mr. Editor—I want to write you about "Anuric." I was very sick, could hardly be up; I was in bed most of the time. Had terrible pains in my kidneys and back, so much so that I had to scream sometimes when I was sitting down and wanted to get up, the pain was so great. I had tried a well-known kidney medicine but it didn't help me. I heard of Dr. Pierce's Anuric Tablets so I thought I would try them. I took only one box of the Tablets, and my back is now free from pain and I can work and take care of my family. I feel I cannot say enough for this medicine. Sincerely, MRS. WM. KELLER.

NOTE: This "Anuric" is adapted especially for kidney complaints and diseases arising from disorders of the kidneys and bladder, such as backache, weak back, rheumatism, dropsy, congestion of the kidneys, inflammation of the bladder, scalding urine and urinary troubles. The physicians and specialists at Dr. Pierce's great Institution, at Buffalo, N. Y., have thoroughly tested this prescription and have been with one accord successful in eradicating these troubles, and in most cases absolutely curing the diseased kidneys.

Patients having once used "Anuric" at Dr. Pierce's Invalids' Hotel, have repeatedly sent back for more. Such a demand has been created that Dr. Pierce has decided to put "Anuric" in the drug stores of this country, in a ready-to-use form. If not obtainable send one dime by mail to Dr. Pierce for trial package or 50 cents for full treatment.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is a blood cleanser and alterative that starts the liver and stomach into vigorous action. It thus assists the body to make rich, red blood, which feeds the heart, nerves, brain and organs of the body. You feel clean, strong and strenuous.

The Poets' Corner

A LETTER IN VERSE.

I wonder if Billy is needing a meal?
Methinks I will send one and see.
Oh, thank you, Aunt Nan, for the dear jolly book,
Which arrived safe and sound as could be.
Let me try will you write if I write to you first?
Also Faith, whom we hear has been ill.
Very soon Fireplay and myself hope to be
In the country mid rock, wood and rill.
Good luck to our soldiers, the dear Beaver boys,
How jolly your letters do sound.
Keep up your brave hearts in the thick of the fight
And lay the Huns thick on the ground.
And now I must close with greetings to all.
Please write to me, someone, I pray.
My address and name with Aunt Nan you will find.
I bid you a pleasant good-day.
"LAUGHALITTLE."

"Billy" missed the meal, because we wanted you in the column, Laughalittle. I am so glad to have rhymes. Very few have attempted poetry lately.

AUNT NAN.

Current Comment

The depth and breadth of Germany's desire for peace is reported by a neutral diplomat in Germany to be immeasurable. It is nothing, however, to what it will be when the Allies get into their full stride.

While keeping an eye on the German reverses on the French and Russian front, don't forget the galling German defeat in Mexico, where Carranza has apparently decided not to play the Kaiser's game after all.—Montreal Herald.

Having captured the whole German second line south of the Somme, from the river to Belloy, the French have resumed operations north of the river and have cleared the bank almost to Clery. The French who have established themselves at Sormont farm also threaten Clery.

The appeal of Sir Roger Casement from the sentence of death for high treason, which will be heard on July 17, will be argued before five judges in the Court of Appeals. Justice Darling will preside. The other members of the Court will be Justices Bray, Lawrence, Scrutton and Atkin.

A special cable from London to the World says: High naval circles here believe that Germany may soon attempt a minor naval diversion in hopes of drawing attention from the land battles. A similar attempt by Austria would not be surprising, especially as the latter has, except for submarines, played such a small part in the war on sea.

MUSIC AND DRAMA

A THRILLING DRAMA OF CANADIAN WILDS AT GRIFFIN'S TO-NIGHT

The exalted soulful screen stars Francis X. Bushman, beautiful Beverly Bayne, appear at Griffin's Opera House, to-night, and Saturday, matinee and night in a thrilling and romantic 5-part drama of the Canadian Wilds, from the pen of John C. Culley, entitled, "Pennington's Choice." The story, which will prove of engrossing interest, shows how a young millionaire seeks his heart's desire in the great Canadian Northwest, where he is contemptuously looked upon as a tenderfoot and subjected to insults and physical torture by the family of the girl he loves. How he eventually proves his worth, turns the finger of cowardice upon his tormentors, withstands the temptations of a charmingly pretty girl, a supposed twin sister of his sweetheart, and wins his heart's desire, is artistically told in compelling and dramatic fashion. The two talented stars are supported by an unusually strong cast and includes, James J. Jeffries the former champion prize fighter of the world, the latter being shown in a boxing scene with Mr. Bushman. Besides the above offering 3 other selected comedies and dramas will also be exhibited.

"THE VOICE OF THE TEMPTER" AT PALACE TO-NIGHT

An excellent program of varied filmplays have been arranged for exhibition at the Palace Theatre, to-night, and Saturday matinee and night, the feature photoplay offering being a 3-part society drama of unusual merit and great moral strength entitled, "The Voice of the Tempter," featuring Eddie Polo, who will be remembered by local filmplay lovers through his appearance here in The Broken Coin serial. The noted dramatic actor Thomas Jefferson and Marcia Moore also appear on the same program in an absorbing 2-part drama of Circus life entitled, "Lavinia Comes Home," 3 other comedies and dramas are being announced for exhibition.

ADVERTISE IN THE INTELLIGENCER

A FATAL BARGAIN
OR
THE MAN WHO DARED FATE
BY
NICHOLAS CARTER

Author of the celebrated stories of Nick Carter's adventures, which are published exclusively in the New Magnet Library, conceded to be the best detective tales ever written

CHAPTER I.
Daring Death.

When one least expects it, the hand of death may be outstretched to seize one.

The man with a green-baiz bag plugged on resolutely through the swirling mist and drizzle, with his head drawn between them. It was thrust forward aggressively, nevertheless, as if in defiance of the portentcus business that had kept him grinding at his desk until nearly midnight—and on such a night!

The man crouching in concealment under the brownstone steps waited and listened. At times he peered out cautiously, when the steps of an approaching pedestrian fell upon his ears. His eyes glowed with fiery intensity under the vizor of his low-drawn woolen cap. His shoulders also were hunched and his ugly, bullet-shaped head aggressively poised, as were those of the other; but instead of a green-baize bag, this man carried in his hand—a blackjack.

Now there is not, ordinarily, anything in or about a green-baize bag that would impel a midnight ruffian to violence, or even induce him to hazard a bullet or a knife thrust in order to secure it—an unpretentious cloth bag such as lawyers carry, tied around the neck with a green cord and containing, presumably, only a few legal documents.

One would have asserted very confidently, as a matter of fact that it was not worth stealing.

Nevertheless, when the man with the green-baize bag came nearer, the man under the steps crouched lower—as a panther crouches when prepared to leap at his prey.

Fifty yards away, on the corner of Lexington Avenue, a man was pausing to glance at his watch, as well as he could see it in the glimmering, drizzle-diverted rays from an arc light across the way—an erect, powerful man, in the prime of life, whose keen eyes and striking, clean-cut features evinced his rare mental vigor and sterling strength of character.

Only this man heard the cry—a single frantic scream of fear; choked almost instantly by a brutal hand, or silenced by the blows that followed as quickly and were witnessed by this solitary observer.

"Great Scott!" he exclaimed, startled. "That spells murder, or my name's not Nick Carter!"

Such a scene, though at first viewed only indistinctly through the night mist and drizzle, was enough to stir to instant activity the famous New York detective.

Nick did not see the leopardlike leap of the man from under the steps, nor the instinctive recoil of the man with a green-baize bag; but he heard the latter's cry, so quickly silenced, and saw the rapid rise and fall of his assailant's hand, as he dealt blow after blow while the two men battled furiously on the sidewalk.

As he approached them, running at the tip of his speed Nick also saw one of them suddenly collapse, with his knees doubling under him like hinges just before he dropped heavily on the pavement, then struggled upward once, only to pitch headlong over the curb and lie motionless in the gutter.

His assailant stooped and snatched something from his hand—the green-baize bag—then ran like a deer in the direction of Park Avenue.

Nick Carter sped after him like a hound after a jackal. The face of the great detective, who was still thirty yards from the scene of the brutal assault had taken on a look of ugly determination. He whipped out his revolver while he ran, then shouted at the fleeing man:

"Stop, thief! Stop, or I'll fire!"

One might as well have shouted at a cyclone.

The ruffian, obviously an alert, powerful fellow, in as good form as a trained athlete, swerved quickly and darted across the street, then was lost in the darkness close to a block of dwellings while he swiftly dashed toward Park Avenue.

Nick raised his weapon to fire at random, but saw a rapidly driven hack appear at the corner then turn in his direction. The danger of hitting the driver or an occupant of the carriage with a bullet deflected from the wall of the near building deterred him from shooting.

In another moment he was passing the motionless man in the gutter. He took one look at his gory, upturned face, bruised and battered, then continued his pursuit of the unknown assailant.

Darting across the street, directly in front of the approaching hack, Nick shouted to the driver:

"Look to that man in the gutter, cabby! Stop and care for him!"

He heard the response of the driver, or of some man in the carriage, as the vehicle whirled by him:

"Leave him to us! We'll fix him."

Then came two spiteful cracks of a revolver, evidently in the hand of the speaker, and the detective heard one bullet whiz by his head, and the second go flat against the wall of the nearest house.

Nick glancde back, and saw a swirl of white smoke above the rapidly moving carriage. He could not then believe, though it was his first impression, that the bullets had been fired at him; but rather, at the scoundrel he was after, and who at that moment quickly turned the corner of Park Avenue and ran north.

Nick did not delay to consider the matter. Resolved to secure this rascal, if possible, he continued his pursuit and turned the corner several seconds later, only to discover him half a block away, and running like a deer toward Sixty-fifth Street, where he again turned and vanished.

Despite his own redoubled efforts, the detective had not gained a foot when he reached the corner and again sighted his quarry.

The yeggman, if such he was, was sprinting for dear life, a dark figure plunging madly through the mist and drizzle.

The chance of dropping him with a bullet fired from that distance, and under such conditions, was only remote. Nevertheless, Nick fired two quick shots at the rascal who instantly ran in a zigzag course across the avenue. There he ran into greater peril for a policeman, who had heard the detectives's weapon, caught sight of the man soon after he turned the corner, and he at once joined in the pursuit, followed by several other men, who quickly saw what was taking place.

The chase continued north to Sixty-sixth Street, where the policeman began shooting, yet as vainly as Nick had done; and the fleeing man, rendered doubly desperate by the increasing danger, made for the only place that seemed to offer him a loophole through which he might escape—one of the surface openings of the New York Central tunnel.

He entered it with a leap, with the daring recklessness of one who carried his life in his hand, whichever way he turned—he entered it with a leap as if the earth had swallowed him.

If there are desperadoes who will thus dare death to elude the law, there is also an officer here and there who will do as much in its service.

Nick Carter arrived on the spot only a few seconds later, and close upon the heels of the policeman and the several observers who had joined in this man hunt.

Nick immediately recognized the officer, and at the same time caught sight of an approaching touring car some fifty yards away.

"Stop that auto, Grady, and get its searchlight," he shouted hurriedly, as he approached. "Be ready to drop it down to me. I'm going after that man."

Seeing at once that he was recognized Nick did not wait for an answer. He leaped while he was speaking, vanished into the black abyss, and came down with a crash on the bed of the tunnel. One foot struck a rail obliquely, and he was thrown heavily between the tracks. His revolver flew from his hand and went spinning away in the darkness. He heard it strike the rocky wall yards away, but he could not tell in what direction, and he thought more of finding his quarry than his gun.

As he scrambled to his feet, jarred by the fall, yet not much injured, he heard the crunch of the man's boots among the small rocks of the roadbed several rods away and he at once plunged through the gloom in that direction. Though he had lost the only weapon with which he was provided that night, he shouted commandingly, hoping that the threat might hold the fellow up:

"Stop, you rascal! Stop, or I'll shoot!"

The answer came back, accompanied with an oath, hoarse, harsh, and defiant, through the inky darkness; "Shoot, and be hanged!"

Then, or hardly a second later, the gloom was suddenly broken by a yellowish gleam in the far distance, a mere speck of light that rapidly increased in size and volume, soon throwing a glimmering luster upon the polished steel rails and revealing with grim, gruesome tomblike suggestiveness the smoke-begrimed tunnel walls.

It was the headlight of an approaching train an inbound express from Boston, due in the Grand Central at midnight and running eight minutes late.

Nick now had an advantage—he could see his man in relief against the increasing glow ahead.

Looking back, the ruffian could not see the detective in the dense background of gloom. That he realized the situation, however, and knew he was pursued by one as relentless and desperately determined as himself, were obvious; for he again increased his speed, plunging furiously on between the rails and toward the approaching train as if hoping to elude his pursuer when it passed, or that he might be crushed to death under its grinding wheels.

A BOY AND HIS DOG

(The Columbus Dispatch)

Just a dirty little yellow cur! I called him homeless until I heard a dirtier little urchin yelling.

"Aw, gowan home ——" and pelting him with stones.

The youngster swore and I felt sorry for the dog. I wanted to wring the urchin's neck and save the dog. Just as I was about to put my thought into action a big black limousine came swerving down the street. The child dafted before it, grabbed the little yellow cur to his heart and the two came rolling from beneath the whirring wheels. As I helped them from the gutter the boy was moaning.

"Where are you hurt, boy?" I asked excitedly, turning him around on his sturdy bare legs.

"Dey didn't hurt me—but—dey dern near got my dog," wailed the urchin between dry sobs.

THE PARTS THEY PLAYED

Story of an American In the War In Belgium

By ALAN HINSDALE

Albert Clarke, an American boy, when the great European war broke out, having a desire to take part in it, went to Canada, where he enlisted in a regiment of infantry and in due time was sent to Belgium. In a fight he was taken prisoner, and while being marched to the rear with a number of his comrades, his guard being inattentive, he managed to slip away. Just as he was passing out of sight of his captors he was seen, and they gave chase.

Clarke ran into a yard in the center of which stood a house. The first thing in his path that afforded a hiding place was a well. It struck him that no one would think of looking for a man in the bottom of a well. The arrangement for drawing water was a long pole, the bucket being at one end and a huge stone at the other. This enabled him to descend with less rapidity than if not partly counterbalanced by the stone, though he went down much faster than he would have chosen.

The other end of the balance pole being up in the air was a dead give away, so he emptied the bucket, let go his hold and it went up as fast as it had come down.

Clarke's pursuers, fortunately for him, did not reach sight of the well house till a few moments after the bucket had gone up. As he had hoped, they did not stop to look into the well, but continued on their way. But it soon occurred to Bert that if he had not jumped from the frying pan into the fire he had at least jumped from a German prison into cold water. Although the season was in the early summer the bath was by no means tepid.

All he could do was to get one foot on a stone on one side of the well and the other foot on the other side, stand there above the surface and wait for some one to come to the well for water. His life depended upon some one coming within a reasonable time, for if the arrival were put off too long he would either starve or be chilled to death. Looking up, he examined the circle of stone forming the well and saw that the surface was too smooth for him to climb. It was only at the lower part that the stones afforded a foothold.

Bert had been captured in the morning and escaped about noon. He had stood in his trying position for six hours when he was gladdened by the sound of a bucket striking the ground. In another moment the well bucket was lowered and filled. Bert would have climbed the rod connecting it with the balance pole, but his strength had gone out of him. So when the bucket came to the surface of the water he emptied it and held on to it for an ascent, doing what he could to lighten it by clutching here and there the circling wall.

When he reached the well house there was a shriek, and down he went again to the bottom. A girl, instead of drawing up a bucket of water, had drawn up a man, and the discovery was a great shock to her. She ran away from the well house, but presently, curiosity getting the better of her fright, she turned and looked back. There was the well, the bucket hanging over it, and silence.

It occurred to her that the man had returned to the bottom, and a man at the bottom of a well was not necessarily an object of terror. Then she realized the man's position. Lastly, she went back to the well house and, without daring to look over, called out:

"Who's there?"

Bert knew a little French and replied:

"Anglais soldat" (English soldier).

This helped matters amazingly. The girl was a Belgian and knew that the English were fighting for her country. Bert asked her in a mixture of French and English to lower the bucket and help him out. She did not understand him, but common sense suggested that this be done and done quickly. Down went the bucket again. Bert took hold of it and with difficulty was raised to the surface. Once there he took the precaution to catch hold of a support so that he would not go down a third time.

He was a pitiable spectacle, drenched and chilled as he was; indeed, just the object to excite the sympathy of a woman. She helped him out of the well house, and after she had assured him by French, English and pantomime that there were no German soldiers very near, he started with her to the house as fast as he was able, lest some enemy might see him, for there was the boom of cannon all about him.

At the house was a woman—the girl's mother—and several children. The men of the household were all fighting for Belgium. After a few words of explanation the girl went to a cupboard and brought out a bottle. It was only wine, but Bert made up for its want of strength by drinking it all. Then the girl brought out some bread and cheese—there was no meat in Belgium—and the soldier consumed it ravenously. Meanwhile the mother lighted a fire on the hearth, and by its warmth his clothes were dried, though later other clothes that belonged to the men of the family were provided for him.

Bert did not feel very secure, for he was within the German lines and Germans were liable to come to the house at any moment. He was taken to the garret, where a mattress was placed on the floor behind a pile of discarded furniture, and on this bed he spent the night. In the morning he was at a loss to know whether to put on his khaki uniform or the citizen's clothes that had been provided for him. If he wore his uniform he would be recognized for a soldier; if he wore the citizen's clothes, though he might the better escape attention, if known to be an enemy he would be shot for a spy. He concluded to take the latter risk, and if confronted by enemies undertake to pass himself off for a member of the family that harbored him.

Several days passed without any Germans entering the house or Bert's seeing any chance whatever to go back to the British lines. During those few days he learned more French than he had ever learned before, though he had studied it in school. The girl who had rescued him—Jeanne was her name—he found very attractive. She resembled a Dutch girl, having light hair and complexion, with a rose in each cheek.

One day some German soldiers, stragglers, came to the house and demanded something to eat. But Jeanne saw them coming, and Bert escaped to the garret.

He finally got into trouble through politeness. Water was needed, and since Jeanne was not on hand to get it Bert insisted on going to the well for it. While drawing the water several German officers entered the grounds. It was too late to take to flight, and Bert decided to stand his ground. The officers approached him, and one of them asked for a drink of water. Bert accommodated him, trying the while to fix his own mind on something else than the frightful danger he was running, in order that he might preserve his equanimity.

One of the Germans spoke French and asked him what so lusty a fellow was doing at home when there was war in the land. Bert replied that he was the only man on the premises and had just married a young wife, who would not let him go. He gave this reason knowing that all the world sympathizes with a young married couple.

"Perhaps something of the wedding feast is left," said the officer, "and we may be favored with a bite."

"There can be no wedding feasts in this country now," replied Bert, "but such as we have we will give you."

He led the way to the house. Jeanne had reappeared, and she and her mother, seeing what had happened, pulled themselves together for any part they might be expected to play.

"Ach," said one officer to another in German on seeing Jeanne, "one can't blame the fellow for staying at home with such a pretty bride as that."

The German and French languages are both spoken in Belgium, and Jeanne understood perfectly what he said, and since he looked from Bert to her she knew that he referred to them. She blushed, which under the circumstances was the most natural thing for her to do. Besides, she inferred that she was to play the part of Bert's bride. She brought out the best there was in the larder—it was not much—and there was plenty of wine in the cellar.

The officers had evidently been on short rations, for they ate all that was set before them and drank one bottle of wine after another till they were quite mellow. Then Jeanne said to them:

"Herr officers, I have a request to make of you."

"What is that, pretty one?"

"I was obliged to be married without a trousseau. That is a terrible thing for a bride. Will you give me a pass to go to Paris to buy one?"

"Certainly you shall have a pass."

"One thing more I have to ask—that my husband be permitted to go with me."

"Ach! That is a different matter."

"Do you think a bride just married would consent to leave her husband? If he cannot go with me I will not go at all."

The officers discussed the matter between them, Jeanne persisting in her request till finally one of the officers, who seemed to have the highest rank and had drunk the most wine declared that so pretty a bride who had entertained them so well should have any boon she asked, and, calling for pen and paper, he wrote a pass for the two to go through the lines. Then, demanding a kiss of the bride, which was granted, he led the rest away.

Bert and Jeanne were left alone together. Bert stood looking at her with an expression of gratitude mingled with admiration. She had been playing the part of his wife and by so doing had prevented his being shot for a spy.

"My life is yours," said Bert. "Do with it as you will."

She dropped her eyes to the ground. Bert took her hand in his, and the two stood mute, she with averted face. Presently he said:

"I am a soldier, and if I succeed in reaching the British lines I must serve out my term of enlistment. When that ends, if I still live and I can get back here, I will come to you. My home is in that far country America, which you have heard about, and it has been so protected by oceans that there has been little or no war there. If I return there and you will go with me I will take you. In that case we will make a reality of what has been a pretense."

The response to this was more effective than if it had been spoken in words. Jeanne turned toward him, and her head sank on his breast.

When some people have run against a jag overnight and encounter a jar at home they go to a drug store to get medicine out of a graduate in the morning.

Queer, isn't it, how a woman who will overlook so many, many faults in a man shows little or no charity for the shortcomings of a woman?

CHILDREN'S CLOTHES.

What Small Folks Are Wearing Closely Resemble Their Mothers'.

Suits for little girls are after the models shown for women. The skirts have considerable fullness, and the coats are inclined to ripple below the waist line. Some very attractive suits for children are made with skirts of broken checks and coats of serge in solid color. They have suspenders attached to the skirt or are finished with a belt. The coats, as a rule, are loose and belted and of hip length. Belts which encircle the waist or belted back styles with pockets on either the skirt or coat, and buttons fastening the front of the skirt, are especially good looking.

Children's skirts are usually cut circular and have considerable flare at the foot, fitting fairly close over the hips. The coats are finished with a coat collar and lapels, and some are made in Norfolk styles.

There are many variations in trimmings. Buttons are used profusely and in novel ways. A number of suits in solid color have collar and cuffs of blue and white polka dotted silk or of green satin piped with white.

Coats of shepherd checks are sometimes trimmed with black satin in bands at the foot, and the collars and cuffs are also of satin. Little coats of light blue silk poplin are smocked on either side of the front and in the center of the back. The blue collar and cuffs are embroidered in white. Coats have girdles of ribbon tied loosely around the waist, ending in a loose knot on the side. A little coat of two toned corduroy in brown and white is made with a flared skirt, piped at the waist line and on the collar and cuffs. Black and white and blue and white corduroy coats are also seen.

The little middy dresses, the Russian blouse, the one piece dress joined with a belt, the coat and Norfolk styles and the little suspender dresses worn with guimpes, as well as the short waisted effects, are all seen in attractive assortments. Some dresses hang in loose lines from the shoulders and are trimmed with smocking.

The majority of sleeves are made in the set in effect, but there are also sleeves with a low shoulder, the bishop sleeve and also those with a flare effect.

Ginghams, percales, linens, reps and lawns are the prominent wash materials. Plain and fancy materials are frequently combined in the making. Colored dresses are often trimmed with collars and cuffs of white. Sashes and belts of leather, self material or silk are used. White dresses, with sashes of color, with the waist line low, normal or slightly raised, are in many attractive styles. The little skirts are very full.

THE PERKY BOW.

A Model For Sweet Sixteen and All Her Kin.

Boxed like a compass, with twin roses clustered on the brim, this hat of navy lisere straw takes a band of king's blue velvet ribbon with extention bow. Around the band is a row of green leaves set primly to give a flat effect. The result is quite charming.

GOOD STYLE.

Don't Rush Through Life.

How many women are there who rush through their day's and their evening engagements without a moment's relaxation? A bath before dressing for the evening is substituted for the rest which the body needs. If pallor of the face offends the ever handy cosmetic is drawn upon and the "bloom of youth" applied. But no artificial coloring ever hid successfully for any length of time baggy eyes, sunken cheeks and other marks which worn out nerves register upon the face.

The surest way for a woman to maintain her attractive appearance—to be "easy to look at," as one of our famous humorists said—is to keep the body up to its highest standard of efficiency. If this be done rosy cheeks, a clear complexion, sparkling eyes, a sweet breath, grace of carriage, will follow as surely as sunrise follows the night.

Covering the Neck.

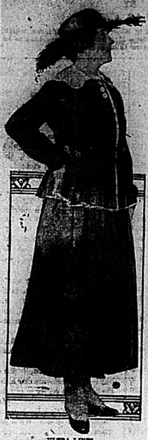
Soon we shall be thinking about pretty ways of decorating the uncovered neck and shall no doubt revive the old time lace hemmed net ruche fastened by a rose or a ribbon bow, which in the portraits of young French beauties of the eighteenth century looks so fascinating. Devices of this and other kinds the collarless blouses which are arriving will make possible and desirable. There is a decided leaning toward the decollete blouses, with a choice of chokers.

It is quite possible to pick a hole through Mount Royal witha table fork, but it will take time, my lad, time.

MODISH SUIT.

A Smart Model Put Up In Blue Serge For Wear.

Durable, popular, ubiquitous navy serge gives this good looking outfit, cut with a box plaited jacket and skirt.



ULTRA LINES.

An unusual finish is gained by a white organdie piping around the coat to match the collar. The slashed belt is also interesting.

FOR SUMMER SHOWERS.

Gay Umbrellas Are Appearing Like Broken Off Bits of Rainbows.

It is not a bit too soon to get ready for summer showers. Indeed, one need not regret the gentle downpour if she is provided with one of the new umbrellas made of silk taffeta in green, blue, burgundy, prelate, orchid, dull yellow or African brown. The color choice is broad, so that the costume or the salient tone thereof may be matched.

These silks are waterproof, and the color looks no worse after its summer bath. The handles are quite short and are said to be copied from the stick of the British or French officer. There is no handle in the usual sense of the word, but instead there is a heavy cord loop run through a perforation in the handle, and this is swung over the wrist.

One advantage of the new umbrella is that it may be used for sun protection quite as well as for the rain defense. One feels less foolish starting out in the morning under a cloud, as it were, umbrella in hand or raised above the head, and finding herself equally prepared when the sun unexpectedly pierces the clouds later in the day. Moreover, the gay color seems to anticipate the appearance of the rainbow.

Kitchen Helps.

In order to keep lettuce fresh for an indefinite time put the head in a glass containing water and place it in the icebox or some other cool, dark place. The roots will absorb the water, which should be changed daily, and keep the lettuce fresh and crisp.

If you would save your hands from unsightly vegetable stains always peel or scrape potatoes, turnips, etc., under warm running water.

When your grocer sends you hard lemons and you want them for immediate use let them stand for a few hours in water, and they will soon become soft and juicy.

A home "cold storage" for eggs may be made by placing two inches of wood ashes in the bottom of a tin pail. In this stand on the small end as many fresh eggs as will fit easily without letting them touch. Over these sift a couple of inches of ashes and adjust another layer of eggs. When the pail is full cover it tightly and place in a cool place, and the eggs will keep perfectly for an indefinite time.

On Ironing Day.

One will find it a great help on ironing day to have a goodly supply of clothes hangers at hand. As soon as a garment is ironed slip it over a hanger. Each hanger will hold a number of the same kind of garments, and in putting the clothes away all that is necessary is to place the hangers in the closet. In this way many pieces do not have to be handled twice and wrinkled clothes are avoided.

Strawberry Shortcake For Two.

A large cupful of prepared flour, a teaspoonful of lard. Mix with cold milk, mold into two large biscuits and bake in quick oven. Split through center and butter and pour over same one box of strawberries which have been mashed with one and one-half cupfuls sugar. Serve with whipped cream or ice cream.

Some are constantly doing things to show that they can, as the sperm whale gives a few flips of the last part of himself, before he goes down into his wet cellar to see how the coal bin looks.

AN EMBROIDERED BLOUSE.

It Is Said That Handwork Lingerie Is Rivaling Crape.

For some time hand embroidered blouses were kept under cover. It seemed a shame, too, for the hand work on a blouse always showed to good advantage. However, there is no longer any need to lament about the matter, for once more women are privileged to wear blouses which show the results of their labor in the embroidery field. But the embroidery is applied in a different manner. Instead of decorating the front of the blouse in plastron effect, dainty little flowers hang in garlands from the shoulder line. The shoulders are outlined with a band of embroidery. One blouse showing this treatment was embroidered in blue, pink and green. It opened in the front, and the line of closing was finished with featherstitching and a few tiny white buttons embroidered in green also.

The application of the embroidery on the sleeves was quite a variation. A separate cuff finished each sleeve and was edged with green featherstitching, but where the sleeve joined the cuff garlands of the flowers embroidered in the delicate colors suggested above were embroidered up the sleeve for a space of four inches.

A turnover collar of the blouse material was edged with featherstitching, and a tiny spray of flowers was embroidered in each point in front.

The colors of embroidery cotton can be changed to suit the wearer's taste.

BATH SUITS.

Tips About the Style and Material of Your Diving Duds.

Whether you elect to wear bloomers or tights with your swimming suit this summer, whether you favor a kerchief knotted back of each ear or a cap with a shady brim, whether you like to go down into the sea stocking footed or equipped with bathing shoes, one thing you must have, and that is a pocket in your bathing dress. Two pockets will be smarter, and there may be three or even four—two on the skirt for the hands to be thrust into as you walk up the beach and two in the waist for the safe keeping of your bath house key and handkerchief. A sopping wet handkerchief is better than none at all—as every bather knows—after a wave has gone over one's head, and after a plunge under water your handkerchief will be very handy buttoned securely into a breast pocket on your waist.

Palm Beach bathing suits, which, of course, foretell what all other bathing suits are going to be later on, are stunning affairs. Most of them are of silk, and many are of silk jersey. One sees also a great number of pussy willow bathing suits. This soft, beautiful taffeta silk has proved itself in salt water. A pussy willow bathing suit worn almost every day last summer in the heavy surf on the south of Long Island shore came home in September without a tear or even a worn spot or a change in color.

Bathing suits of the most fashionable sort now are in two sections, a very short tunic, loosely belted or sashed below the waist line, and knickers or close bathing breeches to the knee. One cannot call them tights—they are rather like the close knee breeches small boys wear, and sometimes they are slashed up the outer side for a few inches and laced together with cord or silk braid.

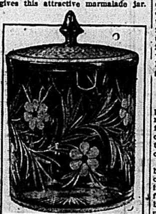
Cut glass silver mounted and lidded gives this attractive marmalade jar.



THE NEW KIND.

On one side is a cut to accommodate the silver spoon handle. Condensed milk for coffee, jam and piccalilli are other contents that it might hold.

Working Buttonholes.

To make beautiful buttonholes, even on the sheerest of summer materials, mark them first and stitch the outlines once around on the sewing machine. This not only adds to the durability of the buttonhole, but makes the working of it far easier.

Berlin newspapers are losing money. How strange, when Canadian newspapers that give the real news are making so much money.

A CENSORED LADY

American Author Whose Book Has Been Suppressed.

WAS AT FRONT TRENCHES.

One of the Four Women War Correspondents Sent Out by the Biggest Magazine Gives Her Definition of War—Describes Her Impressions Eloquently.

When the editor sent four women correspondents to the great war because he believed that "the big story of a war is never at the front, but in the hospitals and in the homes, that war is largely a woman's affair, and woman, I think, best understand the little things that go to make up the big story," Mary Roberts Rinehart, trained nurse, wife of a Pittsburgh physician, author of several successful plays and many delectable stories, was one of the women picked by the magazine.

MARY ROBERTS RINEHART.

She interviewed both Queen Mary of England and the king and queen of the Belgians. Her description of refurbishing up her toilet before presenting herself at La Panne, her quest of shoe buttons in ravaged Belgium and her final transfer of those she had from the top of her boots to that section most prominent below her gown when she sat is one of the liveliest parts of her story. Her latest book has recently been suppressed by the British censor on the ground that it contained information of value to the enemy. When asked what effect the nearness of battle had on her own literary powers Mrs. Rinehart replied:

"I do not know how other writers are affected, but I could do nothing at the front. I wrote the interview with the king of the Belgians there and ruined a really fine opportunity. Of course I have had no newspaper training. But that was not the only trouble. For me writing has two phases, each distinct from the other. One is receiving and absorbing impressions; the other is giving them out. And between the two there must be a lapse of time to give me perspective, to let me see the 'high light,' as it were—to know what should be emphasized. It is a matter of proportion, as all writing is. That is why I think that the real literature of the war will come after the world is once more at peace.

"Once, under a great strain I did write something that reflected my attitude of mind. I had just been through a bombardment by aeroplanes, and I wrote that night with cold hands and a hot head my definition of war. It is this:

"'War is not two great armies meeting in a clash and frenzy of battle. It is much more than that. War is a boy carried on a stretcher, looking up at God's blue sky with bewildered eyes that are soon to close; war is a woman carrying a child that has been wounded by a shell; war is spirited horses tied in burning buildings and waiting for death; war is the flower of a race torn, battered, hungry, bleeding, up to its knees in icy water; war is an old woman burning a candle before the Mater Dolorosa for the son she has given for king and country!'"

Stuffed Sweetbreads.

Materials.—Six sweetbreads, a pint plain stuffing, one-half cupful mushrooms, sliced; toast, beaten egg, flavor, four tablespoonfuls butter, three-fourths cupful cream, a tablespoonful flour, two tablespoonfuls orange juice, cracker crumbs, salt and pepper.

Way of Preparing.—Parboil the sweetbreads until tender. Plunge them into cold water. Drain, wipe dry and trim into shape. Make a plain stuffing, as for poultry. Cut a pocket in the sweetbreads and stuff. Then sew up the pocket. Melt the butter in the chafing dish, flour the sweetbreads lightly, then dip them in the beaten egg, roll in crumbs and fry in the butter in the chafing dish. Remove to a hot platter. Now add the flour to the butter in the chafing dish. When it bubbles add the orange juice, cream, mushrooms and salt and pepper to taste. Cook five minutes. Arrange six pieces of toast on a platter, place the sweetbreads on the toast, pour the sauce over and around, garnish with sliced oranges and water cress and serve. These stuffed sweetbreads will be found delicious for a Sunday supper or an informal dinner.

The easiest thing in the world is to sit down and theorise.

FRESH CURTAINS.

How to Make Home Laundering Really Effectual.

AN EXPERT SPEAKS UP.

After Twenty Years' Experience With Window Hangings, a Professional Tells Us Just How to Manage Unruly Frames and Sopping Wet Curtains.

"Many women," says an expert, "think that the proper way to mount a curtain on a stretcher is to first fasten down each of the four corners and then to stretch the edges into shape by pulling from the corners.

"This is entirely a mistake, and curtains mounted in this way are almost sure to have the mesh broken or torn in several places, even if the pattern and the scalloped edges dry to look straight and even.

"In mounting a lace curtain over a stretcher, one should always begin at the middle point of the long border edge. Slip this over the pin at the center on the top edge of the frame; then, working from the center, first to the right and then to the left, slip the successive scallops over pins until the entire long border edge is attached to the pins on the upper bar of the frame.

"The curtain is now hanging with its unpatterned edge falling loosely downward. The next step is to attach the bottom end of the curtain to the frame pins. This usually has the same border as the long, patterned edge. In fastening it to the stretcher work downward from one of the top corners until you have all the patterned edge attached to the pins.

"Now notice how many inches on the top bar of the frame are covered by the long border edge and how many inches at the side and then adjust the remaining two sides of the frame to correspond exactly in the number of inches. Fasten the other short edge of the curtain, which will be the top edge when hung, and lastly fasten the other long edge to the frame pins.

"The last edge may have to be puckered a little to make it fit over the pins, but the puckering will not show when the curtains are dry, and, what is more to the point, the edge will not pull down after it is dry.

"One other thing that should be emphasized is that the long border or patterned edge of lace curtains should always be dried at the top of the frame. Removing the curtains from the stretcher after they are dry requires some care. One should not try to take the edges from the pins until the frame has been sufficiently loosened, so that there will be no strain on the delicate mesh; otherwise threads are almost sure to be strained and broken.

"A curtain stretcher to be entirely satisfactory should have movable pins and should be made of well seasoned wood. Stretchers having stationary pins may or may not have the pins placed at intervals which will match the scallops in the particular curtains one wishes to clean, and unless they happen to match exactly the size of the scallops it is not possible to dry the scallops in good shape. Stretchers which have movable pins can be perfectly adjusted to either large or small scallops."

A SMALL SIZE.

Little Honey Needs a Party Gown Like Big Sister's.

When the small person speaks a piece, goes to dancing class or a birthday party, she needs a smart frock.

CORRECT FLARES.

The cut shows one of organdy trimmed with val lace and insertion set around inverted scallops. The tunic falls over a sash of pale pink ribbon, worn low, as do French children.

American Chop Suey.

Two pounds of veal from the shoulder or leg will be required for the chop suey. Cut into cubes and fry lightly in a little butter. Add a tiny bit of onion, two bananas cut in cubes and a small can of button mushrooms sliced. Season highly, with salt and pepper and add half a teaspoonful of curry powder. When the bananas and mushrooms are brown cover with cold water and simmer for twenty minutes; thicken slightly and serve. The bananas may be omitted and celery substituted if desired.

ALBERT COLLEGE THRONGED SUMMER SCHOOL POPULAR

Increasing in Numbers and Interest — Dr. McLaughlin Deals With "The Coming of Christ"—Other Features of Thursday's Session

Delegates are yet arriving at the Quinte School in Session at Albert College. About 125 have registered. They lodge and take meals at the college. The afternoons are spent in rest and recreation. Friday afternoon there will be field sports with prizes. Thursday delegates enjoyed a motor ride around the city and suburbs kindly supplied by City Leaguers and other friends.

Several ministers from the surrounding district have enjoyed some sessions. Rev. M. E. Sexsmith, B.A., L.L.B., Pres. of Conference, and Rev. J. H. Armip, B.A., from Mission Rooms, Toronto, were in attendance Wednesday. Greetings were sent to the Inter-denominational School in session at Ontario Ladies' College, Whitby. Dr. McLaughlin's Bible Study classes are of intense interest. His deep devotional spirit, his utter sincerity and his thorough grasp are among the richest assets of the school. Dealing with Luke 21, verses 5th to 36th, with special reference to verse 32, he said that Jesus knew all things essential to the establishment of his kingdom, but he was subject to limitations. He became our brother, was tempted in all points like as we are, but apart from sin; thus He is able to sympathize with those who are tempted, and to succor them. Jewish thought dwelt on the establishment of a glorious kingdom for them; their conception had become materialized.

Of the day when the Son of Man shall come in a cloud with power and glory, Jesus said: "I do not know when." Down the ages people have said, "This is the time." "At such and such a time the Lord will come." It is no new thing. They locate the time exactly, but Jesus said: "It is not for you to know the time and the seasons which the Father has placed within his authority, but ye shall be witnesses." It is sure to come, but no man can know when. It is for us to be witnesses of the presence of the Holy Spirit.

Paul expected his Lord to come. At Corinth he wrote his first letter to the Thessalonians. He had preached words of wisdom at Athens, but so far as we know, no church had been founded there. In weakness and distress he came to Corinth. How he longed to be again with the Thessalonians and Philippians. Timothy and Silas had brought back good word from Thessalonica and Philippi and (Acts 18:5) Paul was "constrained by the word" (R.V.) When discouraged did you never feel constrained by the word? You had sown good seed and had not seen the results expected; when, lo! you saw that which led you to believe the good seed had brought forth fruit, and you went back to your work encouraged.

The first 3 chapters of the Thessalonians are affectionate, for he loved them. He praised God for the good news that came to him. Chapter 4 and 5 gave instructions about certain things. He extorts them to brotherly love. They had been pagans, and the old life still threatened. He lovingly warns them they cannot be selfish or unclean and give service to God. "This is the will of God, even your satisfaction." Paul and the Thessalonians had expected Jesus would come again. Some of those to whom Paul had ministered had died and their friends thought "They will not be here to meet the Lord when He comes again", and had become unsettled in their minds. 1 Thes., 4 verses 13 to 18, were most comforting to them. No one but an apostle of the Christ would have dared to have spoken those words or to have expressed such a hope. Paul didn't know when, but sometime He would come; didn't know how, but knew He was coming.

Moreover the Lord who is coming is already come. Jesus had said, "I will send the Comforter." "I will not leave you comfortless; I will come. It meant and means the actual presence of Jesus. Since Pentecost, Jesus is actually with is disciples. He knows use and is with us, sanctifying and authorizing; and He is coming and bring with Him those who died in Him. This is an inextinguishable hope.

The delegates read in unison the 89th Psalm, written by one of the ancient Hebrew poets. The hope that the kingdom of David would be preserved had persisted, amid shock and storm, amid danger and darkness, until it became an all-absorbing passion. Yet the time came when the Holy City was taken and the people made subjects. Still it was a hope—hope deferred. This Psalm came out of the darkest times.

Referring to Rev. 20 in answer to inquiries, Dr. McLaughlin said there was nothing about 1000 years—a millennium—in teaching of Christ or Paul. The Book of Revelation is filled with wierd imagery of the Old Testament, and in it also are traces of ideas from the Jewish Book of Enoch, written before Christ, but not a part of Old Testament Scriptures. John says nothing about millennium in the Epistles or Gospels—which are alter books. The idea that Satan would be cast into a dungeon, is an old Jewish idea, current before Jesus came. In Isaiah 24:21, reference is made to Satan, "The host of the high one on high." The prophet saw a new era of Salvation coming. Some invisible forces of evil should be destroyed. "After many days" they shall be "visited", i.e., dealt with by authority of Jehovah and punished. In Isaiah 27, the prophet declares that Jehovah will slay the dragon—not the actual monster of the sea slain by literal sword of Jehovah, but Jehovah shall slay Satan.

Before the kingdom of God is established fully, spiritual wickedness in high places must be destroyed. The winning of a great war will not of itself establish the kingdom. We are fighting this war every time we resist temptation or help someone else overcome temptation.

"Pilgrim's Progress" is a great and wonderful book, giving in allegory the spiritual history of humanity, but we do not interpret it literally. John, writer of Revelation, was acquainted with the highly poetical books of the Jews and Relevation is of this type. When the writer speaks of beasts coming out of the sea, no one imagines these are physical beasts. They are symbolical representations of forces of evil. The 7 angels; These represent great forces; acts of divine government. One thousand years! It is wrong to interpret this as a set, literal period of time. People who profess to have the key to the Book of Revelation thus, are deceiving themselves. The world is not getting worse, notwithstanding the world-war. We should be ashamed to look into the faces of our soldier boys going out to fight for truth, honor and liberty, and then believe the evil forces were triumphing. When we go of into fanciful interpretations we are apt to miss the real vital and higher things of life.

The chains of the dragon refers to forces already working in the time before our Lord. Great and good forces are restraining the evil forces—Satan breaks bounds from time to time. We have been putting a chain on one limb of Satan recently in the banishment of the Liquor Traffic; but Satan will try to snap the chains again. All through the centuries we have been chaining Satan. Not more than 2,560 acres will be leased to one applicant.

Applications for a lease must be made by the applicant in person to the Agent or Sub-Agent of the district in which the rights applied for are situated.

In surveyed territory the land must be described by sections or legal sub-divisions of sections and in unsurveyed territory the tract applied for shall be staked by the applicant himself.

lennium is now. Our Lord is coming. Let us be ready.

So intense was the interest of the school that when the Doctor concluded his masterly study, the delgates could not refrain from applause.

Prof. G. F. Stewart gave another talk in the afternoon on "Great characters in Fiction." He is showing us, as few are able to do, the value of the best in literature. Among the characters briefly sketched were Fito, the beautiful boy who gradually deteriorated under the subtle influence of selfishness; Macbeth, Jean Valjean, which he described as the greatest novel of all time, and Dickens' Little Nell. He closed by reading selections from Whittier's "Red River Voyagers," and "Eternal Goodness" and by quoting Tennyson's "Crossing of the Bar," the readings and quotations illustrating the poet's thoughts as to the river and the sea as symbols of life and death.

In the evening Rev. R. T. Richards, B.A., gave a thoughtful and practically helpful paper on methods and aims of the Literary and Social Department. The E. L. is many sided. An important factor is the literary and social work. The League ministers to "body soul and spirit. "It is the mind that makes the body rich." A League should have a small, well-selected library; or where there is a Public Library, arrangements might be made to furnish individual members, through this department, with books. Books interpret the meaning of life. We can have the wisdom of past ages, and thus make progress by using and developing the knowledge of the past. The Bible is a great field for literary work. There we have Psalms—songs of praise and penitence—Drama and Essay, simple Gospel story, records of the early church and letters of friendship.

Biography is a rich field—Joshua's military career would compare favorably with that of modern military leaders. Then Knox, Luther, Wesley could furnish helpful studies. Poetry enriches the mind and stirs the emotion. Wordsworth describes and interprets nature. Tennyson brings us in touch with human life.

The E. L. is not a Social Club, but should raise the tone of social life. Prayer meetings and class meetings are good, but do not supply, of themselves, the stimulating social atmosphere. Socials should not be primarily for raising money. A good wholesome social does not necessarily mean something to eat, although the Anglo-Saxon never refuses that part of the entertainment. Friendly visits of neighboring Leagues are helpful. The Social and Literary Department has a great responsibility and a great opportunity.

Rev. M. E. Sexsmith, B.A., L.L.B., President of Conference, assured the school of the prayers and best wishes of the Conference. He spoke briefly and forcibly on "Our Task." We are living in the greatest year in all the history of the world. Wonderful things are happening, that in other times would be counted marvelous—for instance, Prohibition aeroplanes, chemical inventions, etc., of this year will mean much in time of peace. Everything is being changed. No more will Germany be the centre of culture of manufacture, of music or learning. This time of transition is the Gethsemane and the Calvary through which the Kingdom of God will be ushered in. What is our task? What are we doing? Are we living in each day in the high and holy principles. We must keep Canada right for the boys when they come home. We haven't time to spend in frivolity, nor money to spend on cigarettes. Are we preparing to take the place of leaders; to step into the breach? We need to train others to take the places left vacant by the noble dead. The great sweep of Temperance gives us a great opportunity, not only to keep Prohibition, but also to save those cursed by strong drink. Three years are ours to bring them into the fold of Christ. We must be up and doing. What we are learning at this school should be translated into action. We must take Canada for Christ.

Rev. F. H. Sangford, B.A., also gave a stirring address, a report of which will appear later.

NOTES

A photo of the school was taken last evening, just as the sun was descending. The majority of the delegates are young women, but these were flanked by the young men and ministers present. As the delegates are an active bunch, the photographer was kind enough to caution us "to keep quiet."

FIELD SPORTS AT THE SUMMER SCHOOL

Delegates Spend Afternoon in Outdoor Recreation—Feel Need of Open Air Recess—Regular Classes are Rapidly Growing in Interest—Friday's Session

Yesterday afternoon the delegates to Summer School held their Annual Field Day on the campus of old Albert. The Committee of Management was composed of Rev. W. P. Rogers, B.A., a former athlete of Albert College; Miss Hawkins and Miss Cox. The races and games created much amusement. The prizes were awarded according to the Y.M.C.A. Canadian Standard Efficiency Test. Miss L. Holden and Miss Burkell won the championship prize for ladies and Revs. W. W. Jones and W. P. Rogers for men. Many other prizes were awarded.

Promptly at nine o'clock in the morning the delgates and some visitors met in the chapel for Bible study, under the leadership of Dr. McLaughlin. A most helpful feature of these studies is the talks to the students on personal experiences. Prof. McLaughlin brings home the truths to the conscience of the individual. The school is designed to train leaders, but these leaders need to be pure of heart if they are to have the vision. In opening, the Doctor emphasized the strength that comes from taking heed to our ways according to the word of God. "Thy word shall I lay up in my heart that I shall not sin against Thee." Lay up some word daily in the heart as a treasure. "Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path.". 1 Thessalonians is among the first of Paul's letters to the churches; II Thessalonians among the last. One can see the warm friendship between the aged Paul and his spiritual child Timothy, a touching reminder of the rich spiritual fellowship. In II Thess. Paul gives counsel to people disturbed in their minds about the coming of our Lord. Some had given up their work, expecting Him. What's the use of working if Christ is coming? they thought, and they were disturbing and unsettling others. It was true then as now that idlers are buzybodies. Paul counsels: be ready, be purposeful, then when the Lord comes you will be ready. Peter gives similar counsel. Do your work every day. Do your duty; then you will be sure of "well done, good and faithful servant."

After visitng Ephesus, a commercial centre closely related to Corinth, both being seaports, Paul returns to Antioch, at which place he receives a disturbing message about the churches in Galatian. Some Jewish Christians were preaching a false Gospel. They were sincere; but it is not enough to be sincere. Humility, modesty, a willingness to learn should go with sincerity, else harm may be done. These Jewish Christians, instead of doing missionary work in other places, were following in Paul's tracks. In Galatia were many Gentile converts knowing little of the Mosaic law and Jewish customs. They had faith in Christ though. Jews and Gentiles were living together in Galatia. These Jewish Christians were now teaching that every Christian must be or become a Jew must conform to the law, keep the feasts, bear the marks of a Jew. It was a crisis. They were putting these things in place of faith in Christ. If those who believed in Christ were not saved without conforming to Jewish customs then Christ was not all-sufficient. How intolerable the teaching of these Jewish Christians would have been to the Greeks, Franks, British, Japanese, Americans. But in the history of the Christian church the same wrong idea has crept in time and again. You must dress in a certain way to be a Christian. You must pray through a certain form. You must receive the Sacraments from men ordained in a certain way. And among Methodists, some have believed you must be converted in a certain way or by a certain method. These Jewish Christians taught that Paul was not really an Apostle. In II. Cor., chapters 10, 11 and 12, Paul handles his enemies without gloves. He was going back to Galatia, but in the meantime sends a letter. He refers to his own commission when he defends his Apostleship. In Galatians 2: 11; 15ff, he says we are not justified by the works of the law but by faith in Christ. Did Christ, therefore, (speaking of Jews) make us sinners? God forbid. We found salvation in Christ and preached salvation to the Gentile. Now if having believed in Christ, we say we must do this or that, we are slighting the work of Chirst. "I have been crucified with Christ, and it is no longer I that live, but Christ within me."

The Doctor had heard Father Bernard Vaughan preach on the "Reasonableness of Faith." Father Vaughan said that faith was "believing something on good authority." But we believe not simply about Jesus, but we believe in Jesus os our personal, present Lord and Saviour. That is vastly more and better than believing something on the authority of others. Of course we believe what the Apostles tell us about Him, but we also believe Him. "Christ liveth in me," a present personal friend. Keep on trusting Him, even when depressed or self-condemned. With trust comes obedience. Faith becomes the fulfilment of the law. We are then under the law of Christ.

Prof. G. F. Stewart's talk on "Tongues in Trees; Sermons in Stones; Books in Running Brooks and Good in Everything," which he translated as "God in Everything" was in the opinion of some competent to judge, one of the best they have ever heard. The first book ever written was the Book of Nature, and it is the greatest, except one. It has much to do with literature. We can not appreciate the best literature unless we understand and appreciate nature. The wonders of nature are described in Job and the Psalms. Christ used natural phenomena to illustrate his truth. God is pregnant in all His world. No one is so reverent and adoring as the Christian who is conversant with nature. Every star is an embodied thought of God. Some go through life with eyes closed. "A primrose by the river brim, a yellow primrose is to him; and nothing more." Tennyson, however, said of the flower: "If I could know you, you, root and all, and all in all, I would know what God and man is."

Truly "Earth's crammed with Heaven, and every common bush aflame with God." The speaker mentioned some of the wonders of nature and some wonders of the infinitely small, and maintained it requires a greater degree of faith to believe the truths of science than religious truths, c. g., the strength of gravity required to hold the earth in its orbit is equal to that of a solid column of steel one mile square from the earth to the sun. Science resolves all matter into atoms and molecules and affirms that these are composed of electrons. What is an electron? It is not a material thing but a mere centre of force; So in the universe there is nothing but force and energy. The speaker expressed the opinion that all forces and energy were manifestations of the will of God. God created all things for himself. The mind of man measures stellar distances, weighs the sun and tells what stars are made of. But greater than the mind of man are spiritual forces. "Man was made but a little lower than God." All spiritual forces of the universe are at our disposal if we will but utilize them. Prayer is the tapping of the resourses of God.

In the evening Rev. S. T. Tucker, B.A., spoke on the Citizenship Dept in relation to social service. Membership in church and E. L. two-fold. It brings

Twenty-Four Officers Among Casualties—Son of Sir Wm. Reid Missing

St. John's Nfld., July 7.—Yesterday's casualties indicate that the Newfoundland battalions suffered even more severely in last week's battle than previous messages indicated. Besides ten officers reported yesterday wounded, eight are today reported killed and four missing. The killed are: Capt. Eric Ayre, Lieutenants Fred Mellor, Hubert Herder, Richard Shortall, Gerald Ayre, John Ferguson, William Pyall and Wallace Ross.

The four missing are: Lieutenants Wilfred Ayre, Bruce Reid, Clifford Rendell and George Taylor.

Capt. Eric Ayre, reported killed in the list, was the second son of the late Chesley Ayre, director of Ayre & Sons, Ltd., merchants of St. John's. His elder brother, Captain Bernard Ayre, serving with the Norfolk Battalion in the British forces, was reported yesterday as killed also. This leaves their widowed mother childless. Lieut. Gerald Ayre was a son of Frederick Ayre, a member of the same firm, and Lieut. Wilfred Ayre, reported missing is a son of Charles Ayre, third member of the Ayre firm.

Lieut. Bruce Reid, reported missing, is the eldest son of Sir William Reid, of St. John's and Montreal, president of the Reid railroad and steamship enterprise.

COMPLICATED PROHIBITION

Liquor Paid $22,500 Excess, but Wants no Return

HALIFAX, N.S., July 7.—The prohibition bill passed at the recent session of the Legislature, which brought the City of Halifax under the provisions of the law, went into effect after only one-fourth of the year had expired on which the liquor dealers had paid $34,000 in license fees. This left a balance of $22,500 paid to the city for which the dealers have had no return. At the meeting of the city council last night a motion was made on a reconsideration of the Board of Control that the city borrow the $22,500 to return to the liquor men.

The city council, with the exception of two controllers, refused to take any steps relating to the return of the money. They said the Legislature, which had cancelled the license, by passing prohibiton, should find the money, and it was argued that they had not asked for any such return of funds. The liquor men seemed pleased at the defeat of the resolution to make any return to them. The city also declined to pay the official vendors appointed under the law. Complications are thus piling up and it is known th dealers are planning legal action which will soon make matters interesting.

The girl wife is in the Lachine General Hospital, suffering from shock and a nervous breakdown. Schwartz was taken before fore Judge St. Cyr on a charge of kidnapping. He entered a plea of not guilty, but the trial had to be postponed owing to the condition of Mrs. Patructchuck. The preliminary trial was booked for next Wednesday.

Schwartz claims that he did not kidnap the woman, but on the other hand that she fell in love with him, and that he had made no attempt whatever, to detain her against her will.

The irate husband on the other hand, declares that his young wife was carried away bodily and held a prisoner.

SEVERE ENGAGEMENTS ON THE GALICIAN FRONT

Artillery Duels Bring Drawn Results — German Prisoners Taken in Close- Hand Attacks—Germans Press Allies back But are Finally Driven to Cover

Canadian Press Special

PETROGRAD, July 8.—On the Galician front there were artillery duels at many points. In the region east of Monasterzyska, on the Koropiec River, our troops continued to press back the enemy.

West of the village of Sadzavai east of Delatyn, we captured a position of the enemy and took prisoners, some Germans.

Southeast of Lake Narocz (south of Dvinsk), the Germans made a fierce counter-attack and reconquered part of trenches they lost yesterday.

Fighting continues. In a considerable part of the front between upper Niemen and the Pinsk marshes, there were violent artillery duels. East of Baranovichi in the region of the village of Odchovtchina the Germans pressed us back slightly as the result of a violent counter-attack, but our concentrated fire compelled the Germans to withdraw. In Barnaovichi region our machine guns engaged in duels with German machine guns in the course of several night attacks and reduced them to silence.

Anglo-French Armies Taking a Deep Breath

Terrible Toll Exacted From the Enemy in First Big Attack

LONDON, July 7.—Router's correspondent at the Press Camp, British Army in France, sends the following despatch under date of July 6:—

"The impetuous forward movement of the allies has been checked, but certainly not ended. The allies are taking a deep breath in preparation for another great thrust.

"The fighting is reminiscent of the Verdun battle, with the important distinction that the position is reversed and that the enemy has no such line of trenches to retreat upon as the French have had in defending their great fortress. At any moment the weakest link in the chain may snap and the broken ends fly apart.

"The enemy is straining every nerve, but is being attacked as never before. From the coast to the trenches of northern France our flowing streams of khaki are pouring in a literal flood, and I am unable to resist the contagious confidence of one army correspondent, who says: 'Now that it is possible to write with some fullness of the story of Saturday's attack, one almost shrinks from recording it, so terrible was the toll taken from the enemy.'

"Modern warfare is terrible, and no offensive is possible without the exaction of a dreadful toll.

"Many of our regiments suffered heavily as they advanced almost without cover in the face of a murderous enemy fire, the machine guns in particular wreaking awful havoc. We must face the truth bravely of the heavy price we must pay, and the nation must brace itself to the inexorable penalty."

A Paris despatch says: The French offensive has made steady progress, so that the left of the advance now rests on Hardecourt and the right on Estrees, while the entire intervening front has been transformed within the last four days from one of irregular lines that exposed some positions to a flanking fire into a homogeneous line without fissures or dangerous wedges.

The solidity of this front is in marked contrast with the fronts in the battles of the Champagne and the Artois, the irregularity of which permitted of a heavy crossfire being brought to bear upon the more advanced points. That part of the present front facing Peronne has the classic form of two echelons on two sides of Peronne, which is said to be the only one of the well-known dispositions laid down in ancient tactics that has survived the revolutionizing developments of the present war.

The right of this formation is protected by a defensive curve that units the new front with the old line. Tacticians declare that the manoeuvres that accomplished this formation constituted one of the most notable strategic phases of the war.

RAIN CHECKS BRITISH BRIVE

During the Past Few Days the British Have Captured 20 Guns, 51 Machine Guns

Canadian Press Special

LONDON, July 8.—Operations of the British army on the Somme front between the Ancre and Somme have again been impeded by an unusually heavy rain, the War Office announced today.

During the last few days the British have captured twenty guns and fifty one machine guns.

LONDON, July 8.—Announcement follows:—Very heavy rain which fell on afternoon and evening of Friday impeded operations, and between the Ancre and the Somme the night was chiefly spent in improving the forward position gained in yesterday's fighting. In the neighborhood of Gommecourt we bombarded the enemy's trenches with field guns and trench mortars. Near Neuville St Vaust, south-west of Lens, and north of Roclincourt, the enemy showed some activity yesterday.

Despite the unfavorable weather our aeroplanes rendered valuable service. In addition to active co-operation with the artillery and important reconnaissance work, they bombed hostile aerodrome at Douai, completely wrecking a hangar and doing other material damage. In the last few days we have captured twenty guns, fifty-one machine guns, large numbers of automatic rifles, trench mortars, mine throwers, canister throwers and searchlights and a mass of other material.

MADE A QUICK RECORD

KINGSTON, July 7.—It took Bruce Clerihue, nephew of James Robinson, Bagot street but seven days to become a hero, but within that time he has been at the front, was wounded and was back in England.

Cleriheu was with the Divisional Engineers and left England for France on June 1. He went into action on June 4 and two days later was wounded in the leg. The rapid manner in which the British handle their wounded is shown in a hospital in England. From the last reports he was getting along nicely. He has a brother in Petawawa Camp.

FRENCH CAPTURE 350 PRISONERS HEAVY FIRING ON VERDUN FRONT

Canadian Press Special.

PARIS, July 8.—Afternoon statement. Bad weather hindered operations on the Somme front yesterday afternoon and last night. A surprise attack delivered by the French yesterday evening in the vicinity of Belloy-ensaterre was in all respects successful. We captured 350 prisoners.

To the east of Estrees our troops made progress with grenades in communicating trenches of the enemy; fifty prisoners were taken by us.

North of Lassigny a detachment of the enemy which was endeavoring to occupy one of our minor positions, was dispersed by infantry fire.

On the front to the north of Verdun there has been violent artillery fighting particularly in the sectors of Hill 304, Esnes, Souville and at Damloup Battery. There were, however, no infantry engagements.

In Torraine we cleaned up with hand grenades a German post near Eezange and brought back a few prisoners.

The police were called to a house on Pinnacle street last evening, it being alleged people were creating a disturbance. All was quiet when the police arrived.

EARLY BUTTER BEANS

Butter beans, from the garden of Mr. James Allenden, 14 Thrnbull St., this city, exhibited at The Intelligencer office this morning, are truly rare specimens of early growth, those shown by Mrs. Allenden averaging six inches in length, and fully developed. The vines are yielding an adundance for table use, about six quarts being plucked this morning. Will some one now rise up and surpass this—if they can?

THE MARKET

A fair attendance was at the market this morning. Fresh dairy butter sold at 32c. per pound; fresh eggs from 24c. to 28c. per dozen. Dressed chickens sold at 65c. to 70c. each. Strawberries sold at 2 boxes for 25c., some were to be had at 11c. per box; cherries were sold at 2 boxes for 25c., and gooseberries sold at 10 cents per quart, and some at four boxes for 25c. Quantities of fresh vegetables were being sold. New potatoes sold at 15c. and 20c. a small measure. Small porkers were sold at $11 per pair.

AN EXCITING RUNAWAY

A horse, owned by Ed. Ketcheson, took fright yesterday afternoon, on Front St., opposite Elvin's Block. It came to a stop at Peck & Wills factory, after running down Front St., and across Market Square. Several automobiles were slightly damaged by the swaying of the wagon behind the horse.

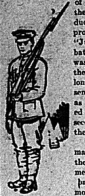
MILITARY MATTERS AT BARRIEFIELD HEIGHTS

AND THE BAND PLAYED.



Just about the time that the 156th battalion was paraded for inoculation, Bandmaster Coughlin, with a marvellous conception of the eternal fitness of things paraded the band and produced a very appropriate program. "Just before the battle, mother," was played with all the pathos that belongs to this old sentimental song as the men marched up to get their second "jab" with the needle. As the men started to march back from the tent of the medical officer the band sent out the mournful strains of "The Dead March." When the suffering reached their tents and threw themselves on their hard and unfeathered beds, the band sent out the "last post" and following the cemetery call, the band struck up the regimental march, "The Campbells are Coming," without any sign of Campbells coming. The whole burlesque was well conceived, and although many of the men were real sick, they enjoyed the humor of Bandmaster Coughlin's conception, more than the band enjoyed the needle.

LEARNING TO COOK.

The following officers are attending the School of Cookery:

109th Battalion — Lieuts. Moore, Henry, Bredin, Faithful, Diver.

154th Battalion—Lieuts. Gillie, MacInnes, Macdonald, Bogart.

155th Battalion—Lieuts. Kelly, Taylor, Nurse, Detler.

156th Battalion — Lieuts. Birrell, Coon, Rowe, McHendry. The course for the above officers will last for one week, and has been given to make officers familiar with the duties of a battalion cook.

NOTES

Lieut. Poyjalin, of the 93rd Battalion, has been transferred from "C" Company to "D" Company.

The 93rd Battalion are all busy packing up their equipment in preparation for an early move.

Osler of the 155th won the mile and the 220 yards race. He is a good runner, and fit for the best athletic company.

A number of men from camp attended the moonlight excursion last night; their ticket coupons were accepted as late passes.

Some of the officers and men of the 155th Battalion are complaining of sore arms and a general feeling of indisposition as a result of inoculation. The battalion has been given its second dose.

Dr. Branscombe and wife of Picton, and Mrs. Patterson, widow of the Hon. William Patterson, visited the 155th Battalion yesterday.

Dr. Platt, ex-warden of the Portsmouth Penitentiary was a visitor in the lines of the 155th yesterday. Dr. Platt spent a pleasant hour with Lieut.-Col. Adams.

A board on clothing is sitting in the lines of the 155th Battalion. Lieut.-Col. Gillespie is chairman of the board.

Lieut. Webb, Lieut. Taylor and Lieut. Bennett, of the 155th Battalion, have been granted leave of absence and have gone to spend a few days at their homes.

The 93rd Battalion, Peterboro, will leave Barriefield Camp for overseas the first part of next week. The battalion is commanded by Lieut.-Col. Johnston and is in excellent condition for overseas service.

Lieut. Nurse, 155th Battalion, who has been on sick leave, was in camp on Wednesday.

The programme of moving pictures and illustrated hymn slides was added to in pleasure and profit by Master Percy Luther, of the 93rd Battalion, and Pte. Farr, 93rd Battalion, who ably sang two solos on Tuesday night.

Capt. Dodds, chaplain 155th Battalion, and Sergt.-Major Miller, W.O., 93rd Battalion, had a very interesting conversation on Wednesday, when it developed that both were in No. 1 Company, 57th Regiment, on a trip to Ottawa exactly twenty-five years ago. Both were in the ranks, but neither knew of the other until the conversation on Wednesday at the camp.

If arrangements can be made, the colors of the 155th Battalion will be presented to the battalion the latter part of this month. The donation is being made by the ladies of the Argyll Chapter of the Daughters of the Empire of Belleville, and the presentation it is expected, will be made in that city.

Dry stone walks have been built in many parts of camp. The 154th, 155th and 156th Battalions seem to be adepts in walk building. The thin limestone layers in the lower part of the camp grounds lends itself nicely to this kind of work.

5,804 UNDER CANVAS.

Shark Bit Legs Off

While Swimming in Spring Lake Charles Bruder is Terribly Maimed

SPRING LAKE, N.J., July 7.—Attacked by a shark while swimming in the surf here this afternoon, Charles Bruder a bellboy in a local hotel, had both legs bitten off, and died within ten minutes after lifeguards brought him ashore. The catastrophe happened during the afternoon bathing hours, and was witnessed by hundreds of sojourners at the big beach front hotels, occuring directly in front of the new Monmouth, the largest hostelry here.

Because of the low tide Bruder, who was a strong swimmer, was about one hundred feet beyond, the outer life line. The guards, Geo. White and Chris Anderson, were watching him because of the distance he was from the beach, when he suddenly called for help. At the same minute a woman on the beach, confused by the bloody water, shouted that "the man in the red canoe has upset." The guards, in the meantime, had started launching their boat, and just as they reached Bruder's side, he said: "A shark bit me," and became unconscious.

White and Anderson brought the man ashore, but he died within ten minutes, before a doctor arrived on the scene. It was found that the left leg had been cut off clean above the knee, and the right leg just below the knee, and the shark had bitten Bruder in the side before taking his legs off, as there were teeth marks below the left arm.

No one was found on the beach who saw the shark. A few people noticed Bruder struggling in the water before he called for help, but, knowing that he was a strong swimmer, thought that he was enjoying himself and paid little attention until he called. The man was 28 years old, and, so far as is known here, has no relatives other than a brother living in Lucerne, Switzerland.

KILTS RETAINED BY HIGHLANDERS

General Hughes Says They Will be Used By Canadian Scots

"Every Highlander who leaves Montreal will go in the kilts, and he will go to the front in the kilts, too," said Major-General Sir Sam Hughes last night, apropos of the recent statements from England that the kilts were to be abandoned.

"We are looking after the uniforming of our Canadian soldiers in Canada," said Sir Sam, "and there is no question but that every Highland battalion that leaves Canada for active service will go in kilts, and wear them when he meets the enemy."

The statement of the Minister of Militia was particularly directed toward the recruiting detachment now being raised from the 5th Royal Highlanders. General Hughes, however, made it apparent that the statement applied to all Highlanders from Canada.

Gen. Hughes declared emphatically that the kilt was a particularly effective dress for soldiers on active service. It was, he stated, not merely useful, but economical, since it had proved an exceptionally adaptable garment for use in trench warfare, outlasting trousers and being much less messy in muddy weather.

Major-General Sir Sam Hughes arrived in Montreal yesterday evening, accompanied by Major J. Barrett, for a brief stay on his way from Valcartier to Ottawa. At Valcartier Sir Sam held a review yesterday of the 15,000 troops there in training under Brig.-Gen. E. W. Wilson.

"It was a splendid review," said Sir Sam. "The men showed that the work in the camp was going on well, and the general condition of the camp was all that could be desired. There was abundant evidence that Gen. Wilson was looking after things and keeping up the discipline of the camp. The work of training men for active service is going on well there."

With regard to the 5th Royal Highlanders, General Hughes said that the present orders were that reinforcement drafts should be raised to meet the demands for men caused by the recent heavy casualties. These drafts would continue until the necessary men had been raised. It is likely that arrangements with regard to the proposed further battalion of Highlanders will be concluded within a short time, Sir Sam stating that, as far as possible, he favored the recruiting of complete battalions, to go over as units.

FED FISH TO BEARS TO SAVE HIMSELF

Farmer Near Lake Superior Adopted Simple Ruse to Gain Time

ST. FAUSTIN, Que., July 7.—In the latter part of June and the opening weeks of July, bears have a hard time to make a subsistence, as the vegetation is not far enough advanced and the berries not ripe enough to provide them with the kind of food they need most. This year the situation seems to be worse than ever before in this locality, and numerous bears have been seen close to the dwellings of civilization. In other years little notice has been taken of them, most of the residents in the country considering that all quadrupeds are more afraid of human beings than the latter could be of them. Some even carried their good-natured tolerance so far as to throw a stone at any bear they sighted, and cry, "Shoo, there!" or "Get out," as they would have done to pigs or any domestic animal invading the precincts sacred to man. But that in their present state of hunger bears can be formidable antagonists has been demonstrated to the full satisfaction of Frank Hebert, a farmer near Lake Superior, who also works occasionally for Mr G. Maxwell Sinn at the latter's summer house in the Lake Superior district.

SHIED STONE AT BEARS.

On Sunday afternoon Hebert bethought himself of the excellent trout fishing in the Boule River, one of the best fishing streams of the Laurentians. A trail runs from his house to the river, more than a mile away, through a heavily wooded district, covering Gray Mountain. He waded up the river for some time, having such splendid fortune that he secured fifty or sixty trout. At one point where he was passing through an extremely narrow defile, with the rocky and bushy banks on either side coming steeply down into the water, he heard a queer noise. Engrossed in his occupation, he paid no attention at first, but as it became more frequent and pronounced he began nervously to look about him. On the bank which lay between him and his home he saw a great brown bear. As he caught sight of it another came alongside it from the bushes. Seeing themselves observed, the bears did not follow the habit which has always been credited to them, of making away as fast as they could. Instead, they redoubled their growling, which Hebert now discovered was the peculiar noise he had been hearing for a minute or two. though nervous, he allowed the contempt engendered by a lifetime in the district to govern his actions. He picked up a stone and shied it at the bears, shouting at the top of his voice as he did so. The old method did not work. The he-bear gave a guttural exhibition of his wrath, while the she-bear started down the steep bank towards Hebert. Luckily for him, two well-grown cubs poked out to the edge of the high bank from the brush, and their voices, added to the uproar, brought mother love uppermost in the she-bear's heart, and she went up the bank again. Several times both the male and female bears started down the hill, but the cubs could not be induced to follow, and they had to return to comfort them.

FISHERMAN WAS HUNTED.

Meanwhile Hebert wished wildly for the rifle hanging securely in his cabin beyond the reach of his children. In his plight he decided that flight would be the wisest plan. Therefore he started down stream slowly and quietly, so as not to excite the ardor of pursuit in the bears, but, as soon as he got out of their sight he hastened with all his might. He climbed up the bank 400 yards farther down, and made a detour on their side of Gray Mountain until they found the trail. Still with his bag of trout on his shoulder, the farmer reached the trail half a minute before the bears. The latter, with the smell of the fish as guide, immediately set up a horrible growling in the bush, threshing through the under-brush and coming through the woods with the speed that these ungainly animals can always display when they have need of it. Hebert is not a big man, nor is he in the best of health. With his load he was not able to run fast, but gripping his trout he made his way along the trail at as good a pace as he could accomplish. The weight of the trout, the banging of the bag against tree trunks and the slipping on stones here and there soon proved too much for the bag. A bad tear developed in the bottom, and a number of the largest fish dropped out. Shaking the rest of the fish into the centre of the bag. Hebert caught hold of both the bottom and the top and ran. He looked back only once, to see the bears stop at the pile of fish and begin eating greedily. He kept on. In five minutes they were on his trail again. He had learned something from the mishap to the bag, and began throwing a few trout here and there along the trail. Several times in the wild race the bears were close on his heels, but the fish saved the day. He prayed they would last, and they did, although he reached home with only a few of those he had caught, and in a state bordering on nervous collapse.

"Oh, it was terrible," he said, in relating it. "I do not know to this moment whether they wanted me or wanted the fish. I never saw so many bears together before."

Both Hebert and his neighbors are now inclined to make fun of the occurrence. They call it "the story of how Hebert fed fish to a he-bear, a she-bear and two wee bears." But the story of Hebert and the four bears is causing much more care to be taken of the children and women of the neighborhood. Hebert himself has spent many hours on the hillside with his rifle since Sunday in the hope of evening up the score, but so far without success.

WANAMAKER BELIEVED IN NEWSPAPER ADVERTISING

Tells Associated Advertising Clubs How He Built Up Mammoth Business

In an open letter to the Associated Advertising Clubs of the world at Philadelphia, John Wanamaker, the big department store man of New York and Philadelphia, told how he had built up his mammoth business by newspaper advertising He related the story of how the first day's returns of his first store in Philadelphia were $24,67, and $24 was used in advertising the next day. His argument is that daily newspapers offer the best medium for the retailer. The veteran insists the main thing is truth, keeping faith with the public, without which all advertising, whatever the medium, is liable to work injury rather than benefit to the man who spends his money for publicity.

The Intelligencer this week referred to some fine potatoes grown in the garden of Mr. Ackerman, West Moira street six of which weighed 1¼ lbs. And now Mr. G. W. Palmer of Canifton comes in with a small batch of potatoes that for size and weight rather places the product of Mr. Ackerman's garden in the shade. This is what they weigh:

1 Potato	10 oz.
6 Potatoes	2 lbs. 12 oz.
12 Potatoes	4 lbs. 8 oz.

Mr. Palmer asks if any one in this section can beat his products, which can be seen at the store of James Wallace & Co., Front street.

HOT-WEATHER RULES

Load lightly, and drive slowly.

Stop in the shade if possible.

"Water your horse as often as possible. So long as a horse is working, water in small quantities will not hurt him. But let him drink only a few swallows if he is going to stand still. Do not fail to water him at night after he has eaten his hay.

When he comes in after work, sponge off the harness marks and sweat, his eyes, his nose and mouth, and the dock. Wash his feet but not his legs.

If the thermometer is 75 degrees or higher, wipe him all over with a damp sponge, using vinegar water if possible. Do not wash the horse at night.

Saturday night, give a bran mash, lukewarm; and add a tablespoonful of saltpetre.

Do not use a horse-hat, unless it is a canopy-top hat. The ordinary bell-shaped hat does more harm than good.

A sponge on top of the head, or even a cloth, is good if kept wet. If dry it is worse than nothing.

If the horse is overcome by heat, get him into the shade, remove harness and bridle, wash out his mouth, sponge him all over, shower his legs, and give him two ounces of aromatic spirits of ammonia, or two ounces of sweet spirits of nitre, in a pint of water; or give him a pint of coffee warm. Cool his head at once, using cold water, or, if necessary, chopped ice, wrapped ice, wrapped in a cloth.

If the horse is off his feed, try him with two quarts of oats mixed with bran, and a little water; and add a little salt or sugar. Or give him oat meal gruel or barley water to drink.

Watch your horse. If he stops sweating suddenly, or if he breathes short and quick, or if his ears droop, or if he stands with his legs braced sideways, he is in danger of a heat or sun stroke and needs attention at once.

If it is so hot that the horse sweats in the stable at night, tie him outside, with bedding under him. Unless he cools off during the night, he cannot well stand the next day's heat.

THE FALL FAIR.

Now that agricultural enthusiasts are beginning to look forward to the fall fair, and making preparations accordingly, a word of admonition from the editor of The Farmers' Advocate may be in order.

"There is one line of work where many farmers are called upon to assist agriculture, and where too often they neglect to exert themselves," says our contemporary, "and that is the fall fair. Soon the fall fairs will be announced, and the published dates should act as a signal for all directors and committee men to get busy. Some directors are energetic in assisting the secretary before the event, on fair day, and after it is over. Others appear only for their badge and dinner ticket. Fortunately the majority of the officers are big enough men to see the importance of fostering the local fair, and making it a success, but we are appealing to the indifferent directors who had not the manliness to decline the honors when appointed, or the spirit to help when needed. A fall fair is a local event, and every farmer, whether an officer or not, should have pride enough in it to boost it in every way. A greater effort should be made to get the good stock out this season, but perhaps this cannot be done without sheds or some better accommodation. Few breeders will risk tying valuable horses or cattle to a fence post. There is also, generally speaking, room for considerable improvement in the display of agricultural products. Pianos and sewing machines are useful all the time, and are all right at the fair, but the farmers might adopt some of the merchants' enthusiasm regarding the display of goods, and make the products of the old farm eclipse anything the town can bring forth. Endeavor to make a strong feature out of some class of live stock or farm products; it will draw the crowd and help the fair for the succeeding years. Some fall fairs are noted for their show of heavy and light horses, others for their display of fruit, some again for poultry and vegetables, while still others make cattle a drawing card. The directors should work up these lines and advertise them. Go to the men, who have these things to show and get them to come out. Work for and boost the fall fair so that the people who are now beginning to see something in agriculture will be obliged to admit that after all there is nothing that can surpass the old farm and what it can produce."

INCREASED FREIGHT RATES.

According to an editorial in The Montreal Gazette, the Board of Railway Commissioners, after having had the matter before it for many months, has given a decision on the application of the railway companies for an increase in freight rates on a considerable number of articles. The result is a compromise, thus following a rule that applies to decisions over questions of wages as well as of rates for carrying traffic. Railway rates grew in the first place without much regulation. Competition, sometimes with water and sometimes between roads, tended to reduce them between certain points, and, to some extent, the rates between competitive points fixed the rates between all points. When the desire to regulate them took hold of legislators there was a good deal of slashing in some places, the result of which was not always wholesome. The Canadian Board of Commissioners from the start sought to deal justly between the roads and those who used their services. Rates were reduced where, by comparison with what was charged elsewhere or for like classes of goods, those about which complaint was made seemed excessive; but every application did not bring a cut. The general effect of the orders made was in the way of reduction. The present is the first occasion in which a general advance has been sanctioned. It comes at a time when prices of all commodities, including those which railways have to buy in large quantities, are rising, as they have been for years, and when it is no longer possible by expenditures on improvements for railways to reduce the cost of carrying freight.

DR PYNE ON BILINGUALISM.

Hon. Dr Pyne, Provincial Minister of Education, and author of Rule 17, in an address recently, referred to the bilingual agitation as follows:—"I say here to-night that in this Province of Ontario, where this Government is accused of prejudice, the truth is we have gone to the extreme limit of forbearance and concession. French is allowed to be taught under conditions that meet all necessary requirements, but this Province, you must remember, is an English Province—(applause)—and no matter how many agitations are carried on in other Provinces, and with moneys unconstitutionally raised, this Province is going to remain an English Province for all time. (Renewed applause.) The Government will carry out this Regulation 17 without change, without deviation of one word or one syllable. We will not depart from that fixed policy. We will stand or fall on that policy."

With reference to the suggestion which had been made, he said, in eastern newspapers, that the question be remitted to a Commission, Hon. Dr Pyne said the matter had been remitted to a Commissioner, and they knew what he found: that in some of the schools of the Province English had been excluded by the teaching of French. The speaker maintained that Regulation 17 was as equitable to the little French child in this Province as anything that could be framed.

London Chronicle: Mr Lloyd George has shown a wise instinct in linking the permanent Irish settlement to that of the future Government of the Empire. Under the existing system England can commit the British Empire to a world-war affecting its whole destiny without deigning to inform, far less consult, Canada, Australia, New Zealand, or South Africa. Such an anomalous condition of things cannot continue. One of the most urgent of our post-war problems will be the task of re-shaping our system of Imperial Government. That will be work for an Imperial Conference which, in accomplishing it, may solve the Ulster question and the problem of our Second Chamber at the same time.

Christian Science Monitor: A certain New York paper has been making some historical and literary investigations, with the result that it writes, "Wellington said that the battle of Waterloo was won on the cricket fields of England. Later—decades later—the bronzed and lithe-limbed athletes of the island kingdom gazed in open-eyed bewilderment upon the flaming indictment of Kipling. "The muddled oafs at the wicket; the flannelled fools at the gate." The only objection that we can think of this way of putting it is that Wellington never made the first statement, and Kipling never wrote the second. This seems to make a difference when you come to think of it.

A boy who has just finished at school and is about to attempt to earn his own living asked his principal for advice as to the books that would give him the broader education he covets but must acquire by himself. The reply was as follows: "For every work of fiction read also a well selected volume of history or biograhpy. Study living people as well as books. More may be gained from the perusal of a good newspaper than from the pages of many histories." There is better guidance in that advice than in most of the lists of "the best books" that have had wide publicity.

The United States Government in the past fiscal year collected $56,909,000 on account of the federal corporation tax and $67,957,000 on account of the income tax on individuals. The total received on account of the allied imposts was $124,867,000. Measures before Congress propose to more than double the rate of these taxes to provide money to make effective the policy of preparedness for war. Wealth may have doded some of its proper burdens in the past. In the present it is being made to pay its share.

KITCHENER'S ARMY GALLANTLY FACED A TERRIFIC GUN-FIRE

Brigades Advanced Line by Line in Perfect Order as if on Parade

With the British armies in the field, July 7. Wednesday night and Thursday morning the Germans made attempts to drive the British out of their position at Thiepval, but were repulsed with heavy losses. At other parts of the line, between La Boisselle and Montauban, there have been bombardments by the German batteries and by the British, who, by hard fighting, captured Poak trench and an important system of trenches, known as "The Quadrangle," northeast of La Boisselle and on the way to Constamalison.

Standing yesterday on the battlefield, north of Orvillers, and La Boisselle, I was able to look over a wide area of the zone of fire, and to see the new British positions. Straight in front of me was Thiepval Wood, marked by a ragged fringe of broken trees, through which appeared the ruins of the village. Heavy shells were falling there, and the British shrapnel was bursting thickly upon the high ground held by the Germans. To the left of me was Beaumont-Hamel.

Over this stretch of country, a few miles wide, has been fought one of the greatest battles of history, and here many thousands of British troops advanced upon the Germans with a spirit of self-sacrifice beyond the ordinary courage of men. They faced hellish fires, but without faltering. There was not one man who turned and fled at a time when the bravest of them might have quavered.

The number of casualties was high throughout the whole length of the front of the left of the British attack, and it was inevitable, because the valor of the men counted no cost in their assault against positions terrible and strong. They were men of the north country, who were on the left of the attack between Ovillers-La Boisselle and a point south of Hebuterne. As soon as the bombardment lifted at 7.30 o'clock on the morning of July 1, the brigade left its trenches and advanced line by line, in perfect order, as if on parade. It was evident that the Germans expected an attack here, perhaps the main attack, and had massed heaviest guns at this point. The barrage was intensive in its effect upon the British trenches, and the ground between the two lines. To reach this line the British had to pass through a wall of bursting shells.

The British barrage continued intensely, but at the moment of the infantry attack German soldiers stood up on parapets in the very face of this bombardment and fired upon the advancing British with automatic rifles.

Their machine gunners also showed extreme courage and forced their way over the broken parapets into No Man's Land and swept the British ranks with a scythe of bullets.

Many of the British dropped, but the others went on, charging the machine guns, with fixed bayonets, hurling bombs at the men on parapets, and forcing their way into and across the German trenches. Wave after wave followed, and those who did not fall went on into the Germans' first line, into the second line, then on again to the third line, and by a kind of miracle even to the fourth line. There were men who went as far as Serre. They never came back.

On the right of these north countrymen were other bodies of troops from the west of England, the Midlands, and eastern counties, with battalions of Irish and Scottish troops. These, too, had to face a great ordeal. When they went toward the German trenches, not at a rush but at parade step, under a storm of shells, the Germans came up out of their dugouts, and with machine guns and rifles fought stubbornly, even when the English troops reached them with bombs and bayonets.

Then the troops went on to the second German line under a still fiercer fire. By this time they were in an inferno of shellfire and smoke. Nothing was seen of them by the artillery observers until at 8.45 some rockets went up very far in the German lines, showing that some of the territorials had got as far as their last objective.

Some of the infantry went as far as Pendant Copse, southeast of Serre. Messages came through from them—urgent messages calling for help:

"For God's sake send us bombs."

But the German gunfire was so violent and so deep in its barrage that nothing could pass through it, and it was impossible to send up relief to the men, who had gone too far in their keen desire to break the German lines.

South of Beaumont-Hamel were some other battalion, whose advance was upon Thiepval Wood, and they fought with extraordinary resolution and hardihood. It was they who shouted: "No surrender," as their battle-cry, and these tough, hard men forced their way forward over ground raked by every kind of shot and shell. The German trenches could not resist their attack, and they stormed their way through, killing many Germans who resisted them.

In Thiepval Wood, where the trees were slashed by shrapnel, they collected their strength, formed into line, and stood the shock of several German counter-attacks. Then they charged and flung down the German ranks taking more than two hundred prisoners.

Women Warriors

Patriotism Prompts Many—Others Seek to Avenge Beloved Dead

LONDON, July 7.—The news that Lida Shimsky, strongly built Russian girl of 22, who for some months fought in the Russian ranks, is lying in one of the Riga hospitals severely wounded reminds one that there are quite a number of girls fighting in the Russian ranks, worthy prototypes of the fabulous race of female warriors in Scythia. Lida Shimsky entered the Lettish as an attested man, and fought so valiantly that when her sex was discovered she was allowed to remain in the ranks. This is the second time she has been wounded.

These women fighters are not new to Russian history. The ancient Russian "bylini" (sagas) are full of stories describing the gallant deeds of young "polenitsi," the maids of prehistoric Russia, who, side by side with their father and brothers, defended their tribal homesteads against the savage bands of robbers operating in the northern backwoods of Russia.

In 628, when the Greeks inflicted a crushing defeat on the fleet of Russian galleys which approached the ancient Constantinople (even then the possession of the "King City," as the Russians called it, was the dream of Russia's rulers), they found a number of fair-haired, blue-eyed maidens among the crews of the Russian galleys. Again in 971, after the battle of Dorostol, the victorious Greeks were amazed to find Russian women warriors in male attire and shining armor among the dead and the wounded.

Right through Russian history we find women fighters in the Russian ranks whenever Russia is fighting a truly national war. It is a noteworthy fact that it is only such wars, when Russia is fighting for her very existence, that produce these amazons. While hunreds of Russians in the Crimean campaign and in the present war, no such women warriors were heard of in the Russo-Japanese war of a dozen years ago.

It would thus seem that it is not a mere love of adventure that brings these women to the battlefield, but a more deeply rooted passion springing from the same source as the general patriotic upheaval of the nation.

Gen. A. D. Nicolaey, who in time of peace is known better as a brilliant military historian division on the eastern front, has made, with the assistance of some of his officers, a special study of this question, namely, the active participation of Russian women in the present war, and the results of their investigations forms a comprehensive volume.

There is now scarcely a regiment in the Russian army without one or two women warriors. They are mostly girls or young women of the better classes. A certain percentage of them, although a minority, are actuated primarily by a romantic impulse, by a desire to be near their sweethearts or husbands in the firing line. Others are there to avenge their beloved dead, but the majority have been prompted purely by militant patriotism.

They invariably join a regiment on the march to the front, when all formalities with regard to volunteers are usually waived. They try to pass as men, and very often succeed in doing so. Time after time their identity has been discovered only at a hospital after they had been wounded.

A Narrow Escape.

It was the woman's first visit to the cinematograph. For a long time she gazed in silent awe at the wonders of the screen, where all sorts of impossible things took place. She could hardly believe the evidence of her own eyes. These things were real—they were actually happening. She stared with goggling eyes as miracle succeeded miracle.

Then a motorcar appeared on the screen, coming into sight in the distance and racing along a country road at about a mile a minute, straight out of the picture at the audience. Catastrophe seemed inevitable, and she shrank back in her seat. Then, just at the critical moment, it swerved aside and dashed out of sight.

The old woman rose firmly to her feet, ignoring the protests of those behind her. "Come along, Annie," she said to her youthful niece. "It ain't safe here. That thing only missed me by a few inches."—London Answers.

Seven Wise Men of Greece.

The seven wise men of Greece were Thales of Miletus, Periander of Corinth, Cleobulus of Lyndus, Chilo of Lacedaemon, Solon of Athens, Bias of Priene and Pittacus of Mitylene. Some fishermen of Miletus sold a draft of fishes to a bystander. When the net was drawn in it contained a golden tripod, and the purchaser claimed it was his, while the fishermen contended that they sold only the fish that might be in the net. The dispute was referred to the oracle of the Delphi, who awarded the tripod to the wisest man in Greece. Thereupon it was taken to Thales, who declined it and suggested that it be given to Bias. He in turn refused to accept it, and thus it was successively declined by all the seven, and they were thereafter known as the seven wise men of Greece.

Dress and Fashions.

There are three cardinal principles among the dressmakers, milliners and designers who set the fashions of the world:

Make the fashions this year so that last year's apparel cannot be made over.
Do not make the materials too durable
Make the styles attractive.

A French statesman, with the candor of a humorous soul, replying to the toast of a dressmakers' association in Paris, thus finished his speech, "May your styles become more and more attractive, your material more and more flimsy." To have completed the ideal he need only to have added, "Your changes more and more sudden, extreme and expensive."

Greyhounds.

"A greyhound is probably the fastest creature that moves upon the earth," says a breeder of dogs. "It is on record that a greyhound beat the famous race horse Flying Childers. An absolute trial between horse and greyhound is difficult, because, while the horse can be ridden at top speed, it is impossible to insure that the greyhound will run all he can. But a dog that can start fifty yards behind a hare and overtake it within another fifty—and this is about what the greyhound does—must surely be faster than anything else that runs and has his superior only among the birds."

Tobago and Tobacco.

It is now generally agreed that the word tobacco is derived from "tobago," which was an Indian pipe. The tobago was Y shaped and usually consisted of a hollow, forked reed, the two prongs of which were fitted into the nostrils, the smoke being drawn from tobacco placed in the end of the stem. The island of Tobago, contrary to the belief of many, did not furnish the name for tobacco, but, on the other hand, it was given that name by Columbus, owing to its resemblance in shape to the Indian pipe.

Unversatile Nature.

Marie, the eight-year-old hopeful of a certain household of this city, was seated at the breakfast table one morning. As usual, eggs were served.

Now, either Marie was not hungry or she had grown tired of the inevitable bill of fare, for very earnestly she lifted her eyes to heaven and exclaimed:

"I wish to goodness hens would lay something besides eggs!"

Pin Money.

Look about in the shops now to see what new utensils you desire this spring. Set aside whatever sum of money you can spend, be it counted in dollars or cents, and with it buy some utensils to make housework easier. Perhaps a strawberry huller will come in for your choice, with a pineapple eye remover too. Perhaps what you most desire will be an awning for some given window or porch that has heretofore always been too sunny. Whatever it is, shop for it wisely and get it if you can afford it.

Son of Belleville Dies in West

John Todd Bullen Left This City When Young and Settled in Illinois

The death, at Merengo, Ill., on June 28 last, of John Todd Bullen, will bring to the memory of many of our residents, a bright young lad who was born in this city 61 years ago, graduated from our Public Schools, and until 21 years ago was a part and parcel of our city, possessing many friends, and looked upon as a model resident. In 1895 he accepted the position of Western manager of the Caldwell Lawn Mower Co., with headquarters in Chicago, where success attended his labors, and up to a short time prior to his death was a valued representative of the firm. His body now rests in a Chicago cemetery.

During his residence in the Middle West, Mr. Bullen made frequent visits to his old home, where a hearty welcome ever awaited his coming. The last visit was four years ago.

The deceased leaves a widow and one daughter, also four brothers and two sisters, the latter, Miss M. H. Bullen and Mrs. William McKeown residing in Belleville. His parents, the late William H. and Margaret Bullen, were well known and highly respected residents of this city.

A. B. BROOKER

No. 10, Casualty Clearing Station,
B. E. F. France, 14—6—16.

Dear Mr. Carr:—

I am writing for your son Corp. E. Carr, who is in hospital here. He was severely wounded in both legs about five days ago, and we almost gave up hopes at first. But now the doctor considers his life is safe, but I am very sorry to say he has had to have both his legs from below the knees, taken off. I know this will be an awful shock to you but it was the only thing to give him even a chance of life and now he has taken the chance and is really doing well, so well that the doctor is sending him down to the base today where he will write to you himself. He is a dear fellow and as brave and cheerful as can be. He and I have become very good friends. He is going to write to me and let me know how he is. We are all very fond of him here. I shall pray that he will get safely back to you and feel sure he will. He will be provided with best possible artificial limbs and will be able to get about again. I wired for his brother. He came down and saw him. I hope I have not told you the news too abruptly.

With good wishes. He sends love to all.

Yours sincerely,
A. B. BROOKER,
Chaplain.

FROM R. J. SHIRES

1st Can. Artillery Birgade,
1st Can. Division, B.E.F.,
June 15, 1916.

J. B. Carr Esq.,
Muscow, Ont.

Dear Mr. Carr:—

I have just come down from the front and feel that I must write to you about your son Cpl. E. A. Carr. We had a direct hit on a dug-out, yesterday, and I am sorry to have to tell you that your son was badly wounded whilst some of his comrades were killed. It is a great blow to us all, and we are very sorry because of your son who was doing splendid work. Though there is always hope, and your boy has gone back on the hospital train to the base where he will have every attention. Yet I fear the shock to the system will be very great. I have told you the boy is badly wounded, and am sorry to say that he has lost both legs. It is a very sad thing But I do ask you to remember as we all do out here, that this sacrifice, great though it is, is in line with that greater love of which our Lord speaks so highly. I saw a great deal of your son and know that he was thinking rightly and seriously and was in every sense of the word a good boy. We often had little chats as I went around and I am sure that his religion is a real thing to him. Of course though I am somewhat afraid. Yet he may recover. I am only sorry that I can not be along with him, but unfortunately my duties hold me here. However, I am sure he will have every care and attention and no one but wishes him a safe recovery. We all recognize his value and the splendid work he has done in this hour of his country's need for the cause of right and for God, and we are sure that our Heavenly Father is not unmindful of our sacrifice. I hope you will have better news from the base. His brother in 26th, was over yesterday.

Please be assured of our sorrow here and of very deep and real sympathy with you in this sad trouble.

Yours very sincerely,
R. J. Shires, Capt.
Chaplain, 1st Can. Art. Bde.

FROM PTE. HUTCHINSON.

France, June 24.

Dear Mother,—I thought I would drop you a few lines to let you know that I am well. I suppose you heard about poor Clayton. He got killed in the trenches. I was talking to him two days before he was killed and he was just the same as ever. I wish you would tell his mother I was talking to Captain Hudson from Belleville and he told me he sent Clayton's things home. Poor Captain Hudson is wounded now, but not seriously. I had a letter from father and Charlie and I sent them a post card back. I intend to go and see father when I go on pass.

I suppose you heard about that big battle we had over here. I was in it and lay out between the German lines and ours all day, then I was sent down to the transport. I hope you are not uneasy because you don't hear from me often, but we are very busy now. The Germans did not hold our trenches a couple of days, for we took them all back and more with them. We got over 500 prisoners when we took our trenches back. I was there when one of them said he was starving and we gave him something to eat, but they got a lot of our poor boys. I have not heard about Isaac for a long time and have tried to find him but could not. I was talking to Captain Allen from Belleville the other day and he asked me if I was glad I joined up. I told him: "You bet I am." We have got the Germans going now and intend to keep them on the run. Cheer up, I'll soon be home.

A CAUSE OF INDIGESTION

PEOPLE WHO COMPLAIN OF THIS TROUBLE USUALLY ARE THIN BLOODED.

Thin blodded people usually have stomach trouble. They seldom recognize the fact that thin blood is the cause of the trouble, but it is. In fact thin, impure blood is the most common cause of stomach trouble; it affects the digestion very quickly. The gland that furnish the digestive fluid are diminished in their activity; the stomach muscles are weakened, and there is a loss of nerve force. In this state of health nothing will more quickly restore the appetite, the digestion and normal nutrition than good, rich, red blood. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills act directly on the blood, making it rich and red, and this enriched blood strengthens weak nerves, stimulates tired muscles and awakens the normal activity of the glands that supply the digestive fluids. The first sign of improving health is an improved appetite, and soon the effect of these bloodmaking pills is evident throughout the system. You find that what you eat does not distress you, and that you are strong and vigorous instead of irritable and listless. This is proved by the case of Mrs. J. Harris, Gerrard St., Toronto, who says: "About three years ago I was seized with a severe attack of indigestion and vomiting. My food seemed to turn sour as soon as I ate it, and I would turn so deathly sick that sometimes I would fall on the floor after vomiting. I tried a lot of home remedies, but they did not help me. Then I went to a doctor who gave me some powders, but they seemed actually to make me worse instead of better. This went on for nearly two months and by that time my stomach was in such a weak state that I could not keep down a drink of water, and I was wasted to a skeleton and felt that life was not worth living. I was not married at this time and one Sunday evening on the way to church with my intended husband I was taken with a bad spell on the street. He took me to a drug store where the clerk fixed up something to take, and my intended got me a box of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. By the end of the first week I could feel some improvement from the use of the Pills, and I gladly continued taking them until every symptom of the trouble was gone, and I was again enjoying the best of health. These Pills are now my standby and I tell all my friends what they did for me."

You can get Dr. Williams' Pink Pills from any dealer in medicine or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

MUSIC AND DRAMA

COOP AND LENT'S CIRCUS WILL EXHIBIT AT BELLEVILLE

Arrangements have been consummated for the appearance of Coop and Lent's New United Monster Shows in Belleville, on Wednesday, July 19th.

This aggregation is entirely new and on its inaugural tour this year. The projectors of the big show are descendants of the original "Coop and Lent" famous Circus owners of a generation ago.

The past year has been spent in assembling and perfecting the New Organization and represents an enormous outlay of money in securing many features that are entirely new to the Circus field.

The arenic performance is given in three circus rings, two elevated stages and a large hippodrome track.

It is claimed that the Menagerie contains one of the largest and most diversified collections of wild animals ever presented with a travelling Zoo. Two trains of double length cars are used in transporting the big exhibition.

"PENNINGTON'S CHOICE PRONOUNCED A WINNER

"I choose to stick it out and fight," and right royally did Francis X Bushman, representing Robert Pennington, a superbly set-up young millionaire and society idler, adhere to his task of wiping out the evidence of cowardice when sent, by his betrothed 'way up into the woods to ask her father's permission to marry his daughter, and well worth fighting for was this child of the woodsman, so magnificently impersonated by pretty Beverly Bayne. "Bob" Pennington went up into the woods, though he was footsore and weary when he arrived, in the company, of a guide, who was on the inner circle of the tests young Pennington was to be put through. He was set upon by the uncooth woodsmen who "didn't want no city chaps comin' round their diggins, and it would have been all off with the son of wealth had not the famous Jim Jefferies been camping within a few miles, and brought Pennington back to his old athletic condition. Here we might add that Pennington's practice bouts with the famous champion pugilist was no myth—it was the real "Jim" training his young friend to meet his rustic antagonists, and how well Jefferies prepared his student for the coming ordeal was realized shortly after, when two ruffians were handled with ease. Not only did he save the humble home of his fiancee's father from passing into the hands of a traitor through lack of means to meet the final paymen, but he licked everything in sight until nothing was left to conquer.

The high dives into the water by the young lady who was supposed to be his sweetheart's twin sister, her interference when Pennington would have been knifed in the back; her delight when she witnessed his hand-to-hand victory over two burly ruffians who were determined to "do" him; and the final scene when, upon entering a room in the extensive log cabin, at the command of the father, he came into the presence of his own "Eugenie," attired as he had known her in city society—the real sweetheart who had swiftly preceded him into the forests and as the twin sister "Marie," assisted in putting her "Bobbie" through his stunts. But she saved him from himself, and that meant worlds to her.

The scenery, luxurious humble, rugged as the play progressed, was appropriate to the subject and fascinating throughout. Truly the hero made good and while his betrothed did put up a horrid job on him, the closing view of the couple, in the tinted light of a log fire gave one the impression that all was well. See "Pennington's Choice" this evening, together with other pleasing photoplays.

EDWIN AUGUST AND LILIAN TUCKER AT GRIFFIN'S MONDAY

Lillian Tucker and Edwin August, appear at Griffin's Opera House on Monday and Tuesday evening in a superb 5 part film adaptation of J. Du Lochu McPherson's famous novel, "Evidence," which will prove one on the most remarkable melodramas of photography that the current day has developed, the mystery is well sustained, the sentiment ably handled and the suspense tremendous. In addition to the above special offering 3 other selected comedies and dramas will be exhibited.

HUGE SETS ERECTED FOR "THE MADCAP" AT PALACE ON MONDAY

Sets of tremendous magnitude figure in "The Madcap," a five-reel Universal Red Feather photoplay which comes to the Palace Theatre on Monday and Tuesday, matinee and night, with Flora Parker De Haven in the principal role. One of these sets represents the exterior of a castle in Normandy with its huge medieval gate and towers stretching far up into the sky. Another shows the interior of the theatre on the stage of which is reproduced a scene which is a part of the photoplay. A third is an exact reproduction of a country circus in France with hundreds of performers and natives enjoying themselves in true Gallic fashion. In still another scene Flora Parker De Haven skilfully operates a hydroplane and flies over the ocean to a deserted island off the mainland, where her sweetheart is sketching. The aeroplane which she uses has since been presented to the U. S. Government by its owner, a young California millionaire.

Field Sports At Summer School

privileges and enforms obligation. If we were citizens in some lands, we would have obligations in war, but few privileges in time of peace. Germany had tried to mix up heathen and Christian ideals. It excelled in the development of machinery of Government. There was the spirit of militarism; the "Will to Power." But the two ideals will not mix. Their citizenship, well equipped and efficient, was the citizenship of slavery.

If Christians separate themselves from the obligations of Canadian citizenship, the evil forces will prevail. Provincial Prohibition involves social reconstruction. The bar-room was a strong, social centre. We must take the lead in a reconstructed social centre—Wholesome sports are needed. We should now have organized social life in the homes of the community. Canada has thrown much responsibility back on the people. Democracy will fail unless we have educated, trained citizenship. The question of our relationship to the Empire is looming before us—Canada, Australia, New Zealand, South Africa, India have sprung to the defence of British ideals. The European countries thought Great Britain was a fool for giving freedom to South Africa so soon after a rebellion. But this war has proved to the world that the truest loyalty comes from the development of the highest self-respect.

Ours is a world-citizenship. Every man has every possibility of aspirations of liberty, equality and fraternity. These are founded on the word of God. Each land must develop the type suited to its genius. Missionaries have found that if they are to win they cannot do so by Prussianizing, by imposing on the East or Western type. Canada will have people from all over the world. We must assimilate and make them ours. Canadian citizenship must be so broad and deep that it embraces all. They will go out to all the world. Canada is called of God to world citizenship.

Miss Florence Hall spoke on the "new Woman," the 20th century woman. The womans' question was misunderstood and ridiculed and yet the womans' movement, in spite of opposition, is going on to victory. Manitoba and Alberta have given the franchise, and Saskatchewan and British Columbia are following. Womans' sphere is in the home, but the home has so broadened in the changed conditions of modern life, that the home and the community are inseparably connected. Many women are indifferent, but young women, such as are at this school, should interest themselves in the women's movement.

Women should not marry men whom they cannot respect. Women have gone out into every form of respectable work, not because they have ceased to love home and children, but because they can do the work and do not wish to marry men who do not measure up to the standard. In California where women have the vote, effective laws dealing with White Slave Traffic are in force. When women get the vote the sound of the political carpet-cleaner will be heard. Some say politics are corrupt. What would you think of a man who would take his wife to an unsanitary house, lead her up stairs, and tell her he knows it is unsanitary and that some of the odors will reach her, but to use her smelling salts; as he couldn't clean the house nor permit her to do so.

Principal Baker was chairman of the meeting last evening, and of the close declared he had always been a temperance man, and knew of no reason why women should not have the franchise; but only a change of heart in men and women would bring about right conditions—Prohibtion and universal adult suffrage were good, but were not a panacea.

JOTTINGS FROM THE SCHOOL

Dr. McLaughlin and Miss Thorne, a student from the National Training School, explained its work and will supply information to delegates by personal conversation.

Many delegates have cameras, and snap-shots of groups are taken. These will be souvenirs highly valued.

Principal Baker is a genial host and a many-sided manager. His hay crop is excellent this year, and delegates are hoping an earlier season next year will leave the field ready for sports. The campus, however, is in good shape.

The school is a prophecy. The forces impelling these young men and women are the forces that will permeate the national life.

The delegates and visitors are expected to give a report of the school as it deals with Sunday school work, to their Sunday schools.

The delegates are delighted with Belleville, some of whom are visiting it for the first time. Others are renewing friendships of former years.

School closes on Monday.

President Higgs and all the officers have the work well organized, and are untiring in their efforts.

A FATAL BARGAIN
OR
THE MAN WHO DARED FATE
BY
NICHOLAS CARTER

Author of the celebrated stories of Nick Carter's adventures, which are published exclusively in the New Magnet Library, conceded to be the best detective tales ever written

CHAPTER I.
Daring Death.

When one least expects it, the hand of death may be outstretched to seize one.

The man with a green-baize bag plugged on resolutely through the swirling mist and drizzle, with his head drawn between them. It was thrust forward aggressively, nevertheless, as if in defiance of the portentous business that had kept him grinding at his desk until nearly midnight—and on such a night!

The man crouching in concealment under the brownstone steps waited and listened. At times he peered out cautiously, when the steps of an approaching pedestrian fell upon his ears. His eyes glowed with fiery intensity under the vizor of his low-drawn woolen cap. His shoulders also were hunched and his ugly, bullet-shaped head aggressively poised, as were those of the other; but instead of a green-baize bag, this man carried in his hand—a blackjack.

Now there is not, ordinarily, anything in or about a green-baize bag that would impel a midnight ruffian to violence, or even induce him to hazard a bullet or a knife thrust in order to secure it—an unpretentious cloth bag such as lawyers carry, tied around the neck with a green cord and containing, presumably, only a few legal documents.

One would have asserted very confidently, as a matter of fact that it was not worth stealing.

Nevertheless, when the man with the green-baize bag came nearer, the man under the steps crouched lower—as a panther crouches when prepared to leap at his prey.

Fifty yards away, on the corner of Lexington Avenue, a man was pausing to glance at his watch, as well as he could see it in the glimmering, drizzle-diverted rays from an arc light across the way—an erect, powerful man, in the prime of life, whose keen eyes and striking, clean-cut features evinced his rare mental vigor and sterling strength of character.

Only this man heard the cry—a single frantic scream of fear; choked almost instantly by a brutal hand, or silenced by the blows that followed as quickly and were witnessed by this solitary observer.

"Great Scott!" he exclaimed, startled. "That spells murder, or my name's not Nick Carter!"

Such a scene, though at first viewed only indistinctly through the night mist and drizzle, was enough to stir to instant activity the famous New York detective.

Nick did not see the leopardlike leap of the man from under the steps, nor the instinctive recoil of the man with a green-baize bag; but he heard the latter's cry, so quickly silenced, and saw the rapid rise and fall of his assailant's hand, as he dealt blow after blow while the two men battled furiously on the sidewalk.

As he approached them, running at the tip of his speed Nick also saw one of them suddenly collapse, with his knees doubling under him like hinges just before he dropped heavily on the pavement, then struggled upward once, only to pitch headlong over the curb and lie motionless in the gutter.

His assailant stooped and snatched something from his hand—the green-baize bag—then ran like a deer in the direction of Park Avenue.

Nick Carter sped after him like a hound after a jackal. The face of the great detective, who was still thirty yards from the scene of the brutal assault had taken on a look of ugly determination. He whipped out his revolver while he ran, then shouted at the fleeing man:

"Stop, thief! Stop, or I'll fire!"

One might as well have shouted at a cyclone.

The ruffian, obviously an alert, powerful fellow, in as good form as a trained athlete, swerved quickly and darted across the street, then was lost in the darkness close to a block of dwellings while he swiftly dashed toward Park Avenue.

Nick raised his weapon to fire at random, but saw a rapidly driven hack appear at the corner then turn in his direction. The danger of hitting the driver or an occupant of the carriage with a bullet deflected from the wall of the near building deterred him from shooting.

In another moment he was passing the motionless man in the gutter. He took one look at his gory, upturned face, bruised and battered, then continued his pursuit of the unknown assailant.

Darting across the street, directly in front of the approaching hack, Nick shouted to the driver:

"Look to that man in the gutter, cabby! Stop and care for him!"

He heard the response of the driver, or of some man in the carriage, as the vehicle whirled by him:

"Leave him to us! We'll fix him."

Then came two spiteful cracks of a revolver, evidently in the hand of the speaker, and the detective heard one bullet whiz by his head, and the second go flat against the wall of the nearest house.

Nick glancde back, and saw a swirl of white smoke above the rapidly moving carriage. He could not then believe, though it was his first impression, that the bullets had been fired at him; but rather, at the scoundrel he was after, and who at that moment quickly turned the corner of Park Avenue and ran north.

Nick did not delay to consider the matter. Resolved to secure this rascal, if possible, he continued his pursuit and turned the corner several seconds later, only to discover him half a block away, and running like a deer toward Sixty-fifth Street, where he again turned and vanished.

Despite his own redoubled efforts, the detective had not gained a foot when he reached the corner and again sighted his quarry.

The yeggman, if such he was, was sprinting for dear life, a dark figure plunging madly through the mist and drizzle.

The chance of dropping him with a bullet fired from that distance, and under such conditions, was only remote. Nevertheless, Nick fired two quick shots at the rascal who instantly ran in a zigzag course acro s the avenue. There he ran into greater peril for a policeman, who had heard the detectives's weapon, caught sight of the man soon after he turned the corner, and he at once joined in the pursuit, followed by several other men, who quickly saw what was taking place.

The chase continued north to Sixty-sixth Street, where the policeman began shooting, yet as vainly as Nick had done; and the fleeing man, rendered doubly desperate by the increasing danger, made for the only place that seemed to offer him a loophole through which he might escape—one of the surface openings of the New York Central tunnel.

He entered it with a leap, with the daring recklessness of one who carried his life in his hand, whichever way he turned—he entered it with a leap as if the earth had swallowed him.

If there are desperadoes who will thus dare death to elude the law, there is also an officer here and there who will do as much in its service.

Nick Carter arrived on the spot only a few seconds later, and close upon the heels of the policeman and the several observers who had joined in this man hunt.

Nick immediately recognized the officer, and at the same time caught sight of an approaching touring car some fifty yards away.

"Stop that auto, Grady, and get its searchlight," he shouted hurriedly, as he approached. "Be ready to drop it down to me. I'm going after that man."

Seeing at once that he was recognized Nick did not wait for an answer. He leaped while he was speaking, vanished into the black abyss, and came down with a crash on the bed of the tunnel. One foot struck a rail obliquely, and he was thrown heavily between the tracks. His revolver flew from his hand and went spinning away in the darkness. He heard it strike the rocky wall yards away, but he could not tell in what direction, and he thought more of finding his quarry than his gun.

As he scrambled to his feet, jarred by the fall, yet not much injured, he heard the crunch of the man's boots among the small rocks of the roadbed several rods away and he at once plunged through the gloom in that direction. Though he had lost the only weapon with which he was provided that night, he shouted commandingly, hoping that the threat might hold the fellow up:

"Stop, you rascal! Stop, or I'll shoot!"

The answer came back, accompanied with an oath, hoarse, harsh, and defiant, through the inky darkness; "Shoot, and be hanged!"

Then, or hardly a second later, the gloom was suddenly broken by a yellowish gleam in the far distance, a mere speck of light that rapidly increased in size and volume, soon throwing a glimmering luster upon the polished steel rails and revealing with grim, gruesome tomblike suggestiveness the smoke-begrimed tunnel walls.

It was the headlight of an approaching train an inbound express from Boston, due in the Grand Central at midnight and running eight minutes late.

Nick now had an advantage—he could see his man in relief against the increasing glow ahead.

Looking back, the ruffian could not see the detective in the dense background of gloom. That he realized the situation, however, and knew he was pursued by one as relentless and desperately determined as himself, were obvious; for he again increased his speed, plunging furiously on between the rails and toward the approaching train as if hoping to elude his pursuer—when it passed, or that he might be crushed to death under its grinding wheels.

Quick to seize the brief advantage mentioned however, Nick Carter sped like a hound after his quarry, gaining on him with every bound, reducing his lead each passing second—which also brought the onrushing train nearer and nearer.

The terrible jar imparted to its narrow confines could now be plainly felt.

Its rumble and roar was like that of a coming cyclone.

The glow of light had become an almost blinding glare, while the quivering rails, narrowing in the perspective, glistened with painful brilliancy.

Suddenly when the thundering train was about two hundred yards away, the fleeing ruffian glanced back and saw Nick less than ten feet behind him.

It was the detective's design to have throttled him from behind, then hurl him down in the gully between the track and the tunnel wall and pin him there until the train had passed—a desperate undertaking indeed, yet one of which Nick Carter was fully capable.

As if he knew that a battle for life and liberty must be fought then and there however, as well as begun and ended within thirty seconds, the ruffian turned like a flash and leaped at the detective's throat.

In an instant they were grappling in a terrific struggle, swaying like giants between the rails, the ruffian trying to throw Nick down between them, while the latter strove to force the brute into the gully at one side.

Death in the meantime, was rushing upon them with a thundering roar. The jar of its coming was like that of a thousand earthquakes. It tore nearer amid a lightninglike glare and a cloud of swirling dust and dirt.

"We'll be killed! Curse you, we'll both be killed! What d'ye want?"

Nick heard these words uttered with frantic yells in his ear. He felt the ruffian's hot breath on his cheek. He saw his face plainly now, in the headlight's glare, as they reeled in awful embrace between the fiery rails—a hardened hangdog face, with thin lips drawn and eyes blazing, a face from that moment indelibly fixed in the detective's memory.

Nick answered only, above the roar of the coming express:

'I want you, and am going to have you!"

This brought only a leonine snarl from the battling brute, who redoubled his efforts, impelled by the increasing horror of the appalling situation, or by the look of terrible determination on the detective's face. For another second, when it seemed as if the next would be his last, he was infused with super-human strength.

Then, at last, it proved futile against the combined skill and prowess of the great detective. With a sudden twist, Nick cross-hipped the ruffian, lifting him clear of the ground, and surged with him toward the tunnel wall—only to feel his foot slip on a round stone in the roadbed.

Both fell with crashing violence in the gully at one side.

Nick Carter's head struck the tunnel wall with a glancing blow, yet one that briefly stunned him. He was conscious, yet only vaguely, of jerking his feet clear of the rails, of feeling the ruffian slip from his grasp and wriggle away with frantic eagerness, and then the awful glare of light was turned to darkness thrice awful.

The locomotive had thundered by, and was swallowed up in whirling, swirling writhing clouds of dust.

In Nick's very ears, more terrible than the din of a million shrieking fiends, was the frightful noise of the wheels, the roar of each passing car, with a jar that seemed to shake the earth to its centre.

Specks of light flew by with blinding rapidity.

Against a suction like that of the maelstrom, Nick clung to the earth, pressing close into the rocky gully, while the dust and dirt swept over and around him like a sand storm in Sahara.

It seemed ages, these few seconds required for the passing of the train; and then, when he strove to rise, still dazed by the blow he had received when falling, Nick was dealt another—with a rock hurled at him in the darkness, cast by the miscreant to effect whose capture he had done and dared so much.

It was a chance shot only, in the gloom that instantly followed the passing train. Yet Satan sometimes serves his own and the missile reached the mark intended.

The rock struck Nick Carter on the side of his head, and he again dropped in the gully—oblivious of track and train, of glare or gloom—and to the fast receding footsteps of a fleeing man, who still clutched with viselike grip a green-baize bag.

Negro Battalion To Be Organized

Will Have White Officers—Rank and File Canadian Colored Men

MONTREAL, July 7.—A battalion of Canadian negroes is the latest development of the recruiting for overseas service. Notice to this effect was yesterday received by Col. Fages, acting O.C. here, with authorization for the organization o fNo. 2 Construction Battalion, C.E.F. This battalion will be formed along the same lines as No. 1 Construction Battalion, which is still recruiting one-half its force here. The new construction battalion, however, will be composed entirely of colored men, with the exception that its officers will be white men, in command of Lieut.-Col. Daniel Sutherland.

No further information was given as to where the headquarters of the Canadian negro unit would be, or as to the methods of recruiting. This is an entirely new departure with the army service, although there have been a number of Indian companies in various infantry regiments for years past, and of late several companies of Japanese have been raised in British Columbia.

No attempt has hitherto been made to mobilize the colored population of Canada, and it is expected that the call will meett with a good response, the more so as many of the colored families here are closely connected with the negroes who escaped to freedom on British soil before the American civil war.

When the present war broke out a number of Montreal colored people were anxious to start a negro battalion, while this idea was also broached in other cities and towns. They will now have opportunity to back up their loyal impulses with a battalion which will be utilized for some of the most important work of an advancing army—repairing the ravages caused by the enemy.

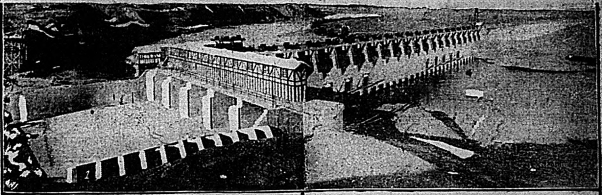
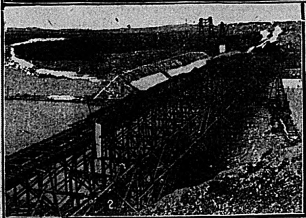
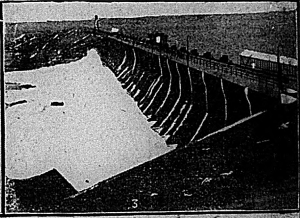
UNCONSCIOUS TEN DAYS

KINGSTON, July 7.—John Lawlor, the Erinsville young man, who fell from a third-storey window in a Napanee house has now regained consciousness after being insensible for ten days in the Hotel Dieu.

TURNING DESERTS INTO GARDENS







(1) Bird's Eye View of the Bassano Dam.
(2) The Dam Under Construction.
(3) The Sluice Gates Open.
(4) Distributing the Water.

OUT on the prairies of Western Canada and among the mountain valleys of British Columbia, deserts are being turned into gardens by the application of life-giving waters.

Every desert is a potential garden if this one chief necessity is met, though it is not fair to use the word desert or even an arid region, for Alberta is neither arid or desert. But nature may often be assisted in her great task of production, and this is what the irrigation systems of the Canadian West are doing.

In Alberta the Canadian Pacific Railway is developing the largest individual irrigation project on the American continent, with an area larger than the total irrigated area in either Colorado or California. Portions of a tract of three million acres will be included in this prosperous and fertile so-called "dry belt" region. The western section is already completed, including sixteen hundred miles of canals and ditches. The eastern section is in process of development where twenty-five hundred miles of canals and ditches will be required for the service.

On April 25, 1914, the great irrigation dam at Bassano, Alberta, was opened. Built across the Bow River, eighty miles east of Calgary, the huge structure, 7,000 feet long, will conserve the water of the Bow for the eastern section. Another great engineering work, which will serve the same tract, is a giant aqueduct at Brooks, thirty miles east, two miles in length, which carries the waters of a branch canal over a wide valley.

One has only to visit this great undertaking of the Canadian Pacific Railway to realize not only its magnitude but the results it will, indeed is, producing. Here is one of the smaller radiating ditches, filled with rippling water. On either bank nature has responded with a luxuriant growth, and a garden of productivity is the result. The wheat fields extend in another direction, showing a fine head of grain after imbibing the thirst-quenching waters, for nature thirsts as do humans. All kinds of growths prosper—fruits, cereals and garden truck, while dairying and live stock growing flourish wherever there is an irrigation canal. The country is filling up with what are called dry farmers for the waters ensure a practical certainty of crop. A six-year yield of Marquis wheat on irrigated land ran forty-four bushels to the acre, compared with only 29 on non-irrigable lands. Here the C.P.R. provide their Ready-Made Homes, where the settler is assisted generously in establishing a foothold.

Through southern British Columbia the effect of irrigation systems is shown in the flourishing orchards of the Okanagan, Arrow and Kootenay Lakes country, along the Cariboo road and in many another section. Thus this most ancient of natural aids as it is the most modern, dating from the Garden of Eden and continuing to the Alberta irrigation system is one that has contributed to the world's productivity and to Canada's wealth.

Chronometers Aboard Ship.

A ship's chronometer is the most wonderful and accurate timekeeper made, for upon its accuracy depend the lives of all on board. So accurate, indeed, is a ship's chronometer that it does not vary a second a day. An error of only a few seconds may put a captain of a vessel miles out of his reckoning at sea and run the ship into great danger. For that reason every ship's timepiece goes through the most thorough tests before it is pronounced perfect. It is set going in a very hot room and then transferred to a cold one, for it may be used in any part of the world, from the polar regions to the tropics, and it must always keep good time.

Most large vessels have three chronometers on board in case of accident, and whenever a vessel goes into port they are sent on shore and tested to see if they are still accurate. On board ship the chronometer is kept amidships, because there are the least motion and the smallest variation of temperature.

How Japs Play Ken.

In its most widely practiced form the basis of the Japanese game of ken is that the fully outstretched hand signifies paper, the fully closed hand a stone, and two fingers alone extended, the rest being closed, scissors. Each of the players, counting one, two, three, throws out his hand at the moment of pronouncing three, and the one whose manual symbol is superior to that of the others, according to the theory of the game, wins the trial. Superiority is determined on the hypothesis that whereas scissors cannot cut a stone they can cut paper and whereas paper is cut by scissors it can wrap up a stone—consequently scissors are inferior to stone, but conquer paper; stone is inferior to paper, but conquers scissors, and paper is inferior to scissors, but conquers stone. There are innumerable varieties of the game.

Why Mothers Sing to Babies.

Psychologists who have carefully studied the characteristics of instinct in women have discovered just why mothers sing their babies to sleep. It is not merely inspired by the expectation of better sleep in their children, but it is the primeval call of the feminine nature. It is a material prompting which occurs naturally to each mother.

Savage mothers who are never known to sing upon other occasions invariably hum and croon to their children at night and upon one other instance, when they are planting seed. It is a peculiarity of the Zuni native women and one which has been but recently understood. The theory of primitive peoples is that there is some mysterious connection between the sound of a woman's voice and growing things.

Nice Ballroom Ornaments.

Count Moltke in 1856 accompanied the crown prince of Prussia to Moscow to attend the coronation of Alexander II. At a ball in the Kremlin Moltke was introduced to a group of picturesque potentates from central Asia, with their girdles stuck full of daggers and pistols in the Albanian manner, and he begged to know whether these firearms of theirs were loaded. "Why should I carry them if they were not loaded?" replied the spokesman of the party, and in a letter to his English wife Moltke confessed that he had never experienced such a setback all his life. "Here at last," he said, "I have found 'un homme serieux,'" a man who is what he looks and means what he says.

An Ingenious Picture.

There is in one of the European picture galleries a painting called "Cloudland." It hangs at the end of a long gallery, and at first sight it looks like a huge repulsive daub of confused color without form or comeliness. As you walk toward it the picture begins to take shape. It proves to be a mass of exquisite little cherub faces like those at the head of the canvas in Raphael's Sistine Madonna. If you go close to the picture you see only an innumerable company of little angels and cherubim.

Dodging Her Cooking.

"Jack, are you coming home from the office tonight?"

"No, Juliet, dear; I am going to the club for dinner with visiting friends, and then we are going to the play."

"Well, it's all right, Jackie. I will accept an invitation to the Whillikens' bridge party and dine with them. And, besides, this is Mary's day out."

"Yes. I knew that."

A Social Lunch Route.

"Where are you heading for now, old chappie?"

"Dunno exactly. I've been to five receptions and had five macaroons and five cups of weak tea. Do you know of any affair where they are serving ham sandwiches?"

Talk and Art.

"It's a treat to hear Dobson talk about art. He seems to have the subject at his fingers' ends."

"Not quite; merely at his tongue's end. If he had it at his fingers' ends he would talk less and paint more."

Misdeals.

Silicus—Love is a game in which Cupid deals the cards. Cynicus—Then why does he so often deal from the bottom of the deck?

The great theater for virtue is conscience.—Cicero.

WHERE OTTAWA GOLD IS COMING FROM

The arrival of $10,000,000 gold from London this week, with the $56,000,000 which had come from Ottawa to New York last month, brought the June imports of the metal up to a total larger than the shipments from England and Canada in any previous month since the war began, says the New York Evening Post. Last October, out of our total gold receipts of $79,669,000 those two countries sent us $59,000,000. In August, 1915, arrivals from Canada were $50,000,000, and from England only $163,000; in November, another month of large imports, London and Ottawa sent us less than $50,000,000.

Shipments to New York and Philadelphia from Canada during the month and a half—up to last Saturday—that the movement was in progress amounted in round figures to $100,000,000. In the absence of any official explanation of how the Ottawa gold fund was accumulated, an examination of the possible sources of supply at least reveals a rather peculiar agreement between the amount available and the total shipments from Canada between May 11 and June 24.

The output of gold in the Transvaal has been about $16,000,000 a month. Based on last year's complete returns, the Canadian production is about $1,300,000 monthly, and that of Australia $3,700,000. Total monthly output in these three countries, therefore, is approximately $21,000,000, or $31,500,000 in the six weeks that the movement from Canada was in progress. In the week of May 11, the Bank of France lost $20,000,000 gold, and cable advices have reported that, between June 8 and June 24, the Bank of Russia lost $45,000,000. Adding to these bank losses the output of the mines, a total of $96,000,000—measurably comparable to the amount released by Ottawa— is accounted for.

London advices have stated, however, that the gold accumulated in Canada had not previously figured in the holdings of any of the great European banks. If this is correct, conjectures as to where Ottawa got its accumulation seem to be confined to the theory that the output of Canadian, South African, and Australian mines was being concentrated at Ottawa over a period of months. This belief is not necessarily proved mistaken by the fact that between January 1 and May 19 the Bank of England took in $97,00,000 of her gold—more than the Transvaal output for that time. These takings by the Bank may be accounted for by shipments from France, and Russia, and the $9,600,000 exported to England and Canada from the United States in the first four months of this yea [illegible]

A Few Good Recipes

GOOSEBERRIES

Their delicious tart flavor has many uses. As the Fruit Bulletin says they are now ready. We have prepared a number of tested receipes for the use of our subscribers.

SPICED GOOSEBERRIES

To be eaten with cold meat. 3 lbs. of gooseberries, 2½ lbs. sugar, ½ cup vinegar. ½ teaspoonful cloves, ½ teaspoonful of allspice, ½ teaspoonful cinnamon. Boil until thick.

GOOSEBERRY PIE

After having washed and picked over the berries, stew them well in a little water just enough to cover them, when they burst open and become soft, sweeten them with plenty of sugar, mash them smooth, (some prefer them not mashed); line you pieplates with thin puff paste, fill them and lay strips of paste across the top. Bake in a moderate oven.

GOOSEBERRY TRIFLE

One quart of gooseberries, sugar to taste, one pint of custard, a plateful of whipped cream. Put the gooseberries into a jar with sufficient moist sugar to sweeten them, and boil them until reduced to a pulp. Put this pulp at the bottom of a trifle dish, pour over it a pint of custard, and when cold cover with whipped cream. This dish may be garnished as fancy dictates.

GOOSEBERRY FOOL

Stew a quart of ripe gooseberries in just enough water to cover them; when soft rub them through a colander to remove the skins and seeds; while hot stir into them a tablespoonful of melted butter and a cupful of sugar. Beat the yolks of three eggs and add that. Whip all together until light. Fill a large glass fruit dish and spread on the top the beaten whites mixed with three tablespoonfuls of sugar.

GOOSEBERRY JAM

Pick the gooseberries just as they begin to turn. Stem, wash and weigh. To four pounds of fruit add half a cupful of water; boil until soft and add four pounds of sugar and boil until clear. If picked at the right stage the jam will be amber colored and firm, and very much nicer than if the fruit is preserved when ripe.

GOOSEBERRY CATSUP

Ten pounds of fruit gathered just before ripening, five pounds of sugar, one quart of vinegar, two tablespoonfuls each of ground pepper, allspice and cinnamon. Boil the fruit in vinegar until reduced to a pulp, then add sugar and other seasoning. Seal it hot.

FOR USE NOW
RIPE CURRANT PIE

One cup ripe mashed currants, one cup white sugar, one tablespoonful flour beaten with the yokes of two eggs, two tablespoonfuls water; baked with under crust only. When done frost the top with well beaten whites of two eggs and two tablespoonfuls of powdered sugar, return to oven to brown.

SPICED CURRANTS FOR SERVING WITH COLD MAETS

Three pounds of ripe currants, two and a half pounds of sugar, half a cup of vinegar, ¼ teaspoonful ground cloves, ½ teaspoonful ground allspice, ½ teaspoonful cinnamon, boil until thick and pour into jelly glasses, covering with waxed paper and tin top, or melted parafine.

FRESH CURRANT PIE IN WINTER

Preserve With Cold Water

Stem the currants without mashing or bruising. Wash thoroughly in cold water, leaving same under tap with water running over them for fully ten minutes. Then place in the fruit jars that have been cleaned perfectly, set under the tap and let the water run until every air bubble has disappeared. Seal tightly and place in a dark cool cellar until wanted.

BLACK CURRANT WINE

No Law Against Home Made Wine

The currants should be quite ripe. Stem, mash and strain them, adding a half pint of water and less than a pound of sugar to a quart each of the mashed fruit. Stir well together and pour into a clean cask, having the bung open or covered with a piece of cheese cloth, it should stand for a month to ferment, when it will be ready for bottling. Just before bottling, add a small quantity of brandy or whiskey.

Here's a chance, Miss Freckle-face, to try a remedy for freckles with the guarantee of a reliable dealer that it will not cost you a penny unless it removes the freckles; while if it does give you a clear complexion the expense is trifling.

Simply get an ounce of othine—double strength—from any druggist and a few applications should show you how easy it is to rid yourself of the homely freckles and get a beautiful complexion. Rarely is more than one ounce needed for the worst case.

Be sure to ask the druggist for the double strength othine as this is the prescription sold under guarantee of money back if it fails to remove freckles.

currant, or for that matter, any jelly. Strip from the stems, removing all imperfect fruit. Wash and put over the fire in a porcelain kettle that will fit inside of another kettle full of boiling water, like a double boiler. Let them cook in this way until the skin of each currant has broken, stirring now and then. Pour into a jelly bag and allow it to drain over night. In the morning, if the day is fine, put the juice on to boil; at the same time put the sugar, ten pounds to a gallon of juice, in a pan in the oven to heat, watching it closely that it does not burn, and stirring that it may heat through. As soon as the juice is boiling briskly, add the hot sugar, being careful that the former does not boil over when the sugar is added. The juice should be skimmed carefully from the beginning and allowed to boil about twenty minutes after the sugar is added. As soon as it will congeal on a spoon when held in the air, remove it from the fire and pour it into hot glasses. Do not seal until the jelly is cold.

Pressing Fruit Without Sugar

THE RECIPE

The fruit is prepared in the ordinary way, the jars are cleaned and scalded while the rubbers and tops are boiling. The fruit is then placed in the jars, in which COULD water is placed. When the jars have been sealed air-tight they are placed in a boiler filled with cold water and brought to the boiling point. Berries will do if removed when the boiling point is reached, while large fruits, such as peaches, cherries, plums and apricots, should get 20 to 30 minutes boiling. Keep cover of wash boiler on tight.

Red Cross

FRUIT FOR OVERSEAS

We cannot do better than quote from the Bulletin of the Ontario Agricultural College. No. 184, under date of November 10, incorporating an address delivered by Mr. J. A. Morton, before the Wingham Women's Institute, at one of their regular monthly meetings, wherein he states the application and employment of heat is a most effective preservative, and the best one, consistent with safety to the user of the food.

A question which suggests itself right here is this:—Should sugar be used or not? A great many people still cling to the old idea that fruit cannot be kept without the addition of sugar in the process of canning. This is entirely and surely a mistake. Sugar as ordinarily employed, takes no part in the preservation of the fruit from deterioration.

The first thing to do is to see that the jars are perfectly clean, thoroughly sterilized with boiling water, then boil rubber rings and covers, using absolutely new rubber rings of the best quality. All fruits are put into the clean jars cold and uncooked, when sugar is added in the form of syrup. The jars are filled nearly to the top—not too full—so that as the contents swell, it will not overflow. The jars must not be too empty, lest the oxygen in the air within the jar give any resting-spores, which may not have been killed by the heat opportunity to germinate and mould might then result. The glass lid and screw top are then put on the jar and about one turn only given to the screw top, thus allowing the gases to get out in the cooking. The filled jars are cooked in the wash boiler, which ordinarily holds from 13 to 15 quart jars. We use a false bottom in the boiler made of wooden slats. The boiler being put on the stove with the jars standing upright on the wooden bottom, cold water is poured into it until two-thirds of the way up the jars, the cover is put on the boiler, and the water therein brought to the boiling point. How long it should be kept there depends upon the quality of the fruit being cooked. Keep it boiling long enough so that when the jar is opened the fruit will be palatable without further cooking. Strawberries, raspberries and blackberries will do if removed after five minutes boiling. Take the jars out of the boiler, put the rubber rings on, which have been thoroughly sterilized previously, and fasten down at once. If, while cooking, you find the air is getting into the jar, which you will be able to detect by bubbles forming on the inside of the jar, it is caused probably by poor rubber or defective top; replace it by a good one, put back the jar in to the boiler for a few minutes longer. Larger fruit, such as peaches, pears, plums and the like, should get from twenty-five to thirty-five minutes boiling; the time depending on the harness of the fruit A hard peach requires longer than a mellow one.

The amount of sugar which will be used in the Red Cross Fruit Kitchens of the Niagara District will be as follows: raspberries and red currants in combination, black currants, four pounds, to one doz. quart jars; gooseberries and plums, six pounds; peaches and pears, five pounds.

The jar which will be used and accepted is the crown quart jar, with screw top. This is the ordinary round jar used in the home, known as the gem jar. The method of packing will be one and one half dozen jars to the case, the inside measurements of which are 15 inches wide, 30 inches long and 10 inches deep, packed solidly with excelsior.

The question of handling the fruit from outside points, to ensure proper inspection and packing, would be better done at Hamilton. For in the event of any jars of fruit showing a tendency to fermentation or mould, they could be resterilized and thus the fruit saved.

Our duty is to serve, not according to our desires but according to our powers. The power of service for the Niagara Peninsula is in fruit. It is more economical to have the fruit preserved at central points where it is grown, rather than in scattered sections, but the power to serve by these outside districts can best be affected by sending cash contributions to the Canadian Red Cross Society, Fruit Dept., Hamilton, for the Province of Ontario. We hope the ladies of this community will therefore send a liberal donation for this good work.

FARM LABOURERS WANTED.

The Western Provinces of Canada have experienced an acute shortage of farm laborers for spring seeding and summer work this year.

Even when times were normal throughout Canada, it was always necessary to bring from twenty-five to thirty thousand laborers from eastern points for the harvest season.

As voluntary enlistments have been very heavy, and inasmuch as a successful crop is predicted by the experts, grave fear is being felt along the lines of the Canadian Northern Railway on account of the difficulty experienced in obtaining labor, which means steady work and good wages for all who visit in the districts served by the C.N.R.

WOMEN MAKE SHELLS HUSBANDS USE THEM

Town in Northern England Entirely Manned and Staffed by Women

A town in the north of England has a munition factory entirely manned and staffed by women, most of whom are wives and other relatives of naval officers, and the shells, they make are used by their own men folk.

The idea of the factory is said to have originated with the chairman of the munitions committee, who found that other necessary industries were being depleted by the girls going in such large numbers to the making of munitions. Moreover he knew that there were many of the well-to-do class who were anxious to do work of a patriotic nature.

The women employed come in their motors, remove their everyday flimsy attire assume overalls and a small tight cap and get to work at their machines. They are known by numbers and they work eight hours at their self-imposed tasks.

A SLIGHT MISTAKE

An Episode of Shakedown City

By F. A. MITCHEL

The wild and woolly west is now a thing of the past. If gun play, public gambling and horse stealing are in vogue in any part of the United States we hear nothing of them. But the probability is that these things have died out before the advance of civilization and the consequent setting up of the church and the schoolhouse.

Before the dawn of this new condition, when all sorts of persons—good, bad and indifferent—were crowding into a country not yet abandoned by the Indian, when every man was expected to look out for his own interests, it is remarkable, in some instances laughable, what small things men would fight about.

In a settlement west of the Missouri river some forty years ago, where there was but one woman to a dozen men among the inhabitants, Cyrus Atkins was out beyond the borders of the town looking for stray cattle when up the road came a woman driving a rattletrap buggy. Whether she was fair to look upon is not a matter of certainty, for any woman not a fright was beautiful in the eyes of men who were constantly looking on their own sex only. Certain it is that this person driving toward the settlement was beautiful in Cyrus Atkins' eyes.

"How do, ma'am," he said, putting his hand to his sombrero.

"How do," was the laconic reply. "Air you from the settlement?"

"Yes, ma'am."

"Any chance for anybody to make a livin' there?"

"Reckon, but a good lookin' woman like you don't need to make a livin'. All she has to do is to pick out a husband and let him do it for her."

"Suppose the husband can't make a livin' for himself?"

"Then, I reckon, the wife 'ud have to do it for both."

"Jist so."

The woman, who had an independent air about her, whipped up her horse and left Mr. Atkins standing beside the road gaping after her. He was thinking that as soon as she got into the settlement, which was called Shakedown City—all settlements appended the word "city" to their name in that country at that time—she would be surrounded by half the men with offers of marriage. He hesitated whether to go on searching for his cattle or go back at once and put in his application. At that moment he spied one of his lost animals in the distance. This decided him, and he concluded to lose an hour or so in putting in his application for the sake of getting his cattle.

When the woman reached the borders of Shakedown City she encountered Enoch Dolittle.

"Ary tavern in the town?" she asked him.

"Yes, ma'am," was the reply. "'Tain't much of a place for a good lookin' woman like you to stop at, seein' there's nothin' but men around."

"Well, I reckon I got to stop there, seein' I don't know nobody in the town."

"There's a few married women in Shakedown. I know one of 'em that I reckon'll take you in."

"Where does she live?"

"I'll show you."

Mr. Dolittle walked along beside the buggy to a house where a frowsy woman was washing dishes, and the stranger said she would like accommodations. Since the reply was favorable, the applicant decided to put up there. She said her stay would be short; be-

"Seen anything," asked Cyrus, "of a good lookin' woman drivin' into town in a buggy?"

"Yes."

"Where did she put up?"

"She was goin' to put up at the tavern, but I tuk her to Mrs. Green's."

"What had you to do with where she put up?"

"What's that to you?"

"A good deal. I'm the first man to see her comin' into town, and if she's goin' to settle yere I've got the fust claim on her."

"You don't reckon she'd have sich a red headed, slab sided feller as you, do you?"

"I don't propose to give way to a freckled, bowlegged chap like you."

Both men put their hands to their hips, but at the moment Antonio Thibadeaux, who had come from Louisiana, passed by and inquired the cause of the dispute. When duly informed that a new and comely woman had come to town and each of the men proposed to claim her in marriage, Thibadeaux said to them:

"This town ought to be above gunplay in the streets by this time. Yo' no'the'n men are mighty uncivilized in such affai's anyhow. If you two men want to fight about a lady, why don't you do it in a fashion that would do honor to her instead o' mixin' her up in a common shootin' match?"

The rivals were evidently impressed with this view of the case and asked how "them gentlemanly fights" were conducted. Thibadeaux said that he had participated in several, both as principal and second. If they desired it he would be happy to manage a meeting for them.

"Yo' see," he added, "if the lady hears that you have had a street fight about her she'll turn you both down. But if she hears that you have fought for her in a gentlemanly way she'll be much flattered, and the man that wins will have a tol'able good show."

This settled the matter. Mr. Thibadeaux took charge of the affair entirely, making all necessary arrangements, providing a second for each principal and sending to a neighboring town for a "sawbones." The time appointed was the next morning at 7 o'clock, the place to be where Cy Atkins had met the subject of the dispute. Mr. Thibadeaux said that in Louisiana, where he had picked up his knowledge of the code, it was considered bad taste to talk about such affairs, and they were usually kept secret. In this way a vulgar crowd was avoided, and if the fight was about a lady it was deemed more respectful to her.

A bit of gunplay in the street would not have necessarily called together a crowd, but such a novelty as a duel was sure to do so. It did not get out in Shakedown City that an affair according to the code, arranged by a prominent Louisiana duelist, was to take place, until late the night before the meeting. Consequently the lady who was to be fought for went to bed oblivious to the fact that two men were to meet the next morning at 7 o'clock in mortal combat to decide which should give way to the other in an effort to obtain her favor. Indeed, having looked over Shakedown City and not being pleased with it, she had determined to make an early start the next morning for the place from which she had come.

The secret of the duel was divulged by one of the seconds at the Golden Eagle saloon about midnight, and most of those present organized a small game to last till morning with the intention of adjourning from the sitting to the dueling ground to witness a real high toned shooting match as practiced in the state of Louisiana. Such an affair had never been known in Shakedown, and, though the citizens had heard of the code duello, their knowledge of it was very hazy.

About half past 6 each principal in the coming affair, attended by his second, left his residence and proceeded to the ground. The master of ceremonies was accompanied by the surgeon, a recent medical graduate, who had gone west to establish a practice, but had never seen a gunshot wound in his life. At the same time, a crowd emerged from the Golden Eagle saloon and tramped down the road. Arrived at the appointed spot, Mr. Thibadeaux marked off the ground, taking care that neither of the disputants was placed so that the sun would shine in his eyes. He made the distance thirty paces, which, he said, was usual in such affairs. Each man was handed a revolver that had passed inspection by both seconds and stood ready for the signal to fire. Mr. Thibadeux said that dropping a handkerchief was the most approved method. But there were very few handkerchiefs in the party and they so soiled as not to be surely distinguished by the principals. Therefore it was decided to drop a hat.

Meanwhile a horse and buggy was seen emerging from the town, and just as the seconds handed the principals their weapons the vehicle drew up in the road beside the battleground.

"What's goin' on?" asked a woman who was driving.

Mr. Thibadeaux, lifting his sombrero, advanced to her and explained that a duel was about to be fought about a woman.

"What woman?"

"One that came to town yesterday, ma'm."

"Well, what has she got to do with it?"

The matter was briefly explained to her.

During the conversation the princi-children. And if I was single I wouldn't marry either of you. My husband's sick, and Hilton, where we live, is run down. I come over yere to see if there was a better chance to make a livin'. I wouldn't live in the town if you'd give it to me, and I wouldn't marry any man in it if I was single. So there! Git up, Sal."

And, giving her horse the whip, she passed on down the road.

The duel was called off, all adjourning to the Gold Eagle saloon, where the principals shook hands and called on all present to nominate their pizen. Then Mr. Thibadeaux, calling the crowd's attention by an ahem! said:

"Gents, I move that a committee be appointed to go to Hilton and represent to the lady the advantages of this place, which she has turned down, and assure her that if she will remove here with her family she will be taken care of. Since the committee must be provided with funds, I propose a collection."

The proposition resulted in the removal of the family named to Shakedown City, where they were provided for till the husband recovered his health and in time became a prominent citizen of the town.

The presence in Shakedown City of the lady, her husband and her children was a subject for ridicule of her two admirers, and they left the town.

Concerning Dreams.

Scientists assure us that the longest dream we ever have—even the dream that seems to carry us on through several days—actually occupies no more than a single second!

Some authorities maintain that if any one of our dreams were to last longer than a single second we should die. Other authorities are convinced that we do not dream at all when we are asleep, but only in the fraction of time when we are (as Shakespeare has expressed it) "'twixt sleep and waking."

It is also argued that dreams are nothing but distorted ideas and images passing through the drowsy mind and being no more than extraordinary variations of things that have happened or of things that we have thought or read in our waking moments; they can have no possible association with our future. But, on the other hand, dreams have been credited with prophetic meanings since the days when the world was young, and dream books are still published and purchased and consulted by the million.

Puss In Boots.

No collection of fairy tales is complete without "Puss In Boots," and it is interesting to know that it has amused the children of a hundred generations. The various versions of the story differ materially, however. It is believed that the Zanzibar version is the original. There the man is ungrateful to the clever cat and is punished by awaking to find his prosperity a dream. In France, Italy and India the cat is a swindler and the Marquis of Carrabas is his accomplice. In Russia and Sicily "Puss In Boots" is a moral story and the cat helps the man from motives of gratitude. When Cruikshank illustrated "Puss In Boots" he rewrote it and introduced the moral motive of gratitude in the cat, but the American version does not point out any motive. Why should the cat help his master to title and riches? In our story he is a weak fellow who does nothing to help himself, and we feel that the cat is throwing his energies away on an idler.

Daddy and the Kiddies.

We'll call him "daddy," because that's what his kiddies call him, and this is an intimate story of "daddy" and his two youngsters.

Frequently "mother" and the kiddies go to the picture show in the evening while "daddy" stays home alone.

"I'm too tired to go along," is his reply to invitations.

But the other evening the pleadings of the youngsters won. "Daddy" enjoyed the pictures, but he enjoyed the kiddies' fun more.

When the trip home was made and the youngsters tucked in bed "daddy" heard one youngster say to the other:

"Don't you think the show's lots better when 'daddy' goes with us?"

The answer came, "Lots better."

And how many "daddies" would cease to be "too tired" if they realized how much the kiddies yearn for them!—Detroit Free Press.

He Had Patience.

An elderly gentleman was rambling along a country road one afternoon when he saw a small boy who had been sitting on the bank of a creek roll up his fishing line, pick up his can and start away from the piscatorial scenery. "You shouldn't give up so soon, my boy," remarked the elderly one chidingly. "The fish will be biting better in an hour or two."

"I know that," answered the boy a little sadly, "but I am"—

"You give up too quickly," interjected the other. "The next time you come out here you want to bring more patience with you."

"'Tain't that, mister," said the boy, sighing deeply. "I got plenty o' patience, but I hain't got no bait."

Protection.

A man who employed a number of boys to pick raspberries was quite anxious to protect them from mosquitoes, so he had veils made to tie down around the neck. The boys were very grateful for his kindness until they found that there were no mosquitoes

WON FIRST-SECOND-THIRD-FOURTH

Prizes in the Ottawa Free Press Reliability Tour Contest

OTTAWA VALLEY AMAZED BY THIS WONDERFUL PERFORMANCE

Nothing that has ever happened during our eight years' connection with the Motor industry, so thoroughly and completely demonstrates McLaughlin "Valve-in-Head" superiority as the recent phenomenal record established by Mr. G. B. McKay, of Ottawa, in his 55 horse power Six Cylinder "McLaughlin."

Time and again we have made assertions concerning the merits of the "McLaughlin" product which, applied to any other motor car made, would amount to the wildest extravagance, but which, in view of this actual "McLaughlin" accomplishment, prove once more, and more conclusively than ever, that every statement we have made about the "McLaughlin" was exactly and precisely true. It proves that in no single assertion did we resort to exaggeration, but that, on the contrary, we understated the facts about this wonderful car.

Now let's see just what this "McLaughlin" did! The Tour from Ottawa to Gouverneur, N.Y., by way of Prescott and Ogdensburg, a distance of 140 miles, was open to all motorists running their own cars.

The start was made during a downpour of rain and for the first sixty miles the cars ploughed through veritable seas of mud, up greasy hills, down treacherous valleys and over roads that were simply indescribable.

There were stringent rules laid down by the officials, and contestants were penalized for inefficient driving, breakages and mishaps. Professional drivers were barred. Yet in spite of these conditions Mr. G. B. McKay in his "McLaughlin" won the tour, making a perfect score of 1,000 points. Three other "McLaughlin" owners won second, third and fourth prizes with scores almost perfect.

THE FIRST FOUR PRIZE WINNERS IN THE CONTEST WERE:

1st Prize—G. B. McKay (McLaughlin Model C 55), scored 1000 points.
2nd Prize—E. E. Codo (McLaughlin Model B 37), scored 998 points.
3rd Prize—F. Wilson (McLaughlin Model D 60), scored 996 points.
4th Prize—Dr. E. E. Pallister (McLaughlin Model D 45), scored 995 points.

An interesting point worth noting is the fact that the winning Car made the tour over these muddy and rough roads with a gasoline consumption, averaging 17 miles to the gallon. No other but a McLaughlin "Valve-in-Head" Motor could make such a showing—a six cylinder, 55 horsepower car, over muddy roads and making 17 miles per gallon of gasoline.

In such feats as this there is proof positive that the "McLaughlin" is all and more than we have ever contended for it. Here is proof of the power of the famous "Valve-in-Head" Motor with which all "McLaughlins" are equipped, and proof of the sturdy and enduring value in the drop forged steel with which the "McLaughlin" is strengthened against the stress and shocks of every-day use.

Power! Valve-in-Head! McLaughlin!

They Rival the Chinese In Their Odd Ideas and Customs.

CASTE RULES THE SERVANT.

He Doesn't Like Work, Anyhow, and Generally Finds a Way to Dodge It. Playing the Stringed Vina Is a Species of Unmusical Torture.

I had thought China was a queer place and that the Chinese had queer customs, but China can't entertain on the same afternoon with India. If some one had told me about their manners and customs before I got to India I would have laughed courteously and set him down in my little book. There are some things that a Hindu will do and some that he will not do. Work is placed prominently on the latter list.

One thing that a Hindu will not do is to play on a flute. He would rather go to the flogging post than dash off a selection on a flute. But he will play a stringed instrument, called a vina, similar to the instrument played by David in the tent of Saul. This instrument looks as if it had originally been intended for a carpet stretcher, but had fallen into the hands of a musically inclined person who had borrowed a couple of piano wires and was determined to lower rents. After hearing an able-bodied Hindu pick on an instrument of this kind one can't help wishing that they would put it in the same class with the flute.

A Hindu's idea of music is to make all the noise he can. He doesn't care anything about rime or rhythm. All his energy is expended in volume. Hindu musicians are all large, splendidly muscled fellows, who play as if they were going to a gymnasium regularly. When one hears them playing on a vina one can't help wondering how David ever came to make such an impression on Saul.

As soon as I got to India I hired a valet. It sounds mighty big—until you know what you have to pay a "boy" in India. A servant is called a "boy" even though he has whiskers and grandchildren. He said that his name was Thumbo Ramalingum, or words to that effect. I couldn't remember the last consignment, so I called him Thumb, and for days I longed to ask if there was a Finger in his family. He wore a skirt and a sheet twisted around his head. He was to be my waiter, for in India you have to furnish your own table boy. When you go to spend a day or two with a friend you always take your own boy along to wait on you. My boy was to mend my clothes, black my shoes, get my bath water ready and hold my shirt. The way he talked I wasn't to do anything except open my mail, put my feet on the table and enjoy life. But I soon found out that his idea and mine differed quite widely as to what enjoyment of life was.

A few minutes before the first meal he suddenly appeared, a bit flushed, and explained that he was of too high caste to wait on table. I tried to show him that it was an honor to be a good and efficient table waiter, but he wouldn't budge a step—he'd rather starve than wait on table. So I had to look around and hustle up another boy to do that part of the work. Every time I wanted him to do anything it was against his caste. His caste seemed to have a special enmity toward all work. When I wanted him to carry my bags he begged leave to be excused, as his caste didn't allow him to do such menial work, and when I gave him my shoes to be blacked he looked at me in horror. It was expressly against his caste to touch leather—a product of the sacred cow.

One day when I told him to pick the hairs out of my brush he looked at me sadly and then began to tell me about a nephew that had suddenly departed this flesh and would I be so kind as to give half a rupee to the grief stricken father and the other half to the inconsolable uncle. That was more than I could stand, and on the spot I told him that he was discharged, fired, and to get out as fast as he could.

"Thank you, sahib, thank you," said Thumb with a profound salute.

I told him that he needn't thank me for firing him, but he only bowed his head and thanked me more profusely than ever. His gratitude was as pronounced as if I had given him a rupee.

"Will you give me a recommendation chitty for 'the good boy I have been, sahib?'"

After what a poor servant he had been, that was the last straw. It would be underhanded to foist him off on somebody else, and then suddenly I saw a way out. "Yes," I agreed enthusiastically, and I wrote for him.

"The bearer of this note with the unpronounceable name has been in my employ for two weeks. During this time I have aged perceptibly. He is a servant of caste, but he never lets work interfere with his caste. When he came to me he was a man of family, but at the rate which his family has been depleted I doubt if he has left more than enough children to last out a week. You will find him especially good at getting your shirt studs in backward and at pulling off the tips of your shoestrings."

Thumb, who made pretense of being an English scholar, read the recommendation carefully, but his mastery of words was such that he could not quite follow the meaning.

"Thank you, sahib, thank you," he said, too proud to admit that it was not clear to him. "It will be of great help to me."

"And to the other fellow, too," I said as he salaamed and passed out of my life.—Homer Croy in Leslie's.

EMOTIONAL ACTRESSES.

Temperament on the Stage and the Task of Managing It.

You hear a lot about the artistic temperament in and out of the theatrical trenches. There's only one way to manage a temperamental woman on the stage, said a well known leading man the other day, and that is to be in love with her. I was never so fortunate myself, but I have seen it work out with others again and again. They hate the man who won't admire them, and they laugh at the man who does. Their nerves are always thumping them into action till their hearts are bursting and their brains are in a whirl.

One of our emotional actresses in her prime was the most febrile, fearless, radiant witch of a woman the stage ever had. She was always on fire, intellectually and every other way. During one engagement in New York she wasn't on speaking terms with any one in the front of the house, except one man, and he was always telling her how wonderful she was. No one else dared go near her for fear she'd kill them with the first thing handy. They're just like angry leopards, some of them. They must be humored, conquered with patience, firmness and kindness.

A well known English star, who has always been famous for being difficult to manage, used to hate the sight of a manager. She could wither any man who was not her mental equal till he literally crumpled to pieces, and she loved nothing better. There were so many who were not her equal too. She knew most men were afraid of her, and she kept them in that delicious state of dread. They called it "temperament." She called it something more fitting—brains.—Theater Magazine.

Words Often Misspelled.

Here are twenty-one common words frequently misspelled. Get some one to dictate the following paragraph to you and see how many of them you can spell correctly:

The "privilege" of "separating ninety miscellaneous calendars" arranged in two "parallel" lines was against the "principles" of the "superintendent," so his "niece" not to "disappoint" the "government" or cause it to "lose business" removed the "principal" calendars and thus "relieved" her uncle of a strain which might have brought on a "disease." Then she "believed" it had become "truly necessary" for her to "receive" her instruction in "grammar."

Rules of Knights of the Garter.

Except on state occasions Knights of the Garter are not likely to display any token of their dignity, but in former days Knights of the Garter had to look resplendent on all occasions. "It was an original law," we are told in a history of the order published in 1841, "that the knight should never be without his garter. Afterward he was permitted to wear instead of the garter a blue lace or thread round his leg when on horseback, but this has long been neglected. It is still, however, incumbent on every knight to have about him at all times (though not necessarily displayed) the badge or some part of the decorations, and we believe the rule is obeyed."

Chameleon Scared White.

Madagascar is the home of the chameleon. In his book, "A Naturalist In Madagascar," James Sibree says the chameleon changes color for other reasons than adaptation to its background. He saw one that turned perfectly white out of fright when seized in the coils of a snake. When released it resumed its ordinary color. The Malagasy call it ranliaheloka, which means "naughty old boy."

Dead Wrong.

"What would you do, Jimson," asked Professor Brainfag, "if you saw a man fall dead in the street without apparent reason?"

"I really wouldn't know what to do. would certainly be wrong of any man to drop dead in the street without first giving his reasons for doing so."

When Cordova Was the World.

Cordova, Spain, was a brilliant capital of the world, with half a million population, when the rest of Europe was clouded by the deepest lethargy of the middle ages. In the year 960 Cordova was considered the world's fountain of learning and science, and Christian Europe turned to her for instruction in "everything from tanning leather to charting the stars."—Argonaut.

The Word Alp.

In Switzerland the word alp does not mean a mountain, but is used to indicate the little valleys in the higher altitudes, where peasants take their cows in summer and where in small huts and stables the attendants and animals remain for several months in the year. The cows thrive on the tender grass, and their milk is converted on the spot into cheese and butter.—Exchange.

"Who is he?"

"A fashionable dentist."

WHIRLIGIG BEETLES.

These Four Eyed, Six Legged Creatures Are Expert Swimmers.

More than likely you have watched him skating in "figures 8's" and all sorts of elaborate designs in quiet pools along a stream or on the edge of a lake. He will turn this way and that, describing one graceful curve after another, and then dart off in a straight line when he's frightened. He's speedy, as well as graceful. He's the whirligig beetle.

He has six legs, two longer ones in front and two pairs of short, flat paddles behind. These paddles make him an expert swimmer. His front legs, stretched out, look like arms.

Nature was also generous in giving him two pairs of eyes. With one pair he looks at objects on top of the water, and with the other pair he keeps watch for preying fish below.

There are something less than 300 species of whirligig beetles and they're scattered in all parts of the world. All summer you'll see their shiny bodies skating in spiral tracks and in curves on the surface of pools and sluggish streams.

The Mystery of a Duel.

Having fought his duel and saved his honor by firing a shot in the air, the editor of a French provincial newspaper went back to his desk, and the incident had quite left his mind when he felt something strange in his thigh. He looked and found that he was bleeding profusely. A doctor was called, who discovered that a bullet was imbedded in the editor's thigh some two inches deep and required extraction. "Why was this not taken notice of on the spot where the duel took place?" he asked. The editor was as much in the dark as the doctor. At the moment of the duel he had fired into the air, and his adversary also took a distracted sort of aim. The editor felt nothing as he left the field and had shaken hands with his antagonist as a sign of reconciliation. How a bullet came to be lodged in his thigh was simply one of the mysteries of dueling.

Projecting Your Personality.

Can any man's life be held to be incomplete if it is continued in the life of a friend? Was Arthur Hallam's life incomplete when Tennyson prolonged it forever by "In Memoriam" or the life of Socrates when Plato continued it in his immortal dialogues? Confucius said wisely, "Have no friends not equal to yourself." By that he must have meant, "Make your friends equal to yourself by giving them freely of your best." Thus you make sure of a continued life whatever happens to yourself, as a manufacturer intrusts the secrets of his manipulations to his younger partners.—Christian Herald.

Soldiers In Napoleon's Day.

There are five things that a soldier should never be without—his gun, his cartridge, his knapsack, rations for four days and his pioneer tools. The knapsack should be reduced to the smallest posible weight and size and contain only a shirt, a pair of shoes, a collar, a handkerchief and a flint of steel. This is not much, but he should never part from them, for when once lost they cannot be recovered.—Napoleon.

The Catastrophe.

"Did you hear about the catastrophe down at Brown's last night?"

"No. What happened?"

"Why, Mrs. Brown gave the baby a bottle to play with, and while she was in the kitchen it fell from the cradle and broke its neck."

"What, the baby?"

"No, the bottle."—Exchange.

VARIETIES OF APPLAUSE.

But There Is No Mistaking the Genuine, Spontaneous Offering.

With nearly every successful address applause plays a leading part. There are several varieties of applause. The common variety is the perfunctory handclap—a poor, weak contribution which makes a butterfly look long lived in comparison. A second variety is the charity offering of an audience to the oratorical beggar.

The speaker ends a profound declaration with a pause which is next door to an open declaration of war if the audience doesn't come across, or he works himself up in a series of mental paroxysms which impel the auditors to rush to his rescue before it is too late. All spellbinders pocket this variety of applause as real coin. Of course it is nothing of the kind.

The genuine issue in laudation is a spontaneous and volcanic eruption of approval and delight. It blows out violently from the subterranean fires of folk, and when it has reached its climax there comes suddenly and gorgeously from the midst of it a second and more terrific explosion, and as this is reaching its highest point a third and seismic spasm rockets up through bedlam and overwhelms everything and everybody. This is the real thing. It cannot be made to order, and it cannot be counterfeited. The prearranged outbursts at national political conventions following the nominations are pitiable attempts to manufacture it. Claques and coteries of devotees try occasionally to produce it mechanically. They never do successfully.

All veteran speakers know it, and having experienced it, live on in the bright expectancy of the golfer who has accidentally driven 275 yards and believes that any minute it is liable to be done again. There are many communities which have never witnessed such a scene. They never will. For there are some communities that are strangers to all manner of response.—Victor Murdock in Collier's Weekly.

The Arab Steed.

An Arab steed of pure breed would probably be outpaced in a race by an English thoroughbred, but in other respects it outshines its western rival. It is so docile that it is treated by its owner as one of the family, and it has an iron constitution, for it sleeps out at night without covering or shelter. Nature protects the Arab horse with a thick furry coat, which is never touched by brush or comb and which falls off at the approach of spring, when the body and legs, which had been shaggy as those of a bear, again resume their graceful beauty and glisten in the sun like polished marble.—London Chronicle.

A Weekly Birthday.

Dr. Marks, who for many years was head of St. John's college, Rangoon, which the young Burmese princes attended, once granted a day's holiday because it was Queen Victoria's birthday. The king asked Dr. Marks what he meant by it. On hearing the explanation he said graciously, "That's all right, but will you give them a holiday on my birthday?"

Dr. Marks said he certainly would if his majesty would inform him what was the day on which the world was blessed by his birth.

"According to Burmese national custom," said the king, "my birthday is every Tuesday!"

The Memory Machine.

Amnesia, or loss of memory, is chiefly interesting to the psychologists as throwing some light on the nature of memory itself. A perfect act of memory consists of three distinct acts—preservation or fixation of certain states of the nerve cells, reproduction of these and, perhaps most remarkable of all, recognition of them as reproductions in their relations. Morbid states of the memory may refer to any of these phases of an act which is, as marvelous as anything in nature. There are about 3,000,000,000 nerve cells in the surface of the human brain. They never die in health, and they are never replaced or added to. This is memory's machine.

It seems odd to read in the Tory partisan press that the liquor interests and the Liberals are fighting together in the North Perth by-election. Everybody knows what the liquor interests can expect from Mr N. W. Rowell.—Ottawa Free Press. And everybody knows to what use he attempted to put the temperance interests in the last Provincial election.

Promptness Unappreciated.

George—What's de matter, kid? Willie—It's dis way (boohoo). De boss told me to be prompt about everything, an' now he's fired me because I was too prompt about goin' home.

Considerate.

Friend—Now that you have been married some time, old friend, tell me frankly your opinion on the marriage state. Much Married Man (to his wife)—Just go outside, my dear, will you?

Aiding the Mind.

First Tourist—What are you writing down?

Second Tourist—I'm making a note of a few things that have made an indelible impression on my memory, so that I shan't forget them.—Exchange.

Her Status.

Ella—Nothing very serious about her. Stella—I should say not. If that woman knew the world was coming to an end next week it would be just like her to write to a newspaper asking what to do for blackheads.

The Test.

She—I doubt if you really love me. He—Why not, sweetheart? She—You never call me "little girl."

Whereupon he got very busy, and she of six feet three inches cuddled down in his arms with a contented sigh.

Passing of the Musk Ox.

The musk ox is fast following the buffalo to commercial extinction, and its fur will be in a few years as hard to find as a first class buffalo robe is today. The animal is found on the shores of the Arctic ocean in the Mackenzie district, the farther north the better the fur. Eskimos hunt the musk ox, which is very gentle and easily taken. The pelts are shipped by dog team and canoe down to the fur trading posts of the Canadian west. Owing to the distance of the musk ox habitat from civilization, very few skins can be brought down at a time, and the number of robes on the market each season is necessarily limited. Because of the northerly latitudes in which the animal lives, the musk ox has very thick fur. At the base of the long, flowing hair, sometimes forty inches in length, which is the distinguishing mark of the musk ox, there is a thick growth of wool, so that a robe made up from one of these pelts is capable of withstanding any cold.—Consular Report.

It means, too, the most generously made FABRIC Tires on the Market, at any price.

Manufactured by the largest Rubber Factory in America, with a 47 year Experience in Rubber-working, and a Record for DEPENDABILITY which makes the above statements worthy of prompt acceptance.

Priced so reasonably low that Competitors, whose products are not comparable, claim superiority on the mere strength of their Higher Prices (and the Larger Profits they demand from the Tire-User and Dealer).

Goodrich Prices are based on what it costs the largest, and longest experienced, Rubber Factory to manufacture Tires, as ONE of the 269 lines of Goodrich Rubber Goods for which it buys Crude Rubber, and over which its Overhead Expenses are divided.

What to Do When Hair Grows Thin
Parisian Sage Makes the Hair Grow

If your hair is getting thin and causing you anxiety, you ought to read about Parisian Sage, the hair grower, that surely does grow hair.

Parisian Sage is guaranteed by the Manufacturers to stop your hair from falling out, or refund your money. It will make the hair grow profusely if used regularly.

Hair falls out and stops growing because the hair root does not receive proper nourishment. If the nourishment entirely ceases for any length of times the hair root will die and baldness will follow. It's the dandruff germs that steal from the hair root the nourishment that nature supplies it.

Parisian Sage soaks into the scalp, destroys the dandruff germs and furnishes the nourishment needed to stimulate a renewed growth of hair.

Parisian Sage grows hair, stops hair from falling out, eradicates dandruff and puts an end to splitting hair. It turns dull, lifeless, faded hair into bright, lustrous hair, and is used by women and men who take pride in beautiful and luxuriant hair. It is the most delightful and refreshing hair dressing ever put into a bottle and should be used by every member of the family.

Parisian Sage is sold by leading druggists everywhere for only 50c. a large bottle.

For aches, pains, rheumatism, etc., try Parisian Mustard Cerate. Its effect is wonderful. Use in place of mustard plasters, poultices, or hot applications. Will not blister. 25c. a tube.

A BUSY COUNTESS

War Work Occupies Another Beautiful Woman.

POPULAR IN DUAL EMPIRE.

Like So Many of Her European Sisters, This Fair Austrian Is Interested In Relief—London Women of Title Going In For Charity Theatricals.

In every capital in Europe women of title and social prestige are busy with war relief. Hospital ships and supplies, ambulances, workshops and actual nursing of sick soldiers are only a few of their occupations.

London society women have recently taken up charity theatricals, the Countess of Essex (nee Miss Adele Grant of New York) recently having given an extremely successful charity matinee at the Gaiety theater, with professionals and society amateurs indiscriminately mixed up. Recently Mrs. Edith Wharton, the American novelist, was decorated by the French government for her valuable relief work. Last winter the German kaiser decorated Mrs. Gerard, wife of the American ambassador, for the help given families of soldiers.

COUNTESS VON SZAPARY.

Like all the other feminine members of the Austro-Hungarian nobility, the Countess von Szapary is actively engaged in war relief work. She is connected with some of the most prominent families in the dual empire.

DON'TS FOR BUYERS.

Some Restrictions Valuable For Those on Shopping Bent.

Don't buy a suit with a plaited skirt unless you have an electric iron and lots of time or else a good maid.

Don't buy one that is a bit too small, for the present style coat, with its flaring hem, looks especially bad in a size too small.

Don't, if you're over five feet six, get up and down stripes.

Don't buy a tan suit if you are sallow. Some of the tan shades are again in fashion, and they are a pitfall for the unwary sallow woman.

Don't buy a suit trimmed with a light color if you must wear it constantly, for nothing looks worse than soiled trimming.

Don't, if the family Bible has you down for over forty—you needn't admit it—get a suit because the saleswoman tells you it's girlish. Don't be a flapper at forty.

Don't, if you're under five feet three, get round about trimming.

Don't get a jacket that has sleeves too short or too long, for misfit sleeves spoil what may otherwise be a very attractive jacket.

Baked Shad Roe.

Parboil the roe from a large shad for one minute, drain, place in a baking pan, spread with one large tablespoonful of butter, sprinkle with pepper, salt and a dash of cayenne, pour in one cupful of cream, bake covered for twenty minutes, then remove the cover, bake ten minutes longer and transfer to a heated platter. Beat the yolks of three eggs with one cupful of cream, add the strained sauce from the pan, cook and stir until slightly browned, place around the roe and garnish with watercress and crisped bacon.

Kitchen Kinks.

Never allow fresh meat to remain in paper, for it absorbs the juices.

Always allow water to run from the kitchen tap in the morning until all that has been in the pipes overnight has run out.

Never allow opened fruits or vegetables to stand in the tin can.

Never stir anything in tin if avoidable or at least use a wooden spoon.

Never keep vinegar or yeast in stone crocks or jugs, since the acid attacks the glazing.

STORE OR STAGE?

A Word to Ambitious Young People Seeking a Future.

There is just as much demand among store owners and managers for high class salesmen, buyers and managers as there is among the theatrical and movie producers for actors. Merchants want to employ ambitious young men and women who can raise themselves above the ranks of the ordinary. The work is no harder, hours no longer and pay quite as good in the stores for help of all classes as it is in film or stage productions.

The "stars" in business are just as well paid as are those whose names grace the billboard. Where there is one film favorite who is paid $1,000 a month there are half a dozen mercantile managers who receive as much or more. There are hundreds who receive $200 a month to where there are five movie actors who receive the same. And there are ten dollar a week places among the members of the mob scenes, as there are ten dollar a week jobs among the "mobs" in the stores. Once a year or so some one graduates from the chorus or the "supes" to a place as an understudy or star, while in business many are promoted from the ranks to positions of trust and good salaries.

There are better opportunities for ambitious people in mercantile fields than as actors. The demand is many times greater. Owners are always on the watch for some one who will justify a promotion. But positions cannot be had without effort. They must be won by hard work, study and an overwhelming desire to get ahead. At all events we say, Stick to the store.—Farm Machinery.

The Demon of the Desert.

It is not generally known how a devil rides a camel, but Mr. Hans Vicher acquired the information and imparts it in his volume, "Through the Sahara."

One night a camel suddenly ran amuck. Other camels followed suit, and a general panic ensued.

"The frightened yells of my escort told me that a ghoul, a wicked demon of the desert, had seized the camel. I was told how these evil spirits sometimes took a fancy to mount a camel; the camel would then look to see who was digging it in the ribs, and, perceiving no one, fear would grip its heart, for then it knew that the devil was on its back."

Was Not a Fungus.

A certain worthy minister was a keen and accomplished naturalist. His specialty was a remarkable knowledge of different classes of fungi. His enthusiasm, however, was but indifferently appreciated by certain members of his parish, and one day when calling upon one of them, a sour old spinster, he was considerably embarrassed when she reminded him of the exact length of time that had elapsed since he had last paid her a visit. He began to make excuses for the delay, when she abruptly and curtly cut him short.

"If I was a toadstool," she said, with grim irony, "you'd have been to see me long ago!"—London Tit-Bits.

To Make Cold Cream.

Take half a pound of lard, half a cupful of olive oil, half a teaspoonful of powdered borax. Melt these and let them come to a boiling point. Take half a cupful of water, 5 cents' worth of rose essence or essence of geranium. Add these last two (water and essence) to the boiling fat by drops and then stir until cool by setting kettle into a larger kettle or something larger filled with cold water and beat it into a cream with the egg beater. This will keep in jars for months if kept where it is cool and is a fine, harmless and very inexpensive cream to use.

Making Them Match.

"Do you think he would do well as a speaker?"

"He might be quite a success if he confined himself to mixed audiences."

"Why only that kind?"

"Because he is a mixed reasoner."

Modern Miracle.

"Do you believe in miracles?"

"Yes. I left my umbrella in a car the other morning and got it when I inquired at the place where articles that are found in the cars are supposed to be turned in."

Brief and Witty.

A candidate for the office of auditor of public accounts was suddenly called upon for a speech. On rising he commenced:

"Fellow citizens, you have called on me for a few remarks. I have none to make. I have no prepared speech. Indeed, I am no speaker. I do not desire to be a speaker. I only want to be an auditor."—London Answers.

Will Bear Watching.

"Why are you so suspicious of him?"

"He has taken pains to tell me at least a dozen times within the past day or two that he is my friend."

Suitable.

"What kind of an apartment did the singer get?"

"I suppose nothing less would satisfy her than a suite thing in A flat."

Not the Last.

The Wife—Those trousers of yours look as if they were on their last legs. The Husband — Well, they're not. Johnnie will have to wear 'em after I get through with 'em.

SO PICTURESQUE.

YOUR FLOWER BEDS.

How to Set Plants So That They Will Thrive and Bloom.

Where beds are to be filled with a single plant they should be planted in even rows an equal distance apart and the plants alternated in the rows, which will give each plant considerably more room and light. It is well to have these lines laid out and the places for the plants marked before any plants are lifted from the hotbed, in order that the planting may go forward as rapidly and smoothly as possible. A board with chalk marks on the edge will accomplish this admirably for small beds, or a cord with bits of white cloth tied at intervals, or chalk marks even, will be useful in long beds or lines.

In planting make a hole in the earth with the trowel large enough to hold the root of the plant in a natural position and place the plant therein, drawing up the earth about the roots and pressing it snugly down; pour in sufficient water to fill the hole, and when it has partially soaked away draw up the remaining earth and press firmly.

Make a fine dust mulch about the plant by working the soil lightly with the trowel, and if any damp places show after the plant has been set a few moments go over the soil again or add dry earth from another part of the bed if necessary. The planting may be hastened by making a row of holes across the beds before beginning to set the plants, then placing the plants in each before applying water, but drawing up part of the earth; the water is then placed in all the holes, and by the time the last is filled the first has soaked away sufficiently to allow of filling up and finishing; this saves an appreciable amount of time when there is a large amount of planting to do.

No shade or covering of any kind will be needed if the planting has been well and thoroughly done, nor is it necessary or advisable to wait for signs of rain before planting, though planting at the edge of a spell of rainy weather has doubtless advantages. But planting before a summer shower is to be avoided, as this is usually followed by hot weather, and under the influence of a hot sun the moisture in the soil evaporates rapidly, and the soil must be constantly cultivated to retain what water it contains.

After the planting is completed go over the beds carefully and where any moisture has drawn to the surface restore the dry mulch by cultivation or by adding dry soil from some other place. If the planting has been well done the plants will not need watering for several days, indeed are far better off without it. If the weather is unusually dry as soon as the plants begin to grow or show that they are becoming established by the way they settle themselves in the ground and turn toward the light water may be given in sufficient quantity to thoroughly soak the ground and the following day the soil worked over with rake or trowel to restore the dust mulch. This is better than repeated waterings.

How to Make a Dress Bag.

Make a bag of any kind of material desired (a pretty flowered cretonne is suitable), the length of the garment to be covered with the back piece a little longer than the front, so it can be brought up and fastened to the front side with buttons and button holes or "snaps."

Draw up the front to fit around the hanger, thus entirely inclosing the garment. In the interior of the bag make two or three small pockets, fill with sachet, camphor or some other protection against moths if garment is not in use.

ALLIES CLEAN UP TRENCHES AND TAKE 950 PRISONERS

GERMANS CLAIM SINKING OF EIGHT ENGLISH TRAWLERS

VICTORIOUS DRIVE RESUMED BY BRITISH AND FRENCH

Foch's Armies by Sudden Thrust Imperil Great Ger man Base Capture Biaches, Also Hardecourt — Haig's Men Advance Toward Ovillers—Repulse Heavy Attacks

LONDON, July 10.—Special— The French official report last night contained the following summary:

"The operations on the Somme front, from July 1 to 7, resulted in the capture by us of more than 9,500 prisoners. Among the important war material that we took we have counted up to date seventy-six cannon and several hundred machine guns."

A British summary was as follows:

"We have taken upwards of 6,000 prisoners, twenty-one guns, fifty-one machine guns, a large number of automatic rifles, trench mortars, minewerfers, searchlights and other military booty."

French troops south of the Somme, by a sudden thrust this morning on a front of two and a half miles, drove forward into the German lines between the river and Belloy-en-Santerre for a gain, at its greatest point, of a mile and a quarter. To-night their most advanced front juts out within two miles of Peronne, the great German base and first objective of the Franco-British Picardy offensive.

Sweeping across a rain-swept and treacherous terrain, the French troops carried their front forward on the entire sector of attack for an average of more than three-quarters of a mile. They crumpled up the trench lines of the Germans interspersed between the broken second line of defence and the where the Kaiser's troops will make their last stand before Peronne.

The Germans admit the capture of Hardecourt by the French on Saturday.

In their advance the French carried the powerfully fortified village of Blaches, a mile and a half east of Herbecourt and two miles south-east of Peronne.

Weakness is Revealed in The Ruins

Parliament Buildings Were in Danger of Collapse From Weight of Tower

OTTAWA, July 8—What looked like defective work by the original builders of the Parliament buildings was revealed by an examination made of their ruins by a party of newspapermen, which was conducted over the scene of operations this afternoon by Hon. Robert Rogers, minister of public works.

On the terrace there now lies a number of large pieces of cut stone that had been patched in an extraordinary way to overcome setting, the result, it is believed by architects, of bad masonry work. These stones when called upon to bear the strain of the building cracked and split, and they were subsequently patched.

The front walls still standing provide a number of examples of bad work. For instance, the northeast corner stones upon which the tower rested had been wrenched from the brick foundations adjoining and look as if at any time they might have collapsed under the weight of the tower.

There is no building left in the mortar and the walls when looked at sectionally are seen to be falling apart In some cases this kind of workmanship had been patched. The cross walls had not been tied.

It is stated that the building would have given way if an attempt were made to put another storey thereon. The southeast corner of the building was built upon earth though solid rock could have been found some eight inches deeper down. It had since cracked badly.

A new stock room for the library 247 feet long will be inserted in the face of the cliff due north of the library itself. It will have a capacity of a million books. There will be no living quarters for the speaker in the new buildings.

The old buildings, it is stated, were put up by the Government by day labor and took twelve years to construct. As regards the new structure Hon. Mr. Rogers stated:

"For everything that is being done we have the unanimous approval of the Parliamentary Committee composed of both Conservative and Liberals.

"We intend to make a good job of it and there will be no graft if we can possibly help it."

Were Given A Hammering

Germans Were so Badly Used up That They WereUnable to Counter Attack

PARIS, July 8.—The battle was suspended along the French section of the line in Picardy yesterday. The Germans were too badly hammered to be in a position to continue counterattacks and the French were left unmolested to make careful preparations for the second phase of their offensive. In accordance with the new strategy of the Allies, the second thrust of the French will not begin until the British have advanced their line.

Another reason that the Germans were obliged to hold their hand is that they have not yet rearranged their communications which were thrown out of gear by the rapidity of the initial French drive.

Chaulnes, the great junction on the Amiens—Rheims-Chaument transverse railroad, upon which the Germans depended for concentrating troops, is now no longer safe. Reinforcements and supplies are being detrained further east at Nesle, Voyennes and Ham, which points are being incessantly bombarded by French aeroplanes. The latter two stations were completely burned yesterday and the track damaged.

The fiercest fighting on Thursday occurred at Belloy, which the Germans attacked six times, the 17th Bavarian division suffering heavy losses. The most violent attack was made at 3 o'clock on a slight salient which the French line forms between Belloy and Estrees. The attack was male by two regiments in massed formation. They struggled heroically through the infernal curtain fire of the French artillery, which tore gaps in their ranks. They even made some way forward in the face of a hail of bullets from machine guns, but, as soon as they came within striking distance, the Frenchmen sprang from the trenches and scattered the remnant o fthe brigade with the bayonet.

HAVE A NEW KIND OF DUEL

French Aristocrats Settle Differences Before a Common Enemy

PARIS, July 10.—(Special.)—In a front line trench a few yards from the enemy two young French officers of aristocratic descent quarrelled before witnesses. In ordinary circumstances such a matter could have been adjusted only by recourse to a duel, which would have continued until one or the other fell wounded, but realizing that, in war time, their lives belonged to France, the officers decided on a "duel" in which the enemy would be the one attacked.

It was agreed that as soon as one of the officers had been wounded honor should be considered satisfied. Each man took two bombs, climbed to the parapet, and threw the bombs in the German trench. The enemy retaliated, and soon one of the officers was wounded in the leg.

It was only a slight wound, but his "adversary" helped him back to the trench, the two shook hands warmly, and "honor" was satisfied.

CRUSHED AT EVERY POINT ENEMY MOVES BACKWARD

Allied Combatants Meet and Repulse Every Attack on Western Front—Wherever The Germans Gain a Footing They are Immediately Forced to Retreat—Galling Fire of Allied Guns Inflict Terrible Punishment

Canadian Press Special.

LONDON, July 10—A British statement to-day says in full: "In the past forty-eight hours particularly severe fighting has centered around Trones Wood, which measures four hundred yards from north to south, and same extent at the southern end, and has been strongly fortified by Germans with trenches and wire entanglements. Saturday morning after a heavy bombardment we captured the southern end of the wood. Subsequently we extended our position towards the north and drove back determined counter-attacks with heavy loss to the enemy. Sunday afternoon, as already reported, two more German counter-attacks in mass against our positions in the wood were crushed by our artillery. Again Sunday evening the enemy bombarded the wood with every form of weapon and launched two strong attacks from the east and south-east. The first of these was completely repulsed. The second succeeded in penetrating the southern end of the wood, but the Germans were at once ejected with heavy loss. Later in the night a fifth desperate attempt was made to drive us from our positions, but this also was completely crushed by our fire. The enemy's casualties in these five fruitless attacks have been severe. At other places on the battle front progress has been made. North-west of Contalmaison we captured a small copse and three guns, and this morning we have taken several hundred more prisoners. On the Flanders front the enemy's artillery was active and heavily bombarded our trenches near Hooge for three hours. In this neighborhood we made three successful raids into the German front line.

VEILED THREAT OF MORE REPRISALS

Germany Complains That Nine Merchantmen Have Been Sunk Without Warning

BERLIN, July 8.—A report is current by the semi-official Wolff Telegraph Bureau that nine German merchantmen bound for Swinemunde were attacked without warning by an enemy submarine south of Oeland Island, a torpedo track and the treaks of air bubbles being clearly seen. It gains the character of an official document of international importance by the appended comment that it is hereby ascertained that peaceful German merchantmen have been attacked without warning by an enemy submarine from under water.

It seems not impossible that this obvious going on record may only be one link in a chain of proofs of the Entente's alleged violation of International Law, which may take the form of an Imperial memorandum to the interested neutral Governments, with an intimation that if the Allies, and particularly England, persists in breaking International Laws, Germany may itself be forced to take reprisals in selfdefence, at the same time serving notice that the time may come when Germany will be forced to make use of the full reservation of future liberty of action expressly made in the last submarine note. Emphasis is being laid here on the fact that Germany by no means bound her hands for ever nor allowed the effective submarine weapon to be wrested from her.

PETROGRAD, July 10.—(Special.) —An official statement says:—"In the Caucasus on the night of July 6-7, in the region south of the town of Platna, the Turks made attacks, which were repulsed by our fire. "West of the Erzerum line we captured an entire line of fortified positions, taking prisoners sixty-seven officers, two of whom were regimental commanders, and one o fwhom was a battery commander. We took prisoners 64 officers and 1,050 soldiers, and captured a great quantity of arms, ammunition and engineering material."

GENERAL ALLIED SUCCESSES ALONG THE VERDUN FRONT

Progress Made During Last Night, When German Trenches Were Captured and 950 Prisoners Taken — A Second Trench Cleaned up With Hand Grenades—Attempted Counter Attacks Completely Repulsed

Canadian Press Special.

PARIS, July 10.—Afternoon statement—North of the River Somme the night passed quietly.

To the south of this river our troops, continuing their progress during the night in the region of Barleaux, captured a line of German trenches situated between Barleaux and Lamaisonette. We took a total of 950 ablebodied prisoners in this sector yesterday and last night.

In Champagne district two surprise attacks by French troops resulted successfully. One was to the south-east and the other to the west of Tahure. To the west of Butte de Mesnil we delivered two attacks upon a German trench, which we occupied and organized along a front of about five hundred metres. Here we took ten prisoners.

In Argonne a French reconnoitering party penetrated German trenches near Four de Paris, which is cleaned up with grenades. On the front north of Verdun the bombardment has continued in the regions of Chattancourt, Fleury and La Laufee. A strong patrol of the enemy has been dispersed with hand grenades at a point northwest of Fleury.

In the Vosges district detachments of the enemy attacked our positions in the region of Chapelotte at three different points simultaneously. They were, however, checked by the fire of our machine guns, found it impossible to secure a footing, and were completely repulsed.

SENTRY EXONERATED

Found to Have Discharged Duties Without Intent to Kill

KINGSTON, Ont., July 8.—The jury to-night returned a verdict to the effect that Gunner Russell Elliott came to his death as a result of being shot by Sentry Joseph West, in the discharge of his duties. West was released from custody. The evidence produced showed that Elliott stood 20 feet away from the guard and refused to produce his late pass when ordered to do so by the sentry and that the sentry, following out standing instructions, fired at the ground. Medical evidence showed that the bullet split into two pieces before it hit Elliott.

Capt. McManus, an infantry instructor, gave very material evidence, in that he testified that the bullet must have struck something before hitting Elliott, showing that West had not deliberately aimed at Elliott, but merely carried out military orders and fired at the ground. Major Gardiner produced a dying declaration from Elliott in which the latter stated he had been challenged by the centry. "I told him to come to where I was," said Elliott, "I would not go to him, and he shot at me."

SOLDIER DROWNED NEAR CAMP BORDEN

CAMP BORDEN, Ont., July 10.—Private Victor Robert Kane of the 142 Battalion, was drowned in the Nottawasaga River near Angus at 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon. Taking advantage of the Sunday leave, Kane and two companions, Ptes. Griffiths and Clarke, walked to the river, about a mile and a half from the camp. While swimming around Clarke noticed that Kane had disappeared. Clarke dived several times, but failed to locate his companion. A party with grappling ropes hurried to the scene, and a raft was formed for the purpose of dragging the spot. Quartermaster-Sergt. Hogg dived many times, and while dragging operations were in progress the raft parted in the middle, and three men were upset into the water. One man had a narrow escape, and was grabbed by Sergt. Hogg after going down twice.

Athletic Mosquitoes.

Singapore is on the Malay peninsula, that shoe tongue that hangs down from the southeast corner of India. A Singapore mosquito will lie slothfully around all day, not turning a hand, but the moment it sees you retire for the night and pull down the bed netting it leaps to its feet, trembling with eagerness. They will pass up thousands of Chinese and Malays a few blocks away, sleeping without cover of any kind, to come and work and plan the whole night through to get just one taste of white meat. Their persistence is wonderful. An ant in comparison to a Singapore mosquito is a happy-go-lucky creature, with no thought of the morrow. Here in the luxurious tropics mosquitoes grow to splendid proportions, perfectly formed and splendidly muscled, and in any catch-as-catch-can conflict can defend themselves against all comers, irrespective of nationality. In a clinch they have a way of balancing on their tails and leaping on to their opponent and tearing him with their hind feet, after the manner of the cornered Australian kangaroo. — Homer Croy in Leslie's.

Tiger Sharks.

When a Hawaiian sees a shark near the surface with eyes which shine red, as though they had red glass in them, he will not go in the water or even on the water or if he is on the water he will get to shore, for the red eyed fish is the tiger shark, and it does not hesitate to attack. They will not only attack a man in the water, but they will follow a fisherman in a canoe after he has taken a lot of fish aboard, and it is said they will attack and overturn a canoe if they are very hungry.

Men who know fish do not want to have anything to do with the tiger shark.

A shark does not turn on its back to bite, as is the common opinion of those who have not lived near shark infested waters. It turns on its side and when in this position can travel almost as fast and handle itself almost as well as when it is in its natural position.—Honolulu Star.

Frozen Food in Siberia.

The markets of Irkutsk, in Siberia, are an interesting sight, for the products offered for sale are in most cases frozen solid. Fish are piled up in stacks like so much cordwood, and meat likewise. All kinds of fowl are similarly frozen and piled up. Some animals brought into the market whole are propped up on their legs and have the appearance of being actually alive, and as one goes through the markets one seems to be surrounded by living pigs, sheep, oxen and fowls standing up. But, stranger yet, even the liquids are frozen solid and sold in blocks. Milk is frozen into a block in this way and with a string or a stick frozen into and projecting from it. This, it is said, is for the convenience of the purchaser, who is thus enabled to carry his milk by the string or stick handle.

Cromwell and Quinine.

We owe to Sir Clements Markham the introduction of quinine yielding trees to British India and the consequent cheapening of the drug from a guinea to a halfpenny an ounce in Calcutta, but the medicinal properties of cinchona bark had long been known. They were discovered by the Jesuits, after whom it was called Jesuits' bark. Concerning that, Sir Clements used to relate an odd coincidence. Oliver Cromwell died of tertian ague, and quinine might have saved him. In the very newspaper in which his death was announced, the Mercurius Politicus, there was an advertisement of Jesuits' bark for sale. But the name of Jesuit was abhorrent to the Puritans, and hence Cromwell's medical advisers would have nothing to do with it.—London Chronicle.

"Valley of Dried Bones."

The island of Jamaica possesses a "valley of dried bones." It is near the Cunacuma gap, in the Maroon country. This valley, though in the heart of the "wet country," is bare of leaf and life. The limestone rock is hot. Giant trees, which seem to have been blighted suddenly, stand up gaunt and dead. Although vegetation seems to have been dense here in former years, nothing will grow now. During the hot season the temperature is almost unbearable. It is visited by seismic disturbances, which cause the dead trees and hot stones to rattle like dry bones.

Too Old to Be Fooled.

A man entered a grocery store and ordered some eggs.

"That man always buys fresh eggs," whispered a small egg, peeping out from the depths of the basket.

"Huh," scoffed the big egg on top, "yuh can't tell me that. I wasn't laid yesterday."

A Sure Way.

There are several methods whereby pickpockets may be avoided on crowded street cars, but the surest way is to keep your money in the bank in your wife's name.

Impossible.

"Do you think it safe to marry on $25 a week?"

"My boy, no amount of money can guarantee marriage to be safe."

MULES WIN BATTLES.

Loyalty of the Indian Muleteer a Byword in the Armies.

Perhaps there never was a more picturesque campaign than that being carried on in ancient Mesopotamia.

The war is too engrossing to permit of very much attention being given to the spectacular. But we gain something of the color of the surroundings of things from the description given by Mr. Edmund Candler, representative of the British Press in Mesopotamia, of the transport service in Mesopotamia:

The first and second line transport is served by pack mules, Indian Army transport carts drawn by mules and ponies, camels, and a bullock train for the heavy guns. It is doubtful if any other army can count on being so efficiently served in the way of transport when fighting in an inhospitable country.

In the old days before the war the drabi (mule driver) was a worthy drudge, and as such respected. He got more kicks and less halfpence than anybody else in the army. Perhaps it is adversity that has moulded him.

Before August 19 there was only one case in which an Indian mule driver received a decoration. At Sahil and Smaiba alone six members of the corps were awarded the Indian Order of Merit. And in France the drabi's reputation was high.

It was drabi who pursued his escaping mule almost into the German lines at Loos, crying out that the beast had broken his heel rope and that his Sahib would be angry. It was a drabi who sat through the whole of the bombardment at Neuve Chapelle when all the rest of his column had taken cover. He wandered about all night unable to find his destination. His cart was "written off," for the bombardier in charge, who had obeyed the order: "All into your dug-outs," said that nothing could live through that fire. In the morning the drabi turned up at Brigade Headquarters with his ammunition, explaining that he had lost the way. "Rasta bul gia, hazur." When asked what the fire was like he said that the wind from the shells was like the monsoons in the hills at Dharmsala.

And only the other day Ali Hussein, drabi, must need report himself sick on January 23. The doctor found a bullet in his shoulder.

"Where were you wounded?" he was asked.

"In the battle, Sahib."

"But that was on the 21st. Why did you not report yourself before?"

"Sahib," he said, fearing reproof. "I had no time. The wounded were too many."

He had made the journey to the trenches in his cart ten or a dozen times through the darkness and cold and mud and rain.

If beasts were decorated, the mule would be covered with ribbons. He also knows not defeat. In the second line the brunt of the work has fallen on the ponies and mules of the Jaipur and Bharatpur Imperial Service Transport Corps.

It is commonly reported in the force—with what truth I cannot say—that the Jaipur pony transport train won the battle of Shaiba. The story is that when the 200 carts appeared cantering up on the horizon in the blur of the mirage as dusk fell, the Turkish general, taking them for a new brigade of cavalry, decamped.

The camel so far has been but an auxiliary in the second line of transport, but much is expected of him, though he is woefully misunderstood. Like the yak, he is a providentially ascetic beast. The camel's mincing gait and supercilious glances are generally attributed to pose; as a matter of fact they are the expression of an inward and unsuspected delicacy. Neither the British officer nor the Indian sepoy, as a rule, understand the camel of a strange land. Too often the camel's uncouth bulk, combined with his uncanny asceticism, leaves a false impression of hardiness, and adds to his yoke. Weight is piled on, and his cries ascend to deaf ears. But, well cared for, sufficiently equipped, and tactfully treated, the camel is second only as a beast of burden to the mule.

"At England, and England's Trade!"

A fiery leading article in the Frightful Hamburger Nachrichten (March 2) does its best to remove the doubts of Bethmann-Hollweg about the advisability of ruthless submarine warfare against England. The screech concludes:

"Until England is overthrown and her trade, on which she depends, destructively attacked, the German nation cannot attain that booty of triumph to which it is entitled and the war for us and our allies will not end. All the nations battling for God and Right are waiting upon us. What are we waiting for? The weapons with which to strike England are at hand. Honest German labor has created them. The courageous men who can wield them burn for the command to employ them. The whole German nation is united in the determination to use these weapons. At England and England's trade! That is the battle-cry which rings imperiously from the North Sea to the farthermost frontiers of the Empire!"

The Scotch of It.

The famous scientist, Sir Archibald Geikie, although a Scotsman, is not above thoroughly enjoying a joke even though it is against his countrymen. One he tells himself is about an Englishman and a Scotsman who went to Egypt together and paid a visit to the Pyramids. The Englishman was lost in admiration at the wonderful sight, and presently asked his companion for his opinion. The Scotsman shook his head sorrowfully. "Ah, mon," he said with a sigh, "what a lot of mason work not to be bringin' in any rent!"

Collars Make Blouses.

Do you know how to "trim up" the plain blouse and make it become your individual style? Get a collar in white chiffon or sheerest organdie which in turning back covers the nape and the sides of the neck, runs flatly across the shoulders and straight down over the bust, forming a slender "V" opening below the throat. This collar is bordered with pin tucked self material, straight on its outer edge and widely scalloped along the fine, embroidery outlined inner edge. Another blouse dominating collar has a tapering, narrow turnover coming high against all save the front of the neck and widened by an extremely broad frilling of the plaited material a-jour hemmed. In crepe de chine this second collar is extremely practical as well as dainty.

Toddler's Apron.

A charming little work or play apron is made of soft pink linen with a yoke, sleeve bands and hem of white. The little apron buttons at the back of the yoke and is cut with flaring lines, so that it spreads wide at the hem. There is a cross stitched design of Little Bopeep and a couple of her wee lambs. The same apron could be made in blue and white, with any other Mother Goose character or animal or flower in the cross stitch.

THE QUINTE SUMMER SCHOOL A WEEK OF JOYOUS FELLOWSHIP

Difficult to Realize The Amount of Work Done—Officers Elected—Next Year's School Likely to Meet at Albert College

This year's school is over. It has exceeded expectations. Every teacher and speaker on the programme took the work assigned. The number attending was larger than last year. It is anticipated that next year's school will be still better. The school is not a convention; it is a school. Bible study is central. A vision of real Bible study has been given many. The word of God has been revealed as a treasure, rich to those who dig the depths. The mission study classes have been telescopes revealing the mission world as a great field for operations in the fight for the kingdom.

Teacher training classes have fitted leaders for service in Sunday School. Mass meetings have been inspirational. The recreative life has ministered to the spirtual as well as to the physical life. The fellowships of the week will be lasting. The results will be permanent.

The Rev. Frank H. Langford, B.A., is the right man in a good place. He has a warm spot in the hearts of delegates. Dealing with the time devoted to worship in the session of the Sunday School, he asked that it be not called preliminary exercises. It is a vital part of the Sunday School. The devotional service should develop the life—it is not simply preliminary exercises. Members should realize the dignity and reverence in worshipping God. The hymns suited to the secondary division—those from 13 to 20 years of age—should be hymns of action, expressing the aspirations of the young people. "Jesus Loves me, this I know," will be sung heartily by children and the aged, who revert to childhood. But a study of the faces of young men and women asked to sing that hymn is a revelation. It isn't suited for them. But they will whole-heartedly sing "Onward Christian Soldier." The school should have its departments, and each department should have a devotional service suited to its needs. We must work until those from 4 to 8 years of age be by themselves from the opening until closing of school. Three departments of the school now have special literature. To-day we have the tragedy, in many schools, of teaching beginners what young men, from 17 to 20 years need to know. The uniform lessons, being chosen for the whole school, are not even the best for adults, for the soul of Hebrew history, the prophets' messages, are used less than the Books of Chronicles and Kings. Children need stories about Bible children. They wouldn't understand the story of the whole life. Begin the use of graded lessons gradually. Use them for primary and junior first.

The Sunday Schools must not exist for themselves. They must express themselves in life. If we miss the opportunity of early years we cripple ourselves for life. This is a practical age and we need worship, instruction and expression more than our forefathers. We must express practically by co-operation with the home. In the Kingdom of God we must try to keep children sweet and pure. "The branch that beareth not fruit, He casteth away." We give the children lessons, but we need to give them something to do. Unless we use our religion we will lose it. It is dangerous to get filled with a desire to serve unless we translate desire into actual service. If we don't give them work to do, the devil will. Teach them to pray, and to pray publicly; to read the Scripture publicly; to give a short talk; to be like Jesus. The call is coming to each of us to do some particular thing. Answer each call as it comes. We are expecting results in Sunday School work, but are we preparing for results? The great outstanding need in our work at this hour is emphasis on boys' work. The great majority in khaki are between 18 and 30 years of age. A great national campaign will be launched in October through Boys' Conference.

We have no statistics for Methodist church such as the survey of Presbyterian church gave that church, where only one out of three boys between 17 and 20 years are actcally in attendance at Sunday School.

So far as can be ascertained 15 per cent. of decisions for Christ are made before the age of 12; fifteen per cent after 20; 70 per cent between 13 and 20 years of age. At the same period only 70 per cent. of these are enrolled in Sunday School; and only 46 per cent. are in attendance. This is startling, and should arouse us to action. The building in which Sunday School meets is important. Best results cannot be secured unless attention is given to this. Many a church, built like a barn, could have Sunday School rooms added. Folding doors and curtains can be utilized. What an impetus to the Sunday School work, what an inspiration to the workers if every school had rooms adequate to its need. We must agitate and educate until this need is supplied. Plans for Sunday School rooms and buildings will be supplied by Rev. S. T. Bartlett, Toronto, on request.

Rev. Stanley E. Annis, M.A., B.D.

Mr. Annis has spent the week among the delegates, and through personal contact as well as by public addresses, has done much to give us a clearer vision. He spent the past year at "The Kennedy School of Missions," Hartford, Conn, and is now under appointment for West China. He had in early years come under the influence of a former pupil of Albert College. Speaking on the Missionary Challenge," he said that after Carey had his vision of the need, the East India Company declared the sending of missionaries would be costly, extravagant and impertinent; that the scheme was pernicious, dangerous and fantastic. It would bring peace and safety with peril. That was only 100 years ago. Even a great church assembly had declared it was absurd and improper while one unsaved was unreached at home. But Christ's message was that his religion was for the whole world, carrying with it a the life of service.

Christ's command was to preach the Gospel, to instruct in its meaning so men can intelligently follow and to organize men so as to help them live the live of service.

Behind the command was the training course of years with the Master Teacher. To-day we have vision as in those early days. We have come to the open Bible and to the truth of the Bible. Freely have we received. Shall we freely give?

Access to the world is easier now. Daily cablegrams are posted in West China regarding the war. The result of the last Presidential election in the U. S. was cabled from San Francisco, and was known in West China before the majority of the Americans themselves knew it.

The situation in non-Christian nations is better known to-day. They are wide open to Christianity, but there is a spirit of independence and patriotism, and China and Japan do not propose to suffer from aggressions of Western nations.

Also there is a spirit of racial consciousness. "We belong to the East, you to the West. We have our ideals, they are just as good as yours," they say. There are complex and intricate questions which require Christian statesmanship.

But there is another feature. To-day these nations are ripe to accept the message of the living Christ. Since the war began there has been a greater rush to the Christian schools than before. There is a wholesale turning to Christianity that is staggering. There is a great evangelistic campaign in Japan. "Hallelujah Kim" is the Billy Sunday of Japan. There were 1,300 conversions in Japan in two weeks. Protestant missionaries are asking for 474 new missionaries to help care for the converts. Seven thousand are enrolled in study classes.

The evangelical churches in Mexico, the land of strife, are packed to the doors. In India, schools are full and there are not enough churches to hold the people who want to come.

In Europe, there is a great demand for New Testaments in the trenches, so special evangelistic work is being done in France and Bulgaria. The Liquor Traffic is being driven out at home and abroad. The learning influence of Christianity is being felt in non-Christian religions.

But there are vast unoccupied fields, and some not yet even planned for. There are 100,000,000 in India alone for whom there is no missionary The magnitude of the task is a challenge. Nothing can save the world but the divine resources. They are placed above disposal if we are willing to use them. Shall we do our bit? The workers' training school of the Chentu District held its annual session at Jenshow last October, in many respects similar to the present school at Albert College. Eighty-five Chinese men were present out of one hundred and four delegates. It lasted one week, closing on a Sunday. It was preceded by a three days' prayer-meeting. Sunrise prayer-meetings were held. It developed into a great spiritual upheaval. On the last day, the spirit of God swept the company and all over the church, men fell upon their faces confessing their sins, and craving pardon. It was a repetition of Pentecost. The evangelists, teachers' wives and Bible women unanimously agreed:—To tithe their income; to establish as a standard of church membership that no person was to be received and baptized until he or she had led another to Jesus Christ; to begin immediately a concerted evangelistic campaign.

Mrs. W. P. Rogers

Spoke on "Aims and Methods in Junior League Work." A friend of Tennyson's once said to him, "My dearest objects in life, when at its best, is to leave the world, by however little, better than I found it. What is yours?"

Tennyson replied: 'My greatest wish God." In the combined objective of those two friends wehaveth ecrystalli- those two friends we have the crystallization of the E. L. motto "Look up! Lift up!" If Tennyson's motto be the actuating power in our lives, no where do we need to guard the motive more jealously than in contact with children.

There is no work in the church which needs a broader vision, a cleaner insight a deeper devotion than the work of Supt. of Jr. League. The solemnity and importance of Christ's last commission "Go and preach the Gospel" has been recognized from Paul's time down to our own. But no less solemn and no less important was the Master's repeated injunction to Peter; "Feed My lambs; feed My lambs." Can we realize as did the Master that life is to be redeemed in its fountain and at its source; that the child is but the potency and promise of the man, and that the possibilities of goodness, of love and all that is holy is within him? Some one has said, "Give me the children, and then let who will make the laws and sing the songs of the country." Nearly 25 centuries ago Zechariah saw in vision the future joy and peace and prosperity of Jerusalem, and described it thus: "The streets of the city shall be filled with boys and girls playing in the streets thereof."

The Master's attitude toward children and His teachings concerning them clearly define their relationship to God and their place in His Kingdom. As a church, we have sometimes seemed to forget that Christ said "Of such is the Kingdom of Heaven." But the church to-day is finding it is better to form than to reform; that just as the bit of life within the lowly root calls for the sun that it may blossom in the rose, so the bit of life within the kernel calls for the sunshine that it may become the harvest.

Church-workers must have three aims in view: to nurture; to develop; to strengthen. We must study the child; direct its energies rather than check them, and so direct them that they tend towards the child's development physically, mentally and spiritually. Then we must recognize the social instincts which crave for satisfaction. This calls for grouping and organizing into clubs, societies and classes. The form should be determined largely by local conditions.

Then during the years when memory is the brightest and most retentive, the great passages of Scripture and hymns should be instilled. There is also the hero-worshipping age, and the example ilved out before them is even more potent than the stories of heroes of long ago.

In the spring time when violets open their sweet-scented petals, the snake also ventures forth. Let us remember that the church is not the only force striving to hold and develop the boys and girls.

The speaker recommended grading the E. L. into Junior, Intermediate and Senior Societies where the constituency is large. Many practical methods of work were mentioned and explained, including boys' meetings conducted similar to a lodge, colored ribbon badges. Each signifying a degree, being won by various pledges, etc. The keynote of all Junior League meetings is that they be practical and appropriate. Recognize the child's love for pictures, and for games, and sing much at the meetings. If children be allowed to choose their own hymns they will choose those that have the most stir and life in them. Give them work to do that will minister to their best good.

Miss Florence E. Hall

Spoke on Canada's call to the young women of Methodism. In these days of the church's awakening to the needs of boys and young men the equally important problem of girls and young women has been rather overlooked and underestimated. Perhaps this is because of the popular belief that girls will be good anyway. "You girls have no temptations, why shouldn't you be good?"

Do not make this mistake in your estimate of womankind and their quality of goodness. If a girl is good, true and wholesome she has had to pay the price for the virtue, for the average girls meets and struggles with as many, if different, temptations as the average man, and at the time of decision of right or wrong, quite as critical.

The downfall of one now and again is attended by much bitter criticism and comment, but a similar downfall from grace of a man is comparatively unnoticed.

The great influence, of womanhood on the character of home and country should call us to give consideration to the training of the girls of our home. The women of the world decide eternal destinies. A God-fearing, God-loving womanhood makes a God-fearing, God-loving nation.

The young women of Canada have a two-fold responsibility. We should fit the young women of Canada for the discharge of their duty to God and our fellow-citizens and must also send the gospel to women of other lands, which will make them ready to do their work of redemption.

The call comes first through the home and for the home. These are days of restlessness and aspiration beyond the bounds of the home. They are invited to step into a sphere that seems wider than the somewhat limited circle of the home. A girl conscious of her own ability and with ambition to make good will ask herself if she has the right to give up her life and ambition, and perhaps resents the fact that she is restricted from living her own life by the sense of duty to those at home. There are cases where a girl can best help her friends by going out into the world, but if the home needs her, she can do no better than by making the most of the daily round, the trivial task. She will not find time hanging heavily on her hands. Nowhere can she find so many occasions for lending a hand which lightens the pack and so bravely helps the fellow pilgrim along his way. We take comfort in the thought that we are serving where God has placed us. Even if far from home, we are still responsible for our duty to the home folk, and should live such lives as will bring no discredit to the home.

Then call comes to us through the church and community. Young women must arouse themselves to meet the need. Boys will invariably respond to the teaching of a consecrated young woman, who means well and tries to live right, when they will not

THIS IS THE 681TH DAY THE BRITISH EMPIRE HAS BEEN AT WAR WITH GERMANY.

SETTLING THE IRISH QUESTION.

With a courage that is characteristic of the British Government, the Irish question has been faced and, for the present at least, its difficulties overcome. There may have been some misunderstanding at the beginning of the outbreak, and possibly errors were permitted to creep in, but as light dawned upon the intricate groundwork of the disturbances each thread was grasped with an intelligent understanding, to finally swing the perplexed problem upon a platform of a common cause.

Prior to the outbreak of the European war there was danger of civil strife, but the Nationalists and Ulsterites, vieing with each other in loyalty to the Imperial Government in an hour of peril, they have been fighting side by side in the trenches, and it seemed for a time that the whole Irish question might safely be held in abeyance until the European war had passed into history. But the Sinn Feiners ruled otherwise, and in the midst of the hardest struggle in English history the Government had to find a way to adjust a domestic difficulty. In the dilemma Lloyd George was again the agent relied upon to accomplish a task which other statesmen viewed with dismay. He had solved the munitions problem, he had exerted his great personal influence toward the solution of the recruiting problem, and now it is his plan for provisional Irish home rule that is to clear the political atmosphere and keep the factions quiet until one year after the peace of Europe is assured.

It is a large undertaking, one which is sure to develop new and trying problems which must be met from time to time, but it is a way out of a difficulty which could not be trifled with or talked out of existence. There is to be, without delay, an Irish Parliament in Dublin, a deliberate bi-cameral body formed on a new plan. The House of Commons is to include the seventy-six Irish Nationalists and Independents sitting in the Imperial Parliament and the two Unionists, Sir Edward Carson, the Ulster leader, fierce protagonist in the contest against home rule, and the Attorney-General for Ireland, Mr Campbell. Until lately Carson has been irreconcilable. Now he has promised to sit with the Nationalists. The Senate will have a large Unionist representation and the chance for lively disagreements is obvious, but Unionists and Nationalists alike are disposed to stand by the British Government while the war lasts.

The Members of the Irish House of Commons will retain their seats in the British House, and from present indications there will be ample time for both, and the expectation is that Irish Home Rule will thrive without annoying complications.

The plan, even if the new Lord Lieutenant and the Chief Secretary are exactly the right men for their posts, seems hazardous, but luck has never deserted David Lloyd George. The full details of the plan have not yet been made public, but there is reason to hope that Ireland will be relatively quiet now until British statesmanship has time to reconsider the whole question in the light of its ample fund of new experience. For the time being there is a peace at home and the incredible has been accomplished. Carson consents to sit with Home Rulers; and the British Cabinet will not be disrupted.

◆

THE DIFFERENCE.

"The assistance which the (Canadian) Government is giving and will, I hope, be able to continue to give, in financing Canadian purchases and so relieving pressure of American Exchange is not the least valuable of her contributions to the common cause," cabled Hon. Bonar Law, Colonial Secretary, recently to Sir Thomas White.

What a change in sixteen years! Now under Sir Robert Borden we send troops to aid in the Empire's fight and pay the bills; we furnish Britain with money to make purchases in Canada. Sixteen years ago Sir Wilfrid Laurier was forced to send Canadian troops to South Africa, but he sent them C.O.D. and Britain had to foot the bills. Then we sent 6,000 during a two years' war, and now during the same time we have sent 215,000 and have 135,000 more ready to go. At that time our men had to be armed, equipped and paid by the British, now every Canadian soldier is armed, equipped and paid by Canada. Canada is being thanked by the British Government for providing money to assist in the fight; sixteen years ago Great Britain was sending cheques to Sir Wilfrid Laurier to settle accounts rendered, not cables of congratulation for assistance given.

Montreal Gazette: In writing a preface to the war speeches of Wm. Morris Hughes, Lloyd George describes the Premier of Australia as "a man of courage, foresight, pertinacity, idealism, common sense, and great capacity for work." The writer and his subject are Welshmen. In character, too, they must be, as Shakespeare says, "affined and kin," for what Lloyd George said of William Morris Hughes, William Morris Hughes might with equal truth say of Lloyd George, with emphasis on the "great capacity for work." In his new position as Secretary for War, Lloyd George will exercise his great capacity with an undivided public confidence.

Montreal Herald: As for Ireland, we agree with what Parnell said quite early in his career, that the introduction of a system of government that would remove the rankling sting of a suppressed enmity "would teach Ireland to regard Imperial affairs with interest, as being the concerns no longer of a master and oppressor, but of a dear colleague and sister, whose honor and dishonor would be alike hers, whose downfall would never be her profit, and to whom she would be bound by ties sacred because voluntarily assumed."

Current Comment

It is only a couple of weeks ago since the cry was against too much rain. Now there is a protest against the dry spell. Are we ever satisfied?

Rt. Hon. Lewis Harcourt talks about "putting the fabric of the Empire on a solid basis." In other words, the notion is to spread the tablecloth and invite all the sons of the Empire to "sit in."

If Mr Hay, the Liberal candidate, be elected on Monday in North Perth, the local government can accept the result as a notice to quit. The people have very little use for the Hearst Government, judging it by the general criticism which is now offered in the press.—Kingston Whig. But "the general criticism," coming from The Whig side of the fence, may not affect North Perth so much as our contemporary would wish.

The Ontario Tory party is no longer a happy family. Jealousy and dissension have arisen and so annoyed and irritated are some of the members becoming that they cannot keep it to themselves. For instance, the Toronto World declares that a strong feeling of dissatisfaction with the Conservative Governments at both Ottawa and Toronto prevails, etc., and that "the Governments seem to listen to anyone but their own supporters; 'it may be time to give them a rude jolt,' seems to voice the common view."—Hamilton emTis. This is but another of The Times' periodical pipe-dreams.

COMRADE.

(An Incident of the War.)

At Mons—in the old monastery,
A wounded prisoner lay.
And "Johnny Canuck," the orderly,
Cared for him, night and day.

The long slow hours dragged one by one,
The weary days crept past.
Till, with the setting of the sun,
His life was ebbing fast.

He raised his grateful eyes, to find
Jack, ever by his side;
He clasped the hand, so true and kind,
"Comrade," he said—and died.

And surely we may dare to think,
That dying lips spoke true,
That, as he reached the river's brink,
The dying German knew—

That in the world not far away,
The slayer and the slain,
The bitter foes, who fight to-day,
To-morrow meet again.

To find all hate and anger past;
Misunderstandings o'er,
And that the brave—who see at last—
Are comrades evermore.

Power of an Advertisement.

In the American Magazine is the story of a very wealthy man who made his fortune through an advertising scheme. In front of a small store in New York city a crowd was looking at a novel article exhibited in the window. The advertising man introduced himself to the proprietor of the store and said:

"You have something here that is worth a fortune if advertised. I want to advertise it."

"I don't believe much in advertising," said the man.

"I'll make you a proposition. If I triple the sales of the article in three months will you give me a half interest in the business?"

After an hour's talk the other consented. Inside of five days he called his new partner up on the phone and begged him to stop as he was sold out ten times over the capacity of his plant. The advertising man took a half interest in the business, rented a five story building, advertised for workers and inside of a month had increased the output of the article forty-fold and extended his field to other cities.

Barbers In Japan.

In Japan not only men, but women, go to the barber if there be any sign of hair on their faces. They do not permit even the soft down to grow, which the Japanese are often astonished to see left unmolested on the faces of some western women. Often, too, the eyebrows are shaved. In recent years the female barber has become a feature of the profession in Tokyo, most of these being the wives of barbers who wish to make themselves useful to their husbands, though some are independent. The 17th of every month is regarded as a barbers' holiday, when they close up shop and go to theaters and places of amusement, for which they are often furnished with free tickets, because they allow the playbills and other advertisements of the places of amusement to be posted in their shops free.

Too Much Refrain.

"Marriage!" said the sentimental man, with a sigh. "Heaven's greatest boon to man—a good wife. My friends, it is this that makes life possible, filling it with happiness and taking away all loneliness and misery. Marriage is one grand, sweet song!" he finished, with a rapturous air.

His listeners were impressed—all except a practical looking chap in one corner, who promptly rose to his feet.

"Well, marriage may not be exactly one grand, sweet song," he said slowly, "but it's certainly one grand, sweet refrain—refrain from tobacco, refrain from the theater, refrain from games, refrain from spending week ends—in fact, refrain from pretty well everything." — Pittsburgh Chronicle-Telegraph.

Business and Sympathy.

At a country market a lady went up to a stall where two fine geese were exposed for sale in charge of a country lass. The girl would not sell one goose without the other. Knowing that a friend would be glad to have one of them, the customer was easily prevailed upon to take both, but out of curiosity, after she had bought and paid for them, she asked the girl why she had refused to sell the geese separately. "If you please, ma'am," was the answer, "mother said as how the geese had lived together fifteen years and it would be too cruel to part them."—London Mail.

Worse Than Working.

The stage carpenter went to the theater manager and asked for an increase in his wages. The manager appeared surprised.

"Why," he exclaimed, "I really don't see my way to giving you a raise. You have nothing much to do. Half the time you are merely standing in the wings listening to the play."

"Yes, sir," replied the carpenter grimly; "that's just it."—Pittsburgh Telegraph.

Paying the Piper.

"Dad, I want to be a musician."

"Then I'd be either a piper or a fiddler."

"Why?"

"When there is any paying to be done I notice they are always preferred creditors." — Louisville Courier-Journal.

"What's that?"

"When they talk of their big catches they don't seem to know when to draw the line."—Baltimore American.

More Than a Turn.

"Did you win the argument?"

"I should say so. Why, when I finished my opponent couldn't say a word."

"You did him to a turn, eh?"

"To a taciturn."—St. Louis Republic.

Domestic Bliss.

Mrs. Neighbors—Do you and your husband live happily together? Mrs. Enpeck—Sure. I'd just like to see my husband try not to live happily with me.

A Statistician.

"What is a statistician, pa?"

"A statistician, my son, is a man who comes to the aid of figures which cannot lie for themselves."—London Telegraph.

Her Business.

Patience—Don't you think she knows her business? Patrice—Well, if it's knowing everybody else's she does.

Pretty Small.

SYNOPSIS OF COAL MINING REGULATIONS.

Coal mining rights of the Dominion, in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, the Yukon Territories, the North-West Territories and in a portion of the Province of British Columbia, may be leased for a term of twenty-one years at an annual rental of $1 an acre. Not more than 2,560 acres will be leased to one applicant.

Applications for a lease must be made by the applicant in person to the Agent or Sub-Agent of the district in which the rights applied for are situated.

In surveyed territory the land must be described by sections or legal sub-divisions of sections and in unsurveyed territory the tract applied for shall be staked by the applicant himself.

Each application must be accompanied by a fee of $5 which will be refunded if the rights applied for are not available, but not otherwise. A royalty shall be paid on the merchantable output of the mine at the rate of five cents per ton.

The person operating the mine shall furnish the Agent with sworn returns accounting for the full quantity of merchantable coal mined and pay the royalty thereon. If the coal mining rights are not being operated, such returns should be furnished at least once a year.

The lease will include the coal mining rights only, but the lessee may be permitted to purchase whatever available surface rights may be considered necessary for the working of the mine at the rate of $10.00 an acre.

For full information application should be made to the Secretary of the Department of the Interior, Ottawa, or to any Agent or Sub-Agent of Dominion Lands.

A FATAL BARGAIN
OR
THE MAN WHO DARED FATE
BY
NICHOLAS CARTER

Author of the celebrated stories of Nick Carter's adventures, which are published exclusively in the New Magnet Library, conceded to be the best detective tales ever written

CHAPTER II.

The Man in the Limelight

Nick Carter soon recovered from the second blow he had received. The entire episode in which he had figured so sensationally had occupied only a quarter of an hour. Reviving in the chilly air of the tunnel, and feeling the jagged points of the broken stones on which he was lying, Nick quickly realized where he was and recalled all that had occurred.

"Knocked out by the rascal," he growled to himself. "All owing to that unfortunate stumble, just as I had him well in hand. It was a close call for both by Jove,—and H'm! I wonder how long I've been down and out?"

Intently listening, again eager to renew the pursuit, Nick now could hear no sound of the unknown ruffian. It was obvious that he had escaped for a time at least and that it would be folly to attempt to track him in the gloom of the tunnell.

Nearly a hundred yards south a yellowish glow from above was cast upon the rails and roadbed which Nick knew must come from the opening into which he had leaped, and from the searchlight he had directed Grady to obtain from the automobile.

Before retracing his steps, he fished out his flash lamp and carefully searched the ground over which he had battled so fiercely with the ruffian, hoping to find something that would give him a clew to the man's identity. He could find only one thing, however. Near one of the rails he discovered a boot heel, slightly worn down on the outer edge, and which looked as if recently torn from a boot, the surface of the inner lift being clean and fresh while several nails protruding from it were quite bright.

"Not long off," thought Nick, while he examined it with his lamp. "The odds are a hundred to one it was wrenched from the rascal's boot during the struggle, for pedestrians through here are few and far between. It may enable me to trace him, sooner or later."

Finding nothing more, Nick thrust the heel into his pocket and hastened back to the opening, upon approaching which he heard Grady shouting his name. Glad that he was in shape to answer him, despite that he had lost his man, he quickly responded:

"Hello up there! Quite your shouting, Grady, or you'll wake the dead."

"Dead, is it?" Grady answered, in tones of relief. "Faith, it's more than alive we thought you, sir, since the express ran in. I was just coming down there to look for what's left of you."

"There's enough left for me to ascend anything on which you could have come down," replied Nick, as he came into the glow from the searchlight, which was held by one hand of the crowd now gathered around the opening.

"Bedad, that's only a rope, sir, which the gent had in his gasoline horse."

"Shy one end down here, then, and hang onto the other."

"Here's at you, Mr. Carter."

Nick caught the line as it fell, while the other end was quickly seized by several observers eager to lend a hand to aid the famous detective. To clamber up the walls and reach the street required only a few moments.

"Holy smoke!" Grady exclaimed, now seeing that Nick was hatless, and that one cheek was stained with blood, trickling down from a slight scalp wound inflicted by the rock with which he had been struck.

"It's wounded you are Mr. Carter, and——"

"Oh, it's nothing serious," Nick interrupted drawing out his handkerchief to wipe his face. "I stumbled and struck my head while fighting with the rascal."

"You caught him then?"

"Yes, but lost him when the train passed us."

"Sure, that's bad."

"How long were we down there?"

"Not more'n ten minutes, sir."

"Then he may not yet have left the tunnel," said Nick. "Send word to Grand Central at once, Grady, and then notify the Sixty-seventh Street station. Have reserves called out and every exit from the tunnel closely watched. We may land the rascal."

"What's he wanted for, sir?"

"He killed a man in Sixty-fourth Street, I think."

"The devil you say!"

"Look lively, Grady, and do what I have instructed," Nick curtly added. "Meantime, I'll return to the scene of the crime. It was committed scarce an hour ago."

"If it will be of any aid, Mr. Carter my car is at your service."

Nick turned to the speaker, the owner of the automobile, and beheld a tall, splendidly built man of about thirty-five years, with a decidedly attractive face the more striking because of its forceful expression and the culture and strength of character it denoted. He bowed while he spoke, with a wave of his hand toward the car, and Nick promptly accepted the offer.

"Thank you," he replied. "I shall use it gladly."

He remained only to give a few instructions to a second policeman, who at that moment appeared on the scene; then hurriedly entered the touring car with its owner, taking a seat beside him in the tonneau.

"To Sixty-fourth Street, chauffeur, nearly over to Park Avenue," he directed, addressing the man at the wheel.

"Let her go at once, Peters."

"Yes, my man, and regardless of the speed limit," added Nick. "This is very kind of you, Mr.——"

"My name is Fenno, Mr. Carter—Percival Fenno."

Nick turned and regarded the speaker with greater interest.

"Indeed!" he exclaimed; then quickly offered his hand. "You're the man, I take it, who is making so splendid a fight against the United Transit merger, as it is called."

"I have that—well, I may say, that distinction," Fenno admitted, with a faint smile.

"Call it that honor rather," Nick heartily replied. "You are doing a good work one that the community ought to appreciate. The trouble is, however that the community knows apparently little about such far-reaching combinations, or the results of them, until they begin to suffer the evil effect."

"That is very true, Mr. Carter."

"I wish you entire success in this work."

"Thank you very much," Fenno replied, with a quick display of appreciation. "I am both gratified and encouraged by the approval of men of your acumen and discernment."

Superstitions About Fowls.

Diviners of East Africa perform divination by killing a fowl and sprinkling its blood on or near the threshold, "a practice most frequently observed when a chief has fallen seriously ill." It is a far cry from Uganda to the shores of Scotland, but here is an incident that runs the Uganda custom close enough, surely. In a certain place which does not consider itself less enlightened than similar communities of its size a friend was one day suddenly asked by a woman, a neighbor (whose son, a young lad, had fallen down in a fit), to run for a doctor. This he promptly did, and, returning before the arrival of the doctor, was pleased to see the lad had come to in the interval, and said so to the mother. "Yes," she replied, "but what a pity we hadn't a live cock to bury in the garden." Not only so, but my friend, on expressing his surprise to another party, was shown a garden quite close where a live fowl had been buried on a precisely similar occasion, thus testifying to a more general belief in the efficacy of such a charm than could be imagined.—London Tit-Bits.

Meant Well, But—

Viscount French of Ypres often tells an amusing story about a French review that he attended a good many years ago.

General French, as he then was, attended the men's dinner in camp one day, and as he puffed on his cigar he noticed that 300 young Frenchmen had nothing to smoke whatever.

Accordingly he sent to his tent for three boxes of Havanas, and these were quickly distributed among the troops, a rare treat truly. To show their gratitude the soldiers without consulting their sergeants lined up in two files, marched toward the English general, and, raising their right hands to their caps and holding their lighted cigars in their left hands, they shouted as with one voice:

"Vive la Russe!"

They had mistaken the uniform.

The Price of Eloquence.

The auctioneer held up a battered fiddle.

"What am I offered for this antique violin?" he pathetically inquired. "Look it over. See the blurred finger marks of remorseless time. Note the stains of the hurrying years. To the merry notes of this fine old instrument the brocaded dames of fair France may have danced the minuet in glittering Versailles. Perhaps the vestal virgins marched to its stirring rhythms in the feasts of Lupercalia. Ha! It bears an abrasion—perhaps a touch of fire. Why, this may have been the very fiddle on which Nero played when Rome burned."

"Thirty cents," said a red nosed man in the front row.

"It's yours," cried the auctioneer cheerfully. "What next?"

Death Watches In England.

Prisoners under sentence of death are never left alone for a moment. In England two warders are in attendance both day and night to prevent the possibility of suicide or escape. Three clear Sundays of life are allowed to the murderer after his sentence. Usually he is hanged upon the Tuesday after the third Sunday. Some visitors are allowed, but not even the most intimate relatives may kiss, embrace or even take the hand of the prisoner. During the awful three weeks of waiting the condemned man may choose any food within reason, may smoke and may read what he likes. Just before execution he may have a drink of brandy. A man about to be hanged is the only person who can hear his own burial service read.—London Express.

HEROIC MAJOR DECORATED.

Surrounded by Germans on Dead Man Hill, Fights His Way Back.

The Battle of Verdun has been prolific of heroic deeds. One of the most dramatic episodes of the fighting round Dead Man Hill occurred to the west of that position, where a French regiment was face to face with a Pomeranian brigade. During the hottest moment a major commanding the Third Battalion of a French regiment disappeared. His men, who worshipped him, became very anxious. It was at first reported that he was killed and then that he was a prisoner.

Suddenly they heard a well-known voice shouting, "Bravo, boys! Give them beans!" and the major came into view, his uniform in shreds, his face covered with blood, and his left arm hanging limp. He had been cut off with a handful of men, and at their head fought his way through the enemy ranks until he was sent to the ground with a terrible blow from a rifle butt, which smashed his left shoulder.

Dragging himself on his hands and knees for a mile, he had eventually rejoined his men, and his first thought was to lead them once more into action. The French were successful in driving the Germans back, but the gallant major received a second dangerous wound, in the chest, and had to be taken to the rear. So excruciating was the pain he suffered while being operated on that to avoid groaning he sang the "Marseillaise" at the top of his voice. A few minutes later the general commanding his unit arrived at the hospital and taking the Cross of the Legion of Honor from his own uniform pinned it on the breast of the brave officer.

MUNITION MAKERS SUFFER.

Handling of Explosives Gives Rise to Diseases.

The high pressure under which the production of munitions has had to be performed has brought with it destructive maladies. These are particularly noticeable in connection with the manufacture of high explosives. Thus in handling trinitrotolnol after a prolonged period one becomes drowsy, suffers from frontal headache, loss of appetite, and may even become afflicted with a distinctive eczema. Unless the operative takes a rest in time jaundice may supervene, with decided danger to life. In a few instances death has been directly traced to the handling of the explosive.

Tetryl throws off a slight dust, which unless timely precautions are taken leads to troublesome eczema. Another medium inimical to health is the varnish with which the wings and bodies of aeroplanes are treated. Tetra-chlorethane enters largely into the preparation of this varnish, and this throws off a noxious vapor which produces drowsiness and loss of appetite and if work is persisted in ultimately jaundice, liver complications and coma. In this case an alternative varnish has been discovered which is free from the evil constituents; but it has not come into general use for the simple reason that there are insufficient supplies of the necessary ingredients to meet demands.

Warriors From Sea-Girt Isles.

Islanders have always been great fighters, and they are so to-day.

Every able-bodied man in the island of Lewis is serving either in the army or the navy. Skye sent over a thousand soldiers to fight in the ranks at Waterloo, and though not so many as this are serving in the present war, the reason is to be found, not in any falling off in patriotism on the part of the islanders, but in the fact that the population has decreased largely during the past century.

In the Channel Islands, where by the way conscription has been the law of the land from time immemorial, the ranks of the Royal Guernsey Militia has been so depleted by direct enlistments into the regular army that it has been found necessary to call to the colors all fit men up to the age of sixty for home defense service.

Within a few weeks of war being declared the male population of the Fijian Islands volunteered for service down to practically the last man, and many hundreds of them are now fighting side by side with our Tommies. The same thing occurred, too, in connection with Atiu, a tiny coral island in the remote Hervey Archipelago, whence two hundred men volunteered—all the available males below the age of forty.

From Rarotongo many native recruits paid their own passages to New Zealand in order to enlist. At Mitiaro, another tiny island in the Pacific, annexed to New Zealand, thirty able-bodied natives offered themselves for enlistment out of a total population numbering 208.

In fact, as Kipling has well said:

"Never was isle so little,
Never was sea so lone,
But over the scud and the palm-trees
The English flag has flown."

And the islanders have trusted in the protection of that flag. And now they are fighting for it.

Conscription If Necessary.

Labor members of the Commonwealth House of Representatives, speaking at Camden, Australia, said if the struggle became a prolonged one the Federal Parliament would go to the furthest limits of conscription to give effect to the "last man—last shilling" doctrine.

One English Commoner Affected.

The withdrawal of the Order of the Black Eagle from British holders, which the Kaiser is said to contemplate, will affect only one Englishman not of Royal blood—Sir Frank Lascelles, formerly British Ambassador at Berlin.

PRISONERS IN GERMANY STARVE

Civilians at Ruheleben Get Only Half Rations.

BRITAIN PLANS REPRISALS

Lord Robert Cecil in British Commons Says That if Germany Does Not Consent to Exchange Prisoners She Cannot Feed Plans for Retaliation Will Be Considered

LORD ROBERT CECIL, Parliamentary Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs, told the House of Commons a few days ago that the British Government had received information to the effect that British civilian prisoners interned at Ruheleben were now being supplied with less than half the requisite amount of food. Dr. Kiyor, attached to the American Embassy at Berlin, learned that the German Government had reduced the rations of the interned civilians, Lord Robert said, and the American Ambassador at Berlin gave the information to the British Government.

The reduction of rations was made, Lord Robert said, notwithstanding the fact that the Germans had been storing up money, amounting to between 60,000 and 200,000 marks, which should be spent for food. The British Government has protested against this action through the American Embassy, pointing out that if Germany could not feed the prisoners she should release them. Great Britain also recalled her offer to release or exchange civilians over 50 or even 45 years, if unfit for military service, and proposed that all British civilians at Ruheleben should be released in exchange for a similar number of German civilians in England.

LORD ROBERT CECIL.

Lord Robert declared that if the Germans did not accept this offer the British Government would be compelled to consider what course to adopt in regard to the rations of German civilians held prisoners in England.

TABS IN THE ARMY.

Snipers Wear Tabs of Lincoln Green.

"Tab-itis" has broken out in the British army; the number of these privileged to wear what are officially known as gorget patches has been increased. Formerly there was but one class of tab-wearers. They wore red tabs and, in the case of the more conspicuously magnificent, lovely gold oak leaves on the peaks of their staff forage camps. They still wear them, and still remain the greatest of created beings, but their privileges have been to some extent encoached upon. Persons holding various technical and administrative offices, persons, in short, who are not quite sure of themselves, and hover on the fringe of good staff society, have been decorated with modest emblems becoming their station in life.

The new tabs are comparatively sober ones, dark blue and green. Of blues there is a very large number, and the wearers are genially described as, among others, doctors, horsedoctors, policemen, and marine storedealers or old clothes men. Snipers, as befits those who should shoot as Robin Hood, wear tabs of Lincoln green. So do bombers, and so does the poor musketry officer who used to cut a gallant figure in red. So does the inspector of catering, whose prosaic-sounding office rather brings down the average of green splendor. It should be added that both blues and greens have corresponding bands round their caps. The blues have the added distinction of wearing on their tabs that which you would call a red cord if you did not know that it ought to be called crimson gimp.—Tit-Bits.

A BOER WAR HERO.

General Mahon Relieved Mafeking by Clever Cavalry Dash.

Lieut.-General Sir Bryan Mahon, D.S.O., commander of the British forces in the Balkans, is the dashing cavalry officer who led the flying column to the relief of Mafeking in 1900. Sir Bryan was in Egypt when the South African War broke out, and the story goes that when he received a telegram to transfer himself to South Africa as quickly as possible he drove five camels to death in his feverish rush across the desert.

The story of how that flying column of 900 mounted men, 100 picked infantry, four guns, two pom-poms, and sixteen days' provisions fought its way to Mafeking forms one of the most thrilling stories of the Boer campaign. It was during his march to raise the siege of Mafeking that, having no cipher and wishing to send Baden-Powell a message concerning his force, Mahon wrote this enigma: "Our numbers are the Naval and Military Club multiplied by 10 (94 Piccadilly) x 10—940); our guns the number of sons in the Ward family (six); our supplies the O. C. 9th Lancers (little)."

Previous to departing for South Africa, Sir Richard Wingate paid a magnificent tribute to Sir Bryan in a despatch to Lord Kitchener, concerning his (Sir Bryan's) services in the Soudan campaign. "I cannot," he wrote, "speak in sufficiently strong terms of the excellence of the services performed by this officer. His personal disregard for danger, intrepid scouting, and clever handling of men all fit him for high command."

Sir Bryan is a Galway man, and learnt his soldiering with the 8th Hussars, ultimately joining the 12th Lancers, of which in 1900 he became lieutenant-colonel, reaching his present rank three years ago. It is interesting to note that he is a cousin of Sir Edward Carson, and, like Baden-Powell, loves polo, pig-sticking, and steeplechasing.

Campaigning in Africa.

We campaign in Wonderland (writes Reuter's special correspondent with General Smuts' force in East Africa), a land of surprising beauty, deep, dark forests, rushing, snow-cooled torrents radiating from the mountainous mass that stands upon the marshes of British and German East Africa.

Orchids of rare brilliancy of color, gigantic Batbabs, entanglements of tropical tendrils, hot-house heat, roads tunnelled through forests, rough and rustic bridges spanning the gorges, and over all the brooding spirit of "the man and the woman" Kilima Njaro.

The natives worship the mountain as a fetish. It is seldom to be seen in this misty weather. Only at sunrise and at sunset are the glissaded walls of the mighty crater, the "womb of the world, from which man and woman were cast forth," visible. Then for a moment gilded by the eastern rays or crimson in the western glow, the splendor of the unscalable heights is unveiled for the adoration of the faithful.

But this tropical terrain is as poisonous as it is beautiful. The lion and the leopard, to say nothing of the lizard, keep its fastnesses.

A scared motor lorry driver reported recently that two "rhinos" had attempted to charge his lorry.

"This place," complained a Cockney chauffeur, "is a blooming zoo; and they don't lock the animals up at night."

Coal in Perambulators.

Perambulator coal parades are one of the sights of Westminster just now. Elegant flats and mean streets jostle one another in this neighborhood, and the problem of the household coal supply has to be met alike by rich and poor. Storage is the main difficulty. In many of the highly rented flats there is a conspicuous absence of "cellarage." At the rare and welcome cry of "Co—al" people of all classes hurry out of their houses with pails, foot baths, string bags, scuttles, and anything else they can get, mob the coalman, and clear his stock. When the coal-cart fails to appear—which is more often than not—there are processions of perambulators and go-carts to the small shops (mostly greengrocers') in the neighborhood and the coal is bought up speedily in small quantities and wheeled or carried away. Poor people in Westminster have been buying it by the pound. It is not at all unusual to see well-dressed women coal-hunting around the mean streets. The treasure once discovered, they convey it home in portmanteaus, dress-baskets, and anything else handy. One woman was seen the other day carrying her "loot" home in a champagne-cooler and another conveyed hers in a motor-car.

Village Toy Industry.

Toy making, as a village industry, is making steady and satisfactory progress in Bedfordshire. An association has been formed to encourage the work and prevent the industry slipping back to German hands after the war. They have now got it established firmly on a sound business basis in thirteen villages. The work is mostly done by women.

Famous Monkey Dead.

"George" the well-known multi-colored mandril at the London Zoological Gardens, died recently at the venerable age of 40. This is a remarkable age for a captive monkey. Concerning "George's" strength, it has been said it took ten men to hold him down, but a Zoological Gardens official doubted whether even ten men would have dared the attempt.

GRAFTERS ARE IN DANGER OF DEATH

Russia Roused by Crimes of Gen. Soukhomlinoff.

BEAUTIFUL WIFE INVOLVED

Ex-War Minister Proves to Have Been the Tool of an Unscrupulous Gang of Grafters Who Through His Young Wife Made Use of His Office to Exact Bribes

THE report of the Commission which investigated the charges against the former War Minister, General Soukhomlinoff, is creating tremendous excitement in Russia. A number of peasants' delegations from the Provinces have arrived at Petrograd to demand the execution of the ex-Minister and his wife. This demand is supported by the labor unions and almost all political organizations.

The Commission appointed for the investigation by the Imperial Council consisted of the Senators Sogorowiski and Kusmin and Col. Nosowithc, the prosecuting officer of the Military Court of Moscow, and has been at work four months.

The Commission states that General Soukhominlinoff received enormous bribes from army contractors. He had organized a regular and extensive system of graft. His principal aides were Ivan Hoshkiewitch, an engineer, and relative of his wife, a married couple by the name of Aktschler, a certain Maxim Wober, a Mrs. Anna Aurich, and the notorious

GENERAL SOUKHOMLINOFF.

Rzewski, whose intimate relations with former Minister of the Interior Chwostow caused the downfall of the latter. Rzewsku has made a partial confession.

The statements made my Rzewski have also connected Gen. Soukhomlinoff with the activities of Lieutenant-Colonel Mjassopedow, who was was executed some time ago for treason. The Commission charges the ex-Minister with high treason, and states that he drove the country unprepared into war, so as to be able to graft on a larger scale than before.

The court clique dominated by the monk Rasputin is doing its utmost to save the indicted General, but he will probably have to pay the penalty for his crimes, because the power and influence of his friends has diminished greatly since the details of the incredible scandal became known.

General Soukhomlinoff was honest, it is believed, until he became commander of the garrison of Kieff. There he made the acquaintance of a number of doubtful characters who gained great influence over him. These criminals and conspirators introduced him to the beautiful woman who is now his wife and who, it is alleged, has caused his downfall.

After his marriage his wife obtained large army contracts for her friends and shared the profits with them. When he was appointed War Minister the clique followed him to Petrograd and reaped a golden harvest. Through extravagant living he got deeply into debt and finally started to graft himself.

Colonel Massojedoi, who has been executed for treason, was an intimate friend of the Soukhomlinoffs.

When the Colonel was arrested, the police found letters in his possession which left no doubt that the wife of the War Minister was also guilty of treason. At that time all Russia demanded the execution of the woman, but Rasputin and the former Prime Minister, Goremykin, protected her and she was only banished to southern Russia. Within three months she returned to Petrograd to resume her interrupted grafting operations with the aid of her husband.

A Famous Composer.

It is to Dr. Cummings, the famous composer, who died a few days ago, that we owe what is probably the most popular of all Christmas hymn-tunes—that to which Wesley's "Hark! the Herald Angels" is sung wherever the English language is spoken. It was not, of course, his own composition, but an adaptation of a chorus in a cantata written by Mendelssohn for a festival held in Leipzig in 1849 to celebrate the 400th anniversary of the invention of the art of printing.

GRAVITY OVERCOME.

Objects Dropped Deviate Toward the North.

Along the southern edge of the Himalaya Mountains a curious natural phenomenon has been noticed by engineers. The plumb line which they use, instead of falling vertically and forming two right-angles with the surface of the ground, is deflected nearly five degrees to the north.

The explanation which has been advanced for this queer freak of gravity is that the deflection is due to the influence of the mountains. The amount of attraction masses exert for each other is in direct proportion to the relative weights of equally sized portions of each body, and in this case the weight of a cubic foot of the earth below the plumb line is much less than the weight of a cubic foot of rock from the mountains. It is probable that at one time all of Northern Hindustan south of the Himalayas was an immense depression, and that through the ages it has been filled up by alluvial silt washed down from the mountains. This loose silt, being under no such pressure as the billions of tons of solid rock in the mountain ranges, has a much smaller density, and accordingly a much lighter gravity "pull" than exercised by the huge mass of the Himalaya range.

It is conceivable that in this place if a person stands "erect" he really leans a little towards the south to make up for the "pull" of the northern range, while, theoretically, it is really harder for him to walk away from the mountains than towards them. Objects, of course, do not fall directly to earth, but deviate a little to the north.—John P. Caldwell, in Technical World.

Dried Flowers.

Florists are anxious to obtain British dried flowers to take the place of the German products.

An enormous trade has been done for many seasons past in beech branches and oak-leaves, which are bought largely by the florists to help them through the winter months when flowers are scarce.

"Speaking just for my own firm," said a well-known Court florist, "I am open to place a fairly big order for dyed beech branches if any are to be had at anything like the old German prices."

These beech branches, sterilised, bleached, and dyed in brilliant autumnal colors in the German flower factories, are, he explained a favorite winter foliage in great demand with chrysanthemums and other late-flowering plants. Although the industry, so far as the supplies used in this country are concerned, has been entirely a Continental one, fully three-quarters of the total supplies coming from Germany and Austria, there is no reason why British enterprise should not take it in hand. The capital required is small, and the work could be done well by women.

The industry is a profitable one. The British demands alone were sufficient before the war to justify the presence of six or eight German travelers, who put up at the big hotels, and succeeded in selling hundreds of tons of dried products.

Riled the Scots.

At a rest camp "somewhere in France" the men of a certain famous Scotch regiment were having an impromptu concert.

Presently there drifted into the tent, lured there by the sound of revelry, a sturdy cockney camp cook. For some time he listened appreciatively to the music; then he suggested that he could oblige with a Scottish song. He was conducted promptly to the paltform.

Great was the applause when the pianist, after a whispered consultation, commenced to play a well known tune. Advancing to the edge of the "stage," the camp cook, with an inimitable cockney accent, sang:

"Scots wha hae on porridge fed,
Scots wha's hair is awfu' red,
Scots wha suffer frae swelled head—
Gang and wash yer knees!"

He made his escape in good time, and so far has not been caught. But a whole regiment of kilties, mad with rage, are still on his trail.—London Answers.

Giant and Dwarf Honey Bees.

In some of the East Indian Islands and on the mainland of Hindustan are to be found the smallest species of honey bees in the world. These dwarf honey collectors are known to entomologists as Apis florea. Their honeycombs are no longer than a child's hand and the cells are about the size of a small pin head. This honey is excellent, as is the wax. The little creatures build the comb on the branch of a low tree, and as they have not to provide for winter they work all the year through, raising broods like themselves.

In the same land there is a species of giant bees, Apis dorsata, as large as a field cricket. These monsters of the bee world build honeycombs that are from six to seven feet in length, four or more in width, and weigh from 300 to 400 pounds each.

Ancient Portent Solved.

The "Woe Water" at Croydon, Surrey, otherwise known as the Bourne Flow, is for the fifth successive year running down the Caterham Valley between Whyteleafe and Purley. The history of these visitations, extending over 600 years, gives an average interval of about five years between them. In ancient days the Flow was regarded as a mysterious portent of "dearth or pestilence, or great battle," to quote a chronicler of 1473. The prosaic explanation is the flooding of underground water channels.

HAGGARD TALKS OF AFTER THE WAR

Author and Publicist Is Now in Canada.

AN EXPERT ON AGRICULTURE

Sir H. Rider Haggard Has Come to Be Recognised as an Authority on Matters Pertaining to the Back-to-the-Land Movement —Wants Sound Policy of Emigration.

RIDER HAGGARD, author of "She," "Jess," "Allan Quatermain," and other African classics, and before whose name belongs a "Sir" and an "H", is now in Ottawa, there to discuss with members of the Canadian Government how best after the war is over British soldiers may be brought back to the land, how best the Empire may become a nation of farmers. The land, as he says, is the nurse of nations: the cities are their devourer. Rider Haggard has been assured of a sympathetic audience. He will find members of the Canadian Government ready to co-operate with him fully, because Canada wants men on her land as much as British soldiers want land. There is a mutual necessity, and what applies to Canada applies also to Australia and South Africa, countries like Canada, with immense natural resources, and needing only settlers of the proper kind to develop them. Sir H. Rider Haggard will see all of the British Dominions before he goes home, and will report upon what each has to offer.

In the past year our distinguished visitor has come to be recognized as the greatest popular authority upon agriculture in the British Empire.

SIR H. RIDER HAGGARD.

He began his career with the ambition to become a lawyer. He was then in Africa, in the civil service, and his destiny was accidentally decided one night when he began to criticize some novels. A friend said that he could not write one himself. He had no idea, probably, that he could, but in order to refute his friend he sat down and produced "She." In its day this story had quite the vogue of "Trilby" later on. Haggard followed the vein, and in a few years had turned out a creditable number of stories of adventure, and had made of Allan Quatermain a character who might almost be compared with "Sherlock Holmes" and "Raffles" as popular favorites. His success with his novels obliterated his visions of fame as a lawyer, and it was not long before he was able to adopt the vocation he really desired, namely, that of gentleman farmer. For some years past he has been an experimental farmer, and has made a deep study of agricultural problems. He has written convincingly on the subject. He has been on Royal commissions. Now he comes to Canada, his object being to discuss what arrangements can be made by this country for welcoming to the soil the British soldiers who will want to become farmers or ranchers at the end of the war.

In the course of an interview he gave some notion of his mission. He did not get down to details, for he can decide nothing without consultation with the Dominion authorities, and it seems that he has no cut-and-dried scheme. He merely speaks of the need of a sound policy of emigration, and the absolute necessity of the British Empire becoming an Empire of farmers. As he says, it is not so much wealth that matters in great world crises, but "men, women, families, and homes that are happy even if they are more or less humble." He contends that the nation that is not a nation of farmers, or that has not behind it the solid support of men who are developing the land, cannot endure. Rome declined when she gathered her best into the cities. In England for generations the tendency has been for men bred in the country to go to the cities. The tendency is an unhealthy one from an Imperial point of view. After the war it must be changed.

£200,000 a Year Thrown Away.

A remarkable but little-known achievement on the part of Sir Hiram was his solving of the problem of the incandescent electric light, an invention alone which made the carbon filament possible. But the American patents were over-ruled and the European patents were allowed to lapse, resulting in £200,000 a year in royalties being thrown away

COST OF THE WAR.

It is Double That of Any War Recorded in History.

"If the war lasts three years the losses will reach a total unheard of in the past. They will amount to 100 or 120 billions."

This is the conclusion reached by Jean Finot, the noted economist who, writing in the Revue, says further:

According to the calculations of economists and statisticians, armed conflicts from the time of Napoleon I. to our day, all added together, have not cost one-half the sums absorbed by the present war. The Napoleonic wars properly so-called, which are considered the most sanguinary in the history of past wars, cost only about fifteen billion dollars. They lasted 20 years. The Crimean War cost the nations engaging in it about eleven or twelve billions. The Civil War in America did not cost more than seven billion dollars or seven billion six hundred million. The war between Prussia and Austria in 1866 necessitated an expenditure of only five hundred million dollars.

According to the estimate of M. Matheu-Bodet, Minister of Finance in 1874, the War of 1870 cost France the total sum of $2,499,000,000. In the figure are included the losses to State, to the departments, the communes, and individuals. The cost of caring for German troops after the conclusion of peace and before the complete evacuation, amounting to $13,600,000, is also included.

An English statistician puts the direct expenses of all belligerents from Napoleon I. to the war of 1914 at from thirty-six billion to forty billion dollars.

Considering only the allied armies in the present war it may be noted that the number of combatants on our side now amounts to about fourteen million. If we admit an average daily expenditure of $4 a day for each soldier, including ammunition, we will have a total of $1,620,000,000 a month, or about twenty billion dollars a year.

For France alone the budget amounts to $6,193,200,000 yearly, according to M. Aimond, who recently made a report to the French Senate, showing the following credits since August 1, 1914:

Last 5 mhs of 1914	$1,317,886,850
Year 1915	4,482,319,702
First half of 1916	3,006,505,870
Total since war began	$8,897,712,422

HAS STAYING POWER.

New Governor-General Has Qualities Which Fit Him for Office.

The appointment as Governor-General of the Duke of Devonshire came as a great surprise to Londoners, his name having never been mentioned in the numerous speculations. The London press generally support the comments of Sir George Foster, that the Duke of Devonshire will bring to this high office the prestige of this noted family, and the qualities and experience so fitting to him for taking up this work.

The Cavendish type, says the Pall Mall Gazette, is not one of exuberant brilliance, but it is unmatched in staying power, and in its balance of judgment and discretion.

The newspaper, Canada, speaking on behalf of the Canadian community in England, thinks the choice a happy one, as the house of Cavendish possesses splendid traditions in the public service, adding that the Duke will find himself surrounded with an atmosphere of friendliness and good-will at Ottawa.

In appearance the Duke of Devonshire has the family features, including the sleepy-looking eyes of his uncle, the late Duke, which were believed to be caused by mental activity as in the case of the present Duke.

The Governor-General-elect has always taken a keen interest in agricultural life, both as regards stock-raising and pastoral farming. Both the Duke and Duchess have pleasing personalities. The later is Mistress of the Robes in the Queen's Household, and as the daughter of Lord Lansdowne, made the acquaintance of Canada in her youth.

The Maker of the Turbine.

To Sir Charles Parsons, a member of the committee to inquire into the Royal Flying Corps, is due the credit of developing the turbine which drives liners and dreadnoughts.

The first turbine—a boat called the Turbine—appeared at Spithead in the Jubilee Naval Review, and astonished the Admiralty by its speed; but it was only after the Viper, and then the Cobra, had been built by Sir Charles, that the turbine was recognized as the propeller of the future, being at least twenty per cent. more efficient than the fastest ship driven by a quadruple-expansion engine.

Sir Charles' pet idea is at present to find a new source of power. He foresees the time when coal and mineral oil will be exhausted, or available in too small quantities to cope with the needs of the world. Where is our power plant to find its driving force?

This son of a peer says: "From mother earth." It is a well-known fact that the crust of the earth grows hotter and hotter the deeper one goes. The temperature of a coal-mine is greatly in excess of surface heat. Sir Charles considers that, if we would but dig deep enough we should come to an inexhaustible supply of heat, the rim of the earth's central glow.

He thinks we should have to dig ten miles deep! That is a big undertaking, and would tax the resources of our greatest engineers. But Sir Charles says it is feasible, and he ought to know.

Which of the nations will be the first to start the job?—London Answers.

MILITARY MATTERS AT BARRIEFIELD HEIGHTS

SIX BROTHERS IN KHAKI.

Sergt. G. F. Toone, 93rd Battalion, will soon go overseas, where he will make a total of six brothers of the one family all in uniform and at the front. This splendid record was only made after a great deal of personal sacrifice on the part of the 93rd sergeant. He was conducting three grocery stores in Peterboro, but the call to duty made him throw up everything to get into uniform. He sold out two of his stores, and keeping only one at 639 George Street, Peterboro, he enlisted under Lieut.-Col. G. T. Johnston in the 93rd Battalion, joining that wonderful organization and body of men that he has brought together. His business experience enabled Sergt. Toone to be chosen for the orderly room, where he is now very busily engaged in keeping the records of the unit.

The Toone family came originally from Kinckley, Leicestershire England, and Alfred, William, Sydney, Arthur and Frank are now at the front with some of the Imperial regiments.

It is worthy of note that Mrs Toone has three brothers also in uniform.

LIEUT. McGIE COMMANDS.

The machine gun section of the 155th Battalion has been slightly handicapped by the fact that Lieut. McGie, commanding officer, has been almost in constant attendance at the Machine Gun School. Lieut. Sherman Young, of the same unit, who was a prisoner of war in Germany for six months after the battle of Langemarck, is still on the sick list, will take over his duties on his return. In the meantime the school is being conducted by Lieut. McGie.

MEN WITH THE BIG PULL.

Hats off to the members of the championship tug-of-war team of the 109th Battalion. The team is now in possession of the silver cup awarded for the event, and are ready to hold the cup against all comers. J. Leckey is the captain of the team, and the other members are Lieut. A. Wood. Sergt. W. Mintz, Sergt. R. O'Brien, Lance-Corpl. N. J. Babcock, Lance-Corpl. Hughes, Lance-Corpl. G. Logan, Pte. W. A. Logan, Pte. J. Murray.

NOTES.

Lieut. Nurse, 155th Battalion, is in the General Hospital recovering from a sore neck. Lieut. Nurse played O.H.A. hockey for Belleville last year when "we beat them."

N.C.O.'s will not be allowed to carry bayonets or side arms while walking out, according to an order issued by headquarters following the case reported on Thursday's issue of the Whig, where a civilian was stabbed by a soldier.

The 109th Battalion is under orders for overseas service, and is now being inspected by Col. T. D. R. Hemming, Camp Commandant, and the General Staff Officers. Lieut.-Col. J. J. H. Fee has made excellent progress with his unit, which has reached a very high standard of efficiency.

Lieut.-Col. M. K. Adams, commanding 155th Battalion, has received a cheque for $1,000, a half of the donation of $2,000 voted to the battalion by the County of Hastings Council. The County of Prince Edward also donated $1,000, which was received some time ago.

The 155th Battalion gave a concert in their big messing and recreation tent last night. The programme was in the capable hands of Captain Dodd, chaplain of the battalion.

COOP AND LENT'S CIRCUS WILL EXHIBIT AT BELLEVILLE

On Wednesday, July 19 at Belleville will be the Mecca for thousands of visitors from the surrounding country for the "Coop and Lent" All New United Monster Shows, will exhibit there on that date.

These exhibitions are completely new this year and no other organization that has ever been seen hereabouts covers so broad and comprehensive a field of up-to-date Circus diversion.

The large and varied performances naturally demand an arena of vast dimensions, utilizing three rings, two stages and a spacious hippodrome track and obviously the features to fittingly fill so extensive an area can only be those that are big in action and necessitating large numbers and groups of participants. There are oriental and European novelty acts of wonderful daring and skill and the equestrian acts far outshine anything hitherto presented together under canvas.

The racing contests evoke tumultuous enthusiasm and collectively the performance, the Menagerie, the Aviary and Field Museum, etc., are said to be unexcelled in originality, quality and quantity.

EUROPE COMES TO AMERICA IN "THE MADCAP"

Americans can't go to Europe this summer but the Universal has brought Europe to America in "The Madcap," a five-reel Universal Red Feather photoplay which will be presented for the first time locally at the Palace Theatre tonight, and Tuesday, matinee and night with Flora Parker De Haven in the principal feminine role.

One obtains glimpses of Normandy, and of Trohville, the famous bathing beach where all the world takes a dip and watches the pretty French girls in their one-piece bathing suits. Then the scene changes to Alencon where an annual fete is held with hundreds of French peasants and traveling performers, taking part.

Many explosive sets were constructed for "The Madcap," including the reproduction of the exterior of a famous old castle in Normandy with its huge medieval gate and towers. Another scene shows the interior of a theatre on the stage of which is reproduced a scene from the photoplay. Still another set shows a French country circus disporting for the peasants in a small town in Normandy, while another feature of the play is an aeroplane flight in a 120-horsepower machine which is made by Flora Parker De Haven, the star of the photoplay.

"The Madcap" was adapted by Lenora Ainsworth from the story by Geo. Gibbs and was produced in part at Univesity City, Cal., by William Dowlan, the Universal director. Vera Dora and Richard Sterling appear in support of Miss De Haven, who in private life is the wife of Carter De Haven, the famous vaudevillian who has renounced the variety stage to become a Universal star.

The 10th episode of the popular, Iron Claw, series is announced for exhibition at Griffin's Opera House tonight and Tuesday night, the title of this thrilling chapter is, "The Living Dead." The Laugh King, Billie Reeves also appears on the same program in the highly amusing farce comedy, Playing Horse, which will afford 15 minutes of clean wholesome laughter. Edwin August and Lillian Tucker appear in the World Film Corporation's production of Evidence, a unique and powerful 5-part filmplay, containing many remarkable situations and a convincing moral.

How Prisoners Help the Allies

If the Germans have moved men from the Western front to stem the Russian tide in the east we may be sure that General Joffre knows every regiment that has gone, and has it marked on his great map. One of the most valuable maps in the world is that which hangs in the French headquarters, located in a small village near Paris. It covers a wall, and on it is marked in colored chalk the position of every German regiment in the service. As the regiment moves, the indicators on the map are changed, so that at any given moment General Joffre and the generals under him can tell exactly what is facing them at any point. It is of the utmost importance that generals should have this information, and no doubt the enemy has just as accurate maps. Aeroplanes often can give the information as to the presence of large bodies of troops, and some observers are so skilful that they can calculate to a thousand or so the number of men in a square mile; but for the most part the details of these great war maps are compiled by private soldiers.

It is the prisoner who gives the information which to him may not seem important, but which may be extremely necessary to his captors. A soldier interviewed by the Paris correspondent of The Brooklyn Eagle says that the first thing done to a prisoner when he is brought in and it is desired to get information from him is to introduce him to the colonel's cook. If the soldier drinks, which he usually does, he is cheered with several bottles of beer or drinks of brandy or whatever he chooses. Thus in a mellow frame of mind he is brought before the colonel and questioned. Of course, the prisoner does not know anything about the future plans of his regiment, and is usually willing to talk about matters which he supposes can be of no particular importance. He will tell the number of his regiment, how long it has been at the front, and maybe even the general strength of the position.

Sometimes a prisoner will talk for no more reward than a kind word from a French officer, kind words being extremely rare in the life of a German soldier. Others will tell all they know for a cigar; others are so hungry that a square meal is sufficient to purchase their entire stock of information, while others again will talk for no other purpose than "getting square" with their own officers. Often it is not necessary to have the prisoners talk at all. The numerals on their coats and their identification papers tell the whole story. French experts can tell from a glance at a prisoner's coat what regiment he belongs to, how long he has been at the front, whence he came, and a score of other things that would have earned the approval of Sherlock Holmes.

The necessity of keeping the map at general headquarters up to date often leads to military activity that has no other object than the taking of a prisoner. If it is known or suspected that a regiment has moved it is necessary to find out what unit has taken its place. Aerial scouts cannot give this information. Prisoners are in demand, so a raid is made on the enemy's trenches, with no object of driving him out, but merely to get information. Here we have a reversal to the old military practice of taking prisoners in order that they may be ransomed. In this case the prize for the prisoner is paid not by himself or by his friends, but by the colonel of the regiment. Prices vary from a dollar to forty dollars, according to the necessity of getting the news. Normally a prisoner is worth nothing; he is, in fact, a nuisance. In general action a battalion has not men to spare to attend prisoners to the rear, and nobody ever gets a medal for his success in capturing prisoners in the course of an engagement.

In these scouting parties, however, it is different. It is live rather than dead Germans that are wanted; but when a live prisoner is not to be had prizes are often paid for a coat containing the number of the unit. On one occasion forty dollars was paid for a strip of collar bearing the regimental badge. It is not generally understood, perhaps, that in every army there are battalions and divisions counted better than others. One may have distinguished itself in brilliant assault; another in defence. Therefore, if it is found that there has been a shift among the enemy forces, and the best regiments are being massed at a given point, the inference is that something is about to happen there. Of course if the good battalions along a certain front are concentrated at a certain point it means that the inferior battalions are also concentrated somewhere else. How important this knowledge is from both the point of view of attack and defence it is not necessary to emphasize.

Indian Chiefs Loyal.

A traveller has just returned from a tour of a year in India and the Far East. He says: "India is as loyal to England as Germany to the Kaiser. India is absolutely undisturbed by the events of the present war. Her industries were never more active. India is pouring money into the British war treasury. The ruling chiefs are rallying to the support of the Empire in a way that leaves no doubt of their sincerity. Nearly 700 rulers of Indian States have offered their personal services and the entire resources of their States. It is useless for Germans to try to make it appear that India is on the verge of another mutiny. All the conditions are against it. The crime in all India for the year is not so great as that committed every years in big occidental cities.

CANADA'S POULTRY TRADE.

It Is the Best Organized of Our Live Stock Industries.

Poultry raising is, says an Ottawa bulletin, one of the best organized and most progressive of any of our live stock industries. Co-operation amongst farmers in marketing is improving the product and realising for them a higher price than they have hitherto been able to obtain. The reorganization of methods by the trade is providing against loss in handling, is assuring to the consumer a better article and establishing our export business upon a firm basis.

It is estimated that Canada and Cuba, during the last twenty years, received from the United States about three-fourths of all the eggs exported by that country during that period. This situation, however, has now changed. As against an importation in 1913 of 13,240,111 dozen, we imported in 1915 not more than 3,783,952 dozen. On the other hand, while in 1913 we exported only 147,149 dozen, in 1915 we exported 7,898,322 dozen. This constitutes a net increase in production, in two years, of at least 17,100,000 dozen. Practically all of these exports went to the United Kingdom.

Notwithstanding the surplus in Canada which these figures indicate, prices during March, April, and May have remained at an extraordinarily high level. For the first quarter of the year 1916 the price to producers, selling co-operatively, has been at least four cents in advance of the price received, for the same period, in 1915. For the month of March, it was at least five cents in advance, and for the month of April at least three cents in advance of last years' price for these respective months. The demand for eggs for local consumption, for storage purposes and for immediate export, has rarely been so keen as at the present moment. This situation is clearly reflected in the prices just quoted. Heavy domestic consumption, in the face of the high price for meats, partly explains this condition. Confidence in the export demand, on the part of the produce trade, confirms it from another direction. Notwithstanding increased production, the egg and poultry business in Canada is in a very strong position at the present time.

Hawthorne's Wife.

In one of the essays in his "Vanishing Roads" Richard Le Gallienne tells the following:

One wintry afternoon in Salem Hawthorne returned home earlier than usual from the custom house. With pale lips he said to his wife, "I am turned out of office," to which she—God bless her!—cheerily replied: "Very well! Now you can write your book," and immediately set about lighting his study fire and generally making things comfortable for his work. The book was "The Scarlet Letter."

Courtesy to One's Guests.

Mrs. Nurich was mingling with her guests, extending a greeting here and there. A meek little man caught her eye.

"It was so good of you to come," she exclaimed, grasping his hand. "I'm awfully glad to see you!"

"Thank you, ma'am," blushed the little man.

"You're Mr. de Cash, are you not?"

"No'm," confessed the victim; "I'm the collector for the laundry."—Pall Mall Gazette.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

AUTO SPEEDING

Belleville, July 10, 1916.

Dear Sir,—

Where are our police? Automobiles are making nothing but a race-track of Mill and Station streets every day and evenings. If there is a law regulating speed of autos and motor vehicles why is it not enforced as yesterday at 12.39 p.m. car number 44415 went up Mill street at the rate of from fifty to fifty-five miles an hour; if this practice of speeding is not stopped very soon there will be some serious accident happen, and furthermore they are not keeping within the law by keeping to the right and when autoists are summoned before the Police Magistrate why are the names not published as they are no better to have their names made public no more than a common drunk. So let the police get busy and take a walk up Mill and Station streets and watch for these speeders and they will catch several of them nearly every night, and is there any by-law limiting time of autos standing on Main or Front streets in front of business places as there is hardly a day but both sides of Front street is nothing but a stream of autos standing next to the curbs, causing other rigs to have to stand outside of them partly blocking the main thoroughfare. Sunday evening at 6.38 p.m. car number 9242, running at a rate of 25 to 30 miles an hour; car number 5644 running at a rate of 25 miles an hour, time 7.56 p.m. There will be more car numbers given if speeding is not stopped.

Yours, etc.,
Citizen.

The Quinte Summer School

respond to teaching of a man who is not wholly consecrated.

We must broaden our sympathy in order to discharge our duty. There must be complete consecreation, high ideals and developement of head and heart. The doors of knowledge are open, even for those who cannot attend college. Then some must fit in the smaller corners of life, and do the work others do not care to do. At a tea-meeting there are always those willing to do the showy work, but there is also the quiet dark corner for washing the dishes.

It is a girl's privilege and duty to demand of her friends the same purity of speech and conduct they demand of her. We should refuse to walk, drive or associate with men who have lost self-respect. Women of the highest type should not associate with men of the lowest type.

The speaker said as she thought of the Summer shools of previous years and of the wonderful results she felt it was worth while. We cannot spend a week together in this way without glorious results.

Prof. G. F. Stewart

Gave a truly wonderful, powerful and illuminative address on "God in human history" of which nothing but a full report could really do justice. So clearly did he show how the lives of history conveyed to Calvary, and radiate Calvary and how the wrongs of man has been over-ruled for the glory of God.

JOTTINGS OF THE SCHOOL

The women speakers fully sustained the reputation of the afir sex for gifts, graciousness and goodness. The school would freely accord them the ballot.

It is expected that the school will meet at Albert College next year.

It was not a printer's mistake that made it appear that Rev. W. P. Rogers tied for the championship in field sport with Rev. W. W. Jones. It was Raymond Rogers, (son of Rev. W. P.) who won. He promises to be even a better sport than his father.

The City Press was cordially thanked for its generous reports.

The fellowship and Sacramental service on Sunday morning will never be forgotten.

The Leagues of the Quinte Conference support 11 missionaries at home and abroad, including Geo. Denyes from Belleville district.

Dr. McLaughlin left early Monday morning for Hamilton Conference school.

Principal Baker, the Board of Management and Staff were heartily praised for their kindness.

Some students of former Summer schools are in khaki. At least one has made the supreme sacrifice.

Several prayer-meetings were held each morning in the rooms of the delegates, conducted by themselves.

The group-photo of the school is exceptionally fine. A cut of it will appear in "Youth and Service," the only distinctly young people's paper in Canada.

A Boys' Conference will be held next winter.

A booklet containing a historical sketch of the Quinte Summer School will be issued in a year or two. It has been held first at 12 O'clock Point, then Bobcaygeon, Chemong Park, Wellington and Albert College. All former students or delegates are requested to send items about any feature of these former schools, or any photos, etc., that might have value in the preparation and gathering of material to Rev. S. F. Dixon, Stirling, who has been appointed Historian.

Rev. Mr. Annis gave searching talk Sunday afternoon.

Prof. McLaughlin's sermon on Sunday night was a continuation of and a summing up of the week's Bible study, with a powerful plea for a virile life. This was followed by a covenant and consecration service with a definite objective.

Rev. S. C. Moore, B.A., B.D., Chairman of the Belleville district warmly commended the work of the school.

Six students wrote on the Teacher Training Course, and more will do so later as the result of the classes. The teachers ably led the respective classes, both in Teacher Training and in Mission Study.

Rev. S. T. Tucker, B.A., leader of the local service group at the school, preached in the Tabernacle on Sunday evening.

The officers for the ensuing year are:—Honorary Presidents, Rev. E. N. Baker, M.A., D.D., Albert College, and Rev. R. A. Whattam, Peterboro; President, Rev. Wm. Higgs, Milbrook. Ont.; 1st Vice-President, Christian Endeavor, Rev. W. H. Clarke, Cavan; 2nd Vice-President, Missionary, Rev. P. H. Neville, Bobcaygeon; 3rd Vice-President, Literary and Social, Miss Florence Hall, Wicklow; 4th Vice-President, Citizenship, Rev. S. A. Kemp, Enterprise; 5th Vice-President, Junior Epworth League, Mrs. W. P. Rogers, Port Perry; Business Manager, Rev. W. W. Jones, S.T.L., Foxboro; Assistant Business Manager, W. Claude Ives, Bowmanville.; Book Steward, Arthur Hall, Latta; Secretary, Rev. W. E. Honey, B.A., Wooler; Registrars, Miss Cassie M. The Boy of It.

A boy wanted a dog, and the rich uncle said:

"Well, Eddie, suppose I give you $200 for a dog. Would you spend that whole sum in one dog, or would you buy a pretty good dog and put the rest of the money in the savings bank?"

"Well, uncle," replied Eddie, "if you leave it to me I would buy 200 one dollar dogs."—Ladies' Home Journal.

Politely Managed.

"I met a footpad the other night."

"Did he demand your money or your life?"

"He wasn't that crude. He said he regretted that it would be necessary to put me to pecuniary inconvenience and possibly subject me to physical peril and that the exigencies of the moment were such that the laws customarily relied on for protection would have to be suspended. So I handed him my watch and pocketbook."

Trouble Enough.

"Telephone, sir."

"What is it?"

"Your wife wants you home at once."

"What's the trouble?"

"She has a tight gown, can't stoop, and the drip pan under the refrigerator is running over."

When the tastes are purified the morals are not easily corrupted.—Osborne.

To Use Small Oriental Rugs.

The abuse of the small oriental rug, no less an object of art than of utility, is an especially common mistake. By all logic any rug used for a floor covering should emphasize the function of the floor as a solid foundation under our feet. To do this it must honor and obey the lines of the floor, at least that part which it decorates. Yet time and again, where several small rugs are used for the carpeting of a room, we find them all thrown down on the bias, often at different angles. With none of the sides of a rug parallel to the bounding lines of the floor, we are made conscious of a new decorative idea, one built on top of and at cross purposes with the original one. Chairs, tables and other pieces of furniture must then be placed either to conform with the position of the rugs or with the structural arrangement of the room; both sets of lines they cannot follow. So, at best, we have a confusion of ideas, a room which seems to rest on an insecure foundation.—Agnes Rowe Fairman in Good Housekeeping.

Hissed His Own Play.

Baron de Frenilly, who figured prominently in France during the days of "the terror," must surely have been the only author who ever hissed his own play. This was entitled "Les Trois Tantes" and was produced at the Vaudeville theater, Paris.

"Before half of the first scene had been played I said to myself, 'Oh, but this is execrable!' The public was of the same opinion and, while my friends kept applauding, hissed with all its strength. I ended by heartily hissing myself, for the further the play progressed the more convinced I was that the people were right.

"On leaving the theater a friend who was not in the secret of the authorship said to me, 'What a piece of extravagance, what a wretched farce!' 'Detestable,' I replied, and whatever he said I went one better. 'It is said to be by Comte de Segur,' he continued. 'No,' rejoined I; 'it was written by me.' The poor man was fixed with amazement."—From "Baron de Frenilly's Reminiscences."

Riddle Making Epochs.

There have been epochs at which riddle making has been more especially in vogue, and such epochs would appear to occur at seasons of fresh intellectual awakening. Such an epoch there was at the first glimmering of new intellectual light in the second half of the seventeenth century. This was the age of Aldhelm, bishop of Sherborne, the first in the roll of Anglo-Latin poets. He left a considerable number of enigmas in Latin hexameters. Aldhelm died in 709. Before his time there was a collection of Latin riddles that bore the name of Symphosius. Of this work the date is unknown. We only know that Aldhelm used it, and we may infer that it was then a recent product. The riddles of Symphosius were uniform in shape, consisting each of three hexameter lines.—Cornhill Magazine.

Explosive Barrels.

Nitroglycerin, though an explosive, is rarely used by itself, being mixed with guncotton to form blasting gelatin or with a certain earth to make dynamite. Huge quantities of the explosive liquid are kept in casks, and the wood of these casks becomes so highly explosive through being soaked with the liquid that a kick will blow them to pieces. It is not safe to use the empty casks again for refilling them with the explosive, nor can they be used in any other way, even for firewood. There is only one thing, indeed, that can be done, and that is to explode the casks. They are placed on waste ground and usually exploded by means of a rifle bullet fired into them. Very little of the cask remains after the explosion.—London Standard.

Chicken Talk.

The chickens were gathered together in the farmyard conversing with one another, as is the custom among all self respecting chickens who have been brought up by a careful and judicious mother hen.

"What would home be without a mother?" asked one little fellow, looking tenderly at old Mrs. Hen, who was searching among the neighbor's freshly planted seeds for some dainty morsel with which to treat her brood.

"An incubator, I guess," answered his small sister, who had inherited her old man's unseemly sense of humor.

Tatoosh Island.

The most equable climate in this country is found in Tatoosh island, in the strait of Juan de Fuca, between Washington and Vancouver island, where the temperature never has been above 80 degrees and rarely falls below 60 degrees.

Musical Note.

"Well, landlord, how's business nowadays?"

"Oh, purty good, purty good. Had a whole passel o' people register yistedday. They was five gentlemen, three ladies and four musicians."

Right and Wrong.

It requires something of a hero to give up when he is wrong and a good deal of a family man to give up when he is right.

His Handicap.

First Golfer (to clubmate who has just been trimmed woefully)—Well, what's your handicap? Second Golfer—Honesty.

Persons who really wish to become angels should make a start in that direction while they are yet mortals.

BRITISH GUNS SMASH RESERVE, INFANTRY FRONT LINES

HEFT OF GERMAN OPPOSITION AGAINST BRITISH ADVANCE

SOMME BANK VILLAGES CAPTURED BY THE ALLIES

Vivid Description of How Cellars and Caves Were Cleared of Germans—Took But Hour and a Half to Take Possession First German Line Was Passed Almost Without Fighting

PARIS, July 10.—Special—The taking by the French Sunday afternoon of the Blaches village, on the bank of the Somme opposite Ste. Radegonde, the principal suburb of Peronne, was accomplished in about an hour and a half. A French lieutenant who took part in the assault, described the action as follows:—

"About noon word came for the divisions to 'keep ready,' and at 1 o'clock our soldiers advanced to the attack all along the front from Sormont farm to Belloy-en-Santerre.

"The first German line was passed almost without fihting, so effective had the preparatory bombardment been, but when we entered Blaches at ten minutes after two we found every house organized as a fort and supplied with a number of machine guns. Our artillery, however, by its accuracy and power destroyed these defences, though it still left cellars and caves full of enemies.

"As we entered the village, the commandant, who was at the end of a battalion with rifle in hand, ordered the trumpeters to sound the charge. All the Germans in the village were captured or killed. The commandant was wounded by a shot from a lieutenant's revolver, but he knocked down the lieutenant with a blow from his rifle."

"At 2.35 the village was completely in our possession, although a recent German order had declared it to be 'impregnable.' We are now less than two kilometres (2,000 yards) from Peronne."

The recent fighting on the French front in the Somme sector is only the opening phase of a plan elaborated by Gen. Joffre, according to a review of the military situation published in to-day's Temps.

The paper says that all the results expected have been accomplished and that further successes are assured.

"Everybody will realize," says the Temps, "the danger of making known in the newspaper the plan which is being executed by Gen. Joffre. It must be understood that the operations cannot be carried out in a rigid and invariable form. Napoleon himself never entertained such ideas. His plans were dominated by one chief purpose and were in a state of continuous evolution. He modified them after observing the movements of the enemy.

"Our operations have begun and begun well, and it is unnecessary to seek to foretell what will follow. On the immense front where the French are in contact with the enemy the developments will be evolutionary. Without putting aside his main purpose, the French commander may modify his first intentions."

Brief Session Of The Council

Communication Recommends Purchase of Pulmotor—Pavement and Sidewalk Asked For More For Patriotic Fund

There was a short session of the City Council last evening, the business transacted being of routine nature.

The members present were His Worship Mayor Ketcheson, and Aldermen Woodley, Platt, Parks, St. Charles, Duckworth and Whalen.

After the reading and confirming of the minutes of the previous meeting, the Council went into committee of the whole on reports, communications, etc., with Alderman Platt in the chair.

The accounts recommended to be paid by the various committees were passed.

A communication from Dr. Yeomans, coroner, enclosing the finding and recommendations of the jury, at the inquest of the drowning accident of the two young Italians and recommending the purchase of a pulmotor to be placed in a convenient building near the water front.—This was referred to the Executive.

A communication from Porter & Carnew re. sum of $3,206.31, which is due W. H. Patterson, upon contract, for work on pavement of Victoria Avenue.

It was recommended that letter of Porter and Carnew, be referred to the city solicitor, and a committee of the Council, composed of the Mayor, Chairman of Public Works, City Engineer and Chairman of the Executive, and that a report be given to the Council of what settlement can be made.

Petitions for construction of a macadam pavement on Chatham Street, between Victoria Avenue and Pine Street, and granolithic walk on east side of Cedar Street, from Jane to Bridge Streets, were referred to the Public Works Committee.

The committee rose and reported; the report was received and adopted.

Enquiries

Ald. St. Charles—Who appointed the bread inspector, as collector for the Water Works Dept.?

Mayor Ketcheson—He is not collecting; he is delivering the accounts.

Ald. Parks—Has the Cow By-Law been rescinded?

Ald. Whalen—It is in full force in all the wards of Belleville.

Ald. Platt—Is the cracked stone we are getting from Point Ann quarries costing 50 cents more than we can produce it ourselves?

Ald. Whalen—It would cost more to cart it from the town quarry than it would from the C. P. R. depot.

City Engineer—It costs $1.00 per square yard from the Point Ann quarries, and to crack the stone ourselves it would cost 50 cents per square yard.

According to the report, the first airship to attempt the passage will be named the Z-Deutschland. It is said she may carry passengers in addition to mails and a cargo of dyestuffs.

North Perth Goes Liberal

Majority For The Successful Candidate in Riding is Over 500—Stratford Makes Big Turn over

STRATFORD, Ont., July 11—Special—F. Wellington Hay, of Listowel, Liberal, was elected here yesterday by 573 over John A. Makins, Conservative, in the North Perth bye-election. In the country districts large numbers of farmers failed to turn out to cast their votes.

In Stratford, where James Torrance had a majority of 638, Mr. Hay was accorded a majority of 94, a turnover of 732 votes. Listowel gave Hay a majority of 54, and in Milverton he secured 39 majority.

Liberals celebrated here last night with the aid of a brass band, a few tin horns and a number of rakes, deeply significant in view of the muck-raking tactics used during the campaign.

The Township of Ellice, which is largely German, gave Hay a majority of 233, North Easthope 223, and Mornington 48. Although it was known that the Township of Ellice was largely pro-German it was not expected that it would go so entirely Liberal.

Sir Sam At Outs With London

City in Air Over Removal of Troops to Camp Borden—Claim an Agreement

LONDON, Ont., July 10.—Sir Sam Hughes' action in removing the militia from the camp here to Camp Borden has roused a storm locally. The minister of Militia has been told that there was an agreement between the Militia Department and the city with regard to the maintenance of the troops here and that it was upon this understanding that the city spent $100,000 on camp facilities.

The General's reply was that if any such agreement existed, he had not authorized it. He will not revoke orders for the troops to be removed and over six thousand have gone north in twelve hours.

It is reported that there is considerable dismay among those soldiers who had counted on remaining near their homes during their period of training.

Sir Sam is also reported as being about to move the 241st from Windsor here, although that city also has an agreement with the Militia Department. The Perth Battalion will be moved north next week. All troops from the District not sent overseas will return to London for the winter.

BRITISH TREAD ONWARD GERMANS SHOW FIGHT

Infantry at Close Quarters—Counter Attacks of Most Furious Nature—British Shells Scream Over Heads of Allied Forces and Beat Back Reserves of Foe—British Increasing Number of Captured Positions

Canadian Press Special.

LONDON, July 11.—A correspondence by the British armies in the field wired at noon to-day: After the assault of last night the British remain in possession of Contalmaison, holding it against German counter attacks and furious shell fire. Fighting continued throughout the night from Ovillers and Laboisselle to Trones wood. The British, bombing their way forward, gained considerably in Mametz and took all except the point of fiercely disputed pear shaped Trones wood, clearing their way with each step toward the German front line on the ridges beyond. The infantry is at such close quarters in the woods that guns are not firing at the first line for fear of hitting their own men. Overhead shells are screaming past into the reserves to keep assistance from coming to those in the front positions.

GERMANY NOW HAS A MARRIAGE FAMINE

LONDON, July 10.—The terrible elimination of the youth of the nation is causing great uneasiness in Germany. The Leipzig Neueste Nachrichten publishes an article on the position of German's family life as a consequence of the war. It says:

"Hundreds of thousands of healthy young men have never come back from the Fatherland's battles. In 1914 half the marriageable women in the Empire remained single owing to the death of men. What will happen after the war if the State does not interfere? Patriots would like to see taxes imposed with the object of encouraging marriage and to discredit bachelordom."

BATTALION KNOWN AS KITCHENER'S OWN

OTTAWA, July 10.—It was announced last evening by Major-Gen. Sam Hughes that Lieut.-Col. F. M. McRobie's new overseas battalion, the 244th, is authorized to adopt the name "Kitchener's Own."

There was some talk of this shortly after the death of Lord Kitchener, it being felt that it would be a fitting means of perpetuating the memory of the great British general by naming a Canadian active service battalion after him.

It is considered a signal honor that this privilege should have been extended to the Montreal battalion now being raised by Lieut.-Col. McRobie, and will probably aid that officer considerably in his recruiting work.

INTENSE BOMBARDMENTS AND ATTACKS ALONG ENTIRE FRONT

Canadian Press Special

PARIS, July 11.—(Afternoon statement.)—On the sides of the Somme the night passed in quiet. The total number of prisoners taken by us south of the Somme in the fighting of the last few days is now more than thirteen hundred. On the left bank of the Meuse (Verdun front) there were several artillery engagements in the sectors of Avocourt and Chattancourt.

To the right of the river the bombardment yesterday of our positions from Fleury to a point east of Chenois was redoubled in intensity. At four o'clock this morning the Germans delivered an attack on our whole front. East of Fumin wood and Chenois wood the enemy gained a foothold in our advanced trenches, but immediately was ejected entirely by our counter-attacks. Elsewhere our curtain of fire and machine guns broke up the attacks of the enemy. The bombardment continues in this region.

West of Port Au Mousson a surprise attack delivered by the enemy against one of our trenches west of Mortmare wood was broken up completely.

In Lorraine after a spirited artillery preparation the Germans attacked the salient in our line east of Reillon and succeeded in penetrating portions of our first line over a width of two hundred metres.

Electrocuted When at Work On Fire Alarm

Henry Chapman of Kingston Gets Death Shock When Making Minor Repairs—Companion Not Injured

KINGSTON, July 10.—While working on the fire alarm wires at the corner of Barrie and Deacon streets this morning, a few minutes after 8 o'clock, Henry Chapman, formerly of Bedford Mills, was electrocuted. He and Edward Porter had gone up a short time before to look over the wires and were making minor repairs. Suddenly Mr. Porter heard Chapman say, "Oh, Ed, help me quick," and then saw him fall over the wires. Porter yelled at W. McIlroy, working below, to get the power off and bring some help. This was done, and the unfortunate man was held up by Porter, who was working just beneath him. Fire Chief Armstrong, who hurriedly arrived, supervised the work, and ordered the firemen to bring out the pulmotor and the ladders. A call was sent for Corbett's ambulance.

A small ladder was brought up from a Deacon street house, and although the man couldn't be brought down, it made it easier for Porter to hold him up. Shortly before the ambulance arrived Henry Mooers, who resides on Barrie street, brought out a long rope and the man was lowered to the ground. The pulmotor was immediately used, and the men worked over the limp form for over half an hour, but is was found that life was extinct. Dr. Reid, of the General Hospital, and several of the medical students at Queen's University tried the heart with a stethescope, but none could hear the slightest sound, and the use of the pulmotor was discontinued. Deceased's remains were put in the ambulance and will be held at Corbett's until the inquest is held.

As a result of the accident, Mr. Porter was slightly burned in the fourth finger of the ring hand. He, of course, could render little assistance until the power was turned off. The current that went through the body of the deceased was very strong, but no burns were found on the body of the deceased.

After viewing the remains of the deceased on Barrie street, Dr. Mundell, corner, decided that an inquest would be held in the Police Court tonight.

LIQUID AIR A GREAT COMMERCIAL FUTURE

KINGSTON, July 10.—Prof. A. L. Clark of Queen's University, who has returned from Holland, where he went on invitation of Prof. H. Kamerkungh Onnes, the famous director of the great physics laboratory at Leyden University, to investigate further into the question of liquefying air, states that he succeeded in determining more accurately the temperature at which air liquefies and freezes. The results of the joint experiments of Professors Onnes and Clark are to be published in the proceedings of the Royal Academy of Amsterdam. Prof. Onnes expressed the opinion that liquid air has a great commercial future, and that within twenty-five years it will be extensively used in connection with the mechanical arts. A liquid air machine will be installed at Queen's by Prof. Clark, so that he may continue his experiments.

LAD TRAMPLED TO DEATH BY A HORSE

PORT HOPE, July 10.—Stanley Brady, aged 8, who resided near Ashton, was trampled to death by a horse while his father vainly endeavored to rescue him. The unfortunate boy was watering the horse with the halter shank tied around his body when the animal took fright and bolted, dragging him along. Mr. Brady rushed forward and caught the rope, but was unable to hold it, and the horse dragged the youngster many yards before it was finally caught. Medical aid was summoned, but the boy was dead when picked up.

PERONNE EVACUATED BY THE KAISER'S FORCES

Streets and Buildings of Great Teuton Base Within Sight of His Artillery—Another Thrust Will Clear Enemy Out of it Heavy Foe Counter-attacks Retake Trones Woods From British

LONDON, July 11—Special—Hand-to-hand fighting of great ferocity raged in many sectors of the Somme battle front yesterday. The Allies on both banks of the river kept up their steady and punishing pressure against the Germans. The most important action of the day was the capture by the French, in a dashing assault, of a commanding hill on the southern bank of the Somme, which gives them control, not only of that entire section lying in the bed of the river, but brings the streets and buildings of Peronne within sight of their artillery.

The Germans last night were reported to be hastily withdrawing war stores and heavy guns which had been gathered at Peronne. With the French in artillery control of the town, it has lost all value as a base, for which it served the Germans for more than twenty months. French critics are confident that another thrust will bring the troops of Gen. Fosh into the city.

The height carried yesterday is listed on military maps as Hill No. 97. It is located south-east of Blaches, which was taken by storm. In a further advance the French also claim to have recaptured the Maisonette Farm and a small copse to the northward.

During the day the French engaged in heavy attacks against positions previously captured by them, but retaken in a night counter-movement of the Germans. Not only on the entire front of attacks south of the Somme, but also against the British north of the river the Germans displayed more activity than has marked their efforts on any day since the opening of the Allied drive.

While the British last night reported an advance in the region of Ovillers and La Boiselle and claim to have penetrated into the strongly fortified Mametz Wood. Gen. Haig's report admits that the Bois des Trones, a triangular-shaped forest, which the British had taken only after several days' of hard fighting, has been lost. Berlin this morning reported the recapture of the wood. The Teutons won back the position after they had been repulsed with heavy losses five times in succession.

Says Germany Swiped Patents

BRIDGEPORT, Conn., July 10.—Legal action, possibly seizure of the German U-boat Deutschland at Baltimore, is threatened by Simon Lake, inventor of the submersible boat, if the German underwater merchantman uses devices which he has patented in the United States. Lake, with 2 attorneys, was to leave late to-day for Baltimore to inspect the vessel.

"If the boat has any of my patented devices on it—and I have every reason to believe it has—I will sue out a libel." Lake answered.

The inventor alleges that German officials to whom he tried to sell his submarine in 1904 and 1905 copied his plans, after holding him off for weeks, and then dismissed him.

Wealthy Hermit Shoots Himself

BALTIMORE, Md., July 10.— William Fell Johnson, 70 years old, millionaire resident of Baltimore county, and a descendant of one of the State's oldest families was found with a bullet wound in his head, at his home at Rockland, near this city yesterday. Beside the body was found a .32 calibre revolver with one of the chambers exploded. Members of the family believe that being in fear of robbers, he had provided himself with a revolver and that in a moment of despondency shot himself. Mr. Johnson's condition is critical.

TANGA OCCUPIED BY GENERAL SMUTS

LONDON, July 11.—Special—General Smuts, in command of the British forces in German East Africa, has occupied Tanga according to a statement issued by the War Office yesterday. The Germans only offered slight resistance.

Tanga is the second most important port on the coast of German East Africa and is the terminus of a railroad which the Germans were building into the interior at the outbreak of the war. About a couple of hunderd miles of this road had been completed.

ALLIES STORM POSITIONS AND CAPTURE MEN AND GUNS

Canadian Press Special.

LONDON, July 11.—Official statement—Last night after a brisk bombardment, our infantry again carried Contalmaison by assault, taking 189 unwounded prisoners. A strong counter attack delivered by the Germans during the night was beaten back with heavy loss to the enemy, and the whole village is now in our hands.

Further east we stormed several lines of trenches in Bois de Mametz, and the greater part of this large wood is now in our possessian. Here we captured one heavy howitzer, three field guns and 296 unwounded prisoners, including three officers.

Heavy fighting continues in Trones Wood.

In continuation of the report on aerial combats on Sunday one of our aeroplanes was shot down by a direct hit from an anti-aircraft gun, and three other machines have not returned to our lines.

In the vicinity of Veho the enemy attempted by the explosion of four mines to destroy one of our trenches. He was checked by our fire and driven back, leaving dead and wounded. We occupied the craters of the German mines.

In the Vosges, south of Lusse, an attack of the enemy was broken up with grenades. North of Lan Fontenelle a surprise attack on the trenches of the enemy enabled us to penetrate the first line trenches and support trench, which we cleared out. We brought back some prisoners.

DYING BABY SAID KAISER WOULD COMMIT SUICIDE

Infant Prophet in Maine Suddenly Developed Speech and Told of War's End

From Houlten, Arpostook county, Me., comes the strange story of an infant prophet who, just before her death a few days ago, announced to her startled parents that the Kaiser would commit suicide in August and the great war come to a sudden end in September of this year. The child, about six months old, had never uttered a distinguishable word up to the day of her death, and so, on the morning of that day her mother was electrified to hear her distinctly say, when the mother had dropped and broken a dinner plate:

"Mother, you have broken a plate!"

When the father returned from work that evening the mother told him the strange story of what the baby had said. The father laughed incredulously and remarked that his wife must be dreaming.

"Well, you try it," suggested the wife, whereupon the father dropped and broke another plate. Instantly the baby spoke up:

"Father, you have broken a plate!"

At this the parents became alarmed and sent for a neighboring doctor, who declared that in all his practice he never had heard of such an instance of juvenile precocity, or abnormal mental or lingual development. However, he said that he would try the experiment of dropping a plate himself. At once the baby admonished him, with a little more emphasis, that he, too, had broken a plate. After a slight pause, the infant startled all by declaring solemnly:

"The Kaiser will committ suicide in August and the war will come to an end very suddenly in September."

A few hours afterward the bay expired, from no cause that the doctor could discover.

What the Doctor Asked

One of the questions the examining physician for life insurance is apt to ask the applicant whose heart is skipping beats or is fluttery is—

"Do you use tea or coffee?"

The reason tea and coffee are suspected is because the physician knows that the drug, caffeine, in tea and coffee disturbs the nervous system, races the heart, and is responsible besides for conditions which often become serious.

It's a good thing to stop when one reaches the danger zone. It is better still, to safe guard health and avoid trouble by quitting both tea and coffee and using the famous pure food-drink

POSTUM

This delightful beverage is made of finest wheat, roasted with a little wholesome molasses, and while it has a delightful snappy taste, it contains only the nourishing goodness of the grain—no drug—no harmful ingredient whatever.

There are two forms of Postum. The original Postum Cereal must be boiled. Instant Postum a soluble powder—is made in the cup with hot water—instantly! Both forms are equal in flavour, and cost about the same per cup.

Thousands of people have found the way to renewed health by a change from tea or coffee to Postum. There are no tea or coffee "questions" in Postum.

Brave Fido.

"Why, Fido, I'm surprised to see
You wear a muzzle too!
What foolish people they must be
Who are afraid of you!"

Thus cried the dancing bear one day
When he had chanced to meet
A little dog that came his way
Along the village street.

But Fido growled at Mr. Bear
And glared into his eye,
And fiercer still became his glare
When thus he made reply:

"They muzzle me, I'd have you know,
To save the likes of you!
Each day, were I not muzzled so,
I'd eat a bear or two!"

Presentation To Mr. and Mrs. V. P. Hunt

Alberta College Friends Remember Prof. of Music Upon Departure For The East

At the conclusion of a very interesting programme in Alberta College, Edmonton, on July 3rd, Mr. V. P. Hunt, who is soon to return to Belleville, was presented, on behalf of the Board of Directors of the College, with whom the recipient has been associated in a musical sense for some years past, with a beautiful gold headed cane. In the address of presentation Dr. H. Smith spoke at some length of the high esteem in which Mr. Hunt is held by the members of the board of the faculty of the college and his large class of pupils. Great regret is felt by all connected with the college at his departure.

Principal McCall afterwards presented to Mr. and Mrs. Hunt, on behalf of the faculty and Mr. Hunt's pupils, an easy chair, which is to be in the new home in Belleville upon their arrival, about September 1st.

ANOTHER PRESENTATION

Mr. and Mrs. V. P. Hunt were the guests of the choir and congregation of McDougall church at a very pleasant function assembled on the evening of the 29th ult., to give recognition of the valuable services of Mr. Hunt during the eight years of his being organist and choirmaster of the church. Complimentary addresses were given by representatives of different church organizations, including Mrs. P. E. Butchart for the Ladies' Aid; Mr. Jas. Ramsey for the music committee; Mr. Cecil Race for the choir; Mr. W. W. Gould for the official board, and Dr. Riddell for Alberta College.

A beautiful umbrella with ebony handle and silver mounting was presented from the choir and a substantial cheque from the choir and congregation. Mr. Hunt in replying, expressed great regret at severing his connection with McDougall church, and thanked the pastor, choir and congregation for the many kindnesses he and his family had received from them. Mr. and Mrs. Hunt are leaving the city in about two weeks and in September Mr. Hunt enters upon his new duties are musical director of Albert College and organist of Bridge St. Methodist church at Belleville, Ont.—Morning Bulletin, Edmonton, Alberta, July 4th.

Of 365,000,000 Bushels Prairie Crop Only 15,000,000 Remain To be Sold For Export

The Canadian wheat surplus is apparently much smaller than the trade, generally speaking, places it. James Carruthers, the Canadian wheat exporter, made the statement, according to a special despatch, that the three important factors in the wheat market of the world are the amount of that grain, as well as the amount of wheat available for export at the end of the season, coupled with the probable size of the new crop. He places the 1915 wheat crop yield in the three prairie Provinces of Canada at 365,000,000 bushels.

He says that of this there now remains in storage at Fort William, in country elevators and in the hands of farmers 64,000,000 bushels. That, deducting 35,000,000 bushels for seed, feed and use of country millers, leaves a total exportable surplus of 29,000,000 bushels. At least half of this amount already has been sold for export and will be shipped out of that country within thirty days.

Mr. Carruthers says further: "This will leave less than 15,000,000 bushels of Manitoba wheat of old crop for sale. Judging from the demand the past two weeks from foreign Governments, it looks as if this entire surplus will be sold within thirty days. There were at least 5,000,000 bushels of Manitoba wheat sold for export the past week. This easily can be accounted for because of the magnificent quality. The new crop of Canadian wheat is all a question of weather the next few months. The 1916 crop cannot be more than 200,000,000 bushels as the acreage has been reduced about 15 per cent., and the seed has been sowen largely on stubble.

SHANNONVILLE RED CROSS

The Shannonville Red Cross is by no means inactive. During May seventy-two pairs of socks were sent to headquarters at Toronto, and six pairs were sent to private soldiers in France, which were gratefully acknowledged by them. Several dozen more pair will be sent away in a short time.

The knitting circle met at Mrs. F. Palmer's home Wednesday, June 28th. The number present and proceeds from refreshments were very encouraging. The next one will be held at Mrs. T. F. Mordens, July 12th between two and five p.m. I. Liddle, Secretary.

GRAND TRUNK SERVICES UNEXCELLED.

A tourist party from Boston, who travels over the Grand Trunk Railway System from Chicago eastbound to their homes, have written to an official of the Grand Trunk conveying their impressions as to the enjoyment they experienced en route. The following is an abstract from the letter:

"Some of our party had never been out of New England and having passed over eleven different lines on this jurney, and through twenty-seven States it may please you to know that all agreed your roadbed and equipment was equal to any we had seen, while the service was unexcelled."

FORCED TO WITHDRAW

Canadians Are Still Fighting Hard For Positions.

Fierce Battle in Which Canadian Casualties Have Been Very Severe is Still in Progress, but Recaptured Trenches Have Been Found Untenable and Have Been Given Up—Mercer and Williams Missing.

LONDON, June 6.—The British and Germans are fighting hard in the region of Ypres, where last Saturday the Canadians in hand-to-hand encounters and with the aid of bombs recaptured most of the trenches the Germans had previously taken from them in the sector from the Ypres-Comines Canal to Hooge point. In the face of repeated attacks by the enemy the Canadians have been unable to retain the bulk of the recaptured ground, but are still fighting strenuously to keep what they have and recapture what they have lost.

Maj.-Gen. Mercer and Brig.-Gen. Williams, of the Third Canadian division, are missing, and one is the spirited engagement in the direction of Zillebeke, between Hooge and the Ypres-Menin railway. The British report states that the two officers were inspecting the trenches, and says that they are "missing," but the fact of the capture of one of them is chronicled in the German report, which announced the successful storming of the ridges south-east of Zillebeke and the British position beyond, with the capture of a slightly-wounded general, a major, 13 other officers, and 350 unwounded men. The British were said to have suffered heavy losses. The British statement admitted a German advance of 700 yards, but asserted that the Canadian troops recaptured much of this ground.

MAJOR-GENERAL MERCER.

Wounded officers reaching London late Sunday night report that General Mercer, severely wounded, has been taken to Boulogne Hospital. If this is correct it is General Williams who has been taken prisoner.

The British official statement issued at midnight Saturday gave the following account of the battle:

"Fighting of a very severe nature continued unceasingly south-east of Ypres between Hooge and the Ypres-Menin railway. Following on their initial advantage obtained Saturday evening in penetrating our forward line in this neighborhood, the Germans pushed their attack during the night and succeeded in pushing through our defences to a depth of 700 yards in the direction of Zillebeke.

"The Canadian troops, however, who are holding this sector of the defences, launched counter-strokes at 7 o'clock this morning, which have succeeded in gradually driving the enemy from much of the ground he had gained. The Canadians behaved with the utmost gallantry, counter-attacking successfully after a heavy and continued bombardment.

"The enemy losses were severe. A large number of German dead were abandoned on the recaptured ground. General Mercer and General Williams, of the Third Canadian division, who were inspecting the front trenches Saturday during the bombardment, are missing."

Sunday night British official said: "The situation around Ypres has not materially altered. There have been artillery bombardments, and our troops retain the ground regained in their counter-attacks Saturday. No fresh attacks have been undertaken by us."

The German report of the fight as contained in Saturday's official communication reads:

"We captured by storm on Friday the ridges of the heights south-east of Zillebeke, south-east of Ypres, and the English position beyond, taking prisoners one general, slightly wounded; one major, and 13 other officers and 350 unwounded men. The number of prisoners taken was small, the enemy having suffered very sanguinary losses. During the night attempted counter-attacks made by the enemy were easily repulsed."

The following four officers who took part in recent fighting arrived in London at a late hour Sunday night, Major W. Enver, 49th, abrasion on back; Lieut. Peu, C.M.R., wound in face; Lieut. Drabble, 49th, wound in cheek and suffering from shell shock; and Lieut. Paton, C.M.R., scalp wound. All the cases are slight.

Kingsville Man Killed.

WINDSOR, June 6.—William O. Heath, 65 years old, of Kingsville, was injured fatally when a Michigan avenue street car struck him as he was crossing Monroe avenue, in Detroit Saturday afternoon. He died on the operating table in the Receiving Hospital. Heath's body was identified by his son-in-law, Charles Loop, of Kingsville.

THE ORIGIN OF NAMES.

A Great Many Are Derived From Trades and Social Position.

It cannot but be admitted that considerable food for thoughtful reflection is offered in the study of the origination of names. It was all very well when the world was young, but, as a writer says, "As the population increased and communication became possible and easier, the supply of single names was not equal to the demand, and people began to get individuals bearing the same name mixed. It was at this time that the surname was thought of and adopted, so that families might be distinguished one from the other."

Trades and callings are in this day represented in the names of Baker, Carver, Shoemaker, Tyler, Chandler, Mason, Cutler, Carter, Saddler, Slater, Butcher, Draper, Thatcher, Fletcher, Hooper, Cheeseman, Turner, Joiner, Cooper, Gilder, Mercer, Skinner, Coleman, Sawyer, Tanner, Spicer, Cook, Tutor, Miner, Driver, Weaver, Gardner, Archer, Merchant, Porter, Wainwright, Taylor, Shepherd, Glover, and ever so many others.

Says Clifford Howard, who has devoted himself to this pleasant study: "Such names as Hall, Stair, Garret, Kitchin, Chambers, also record the occupations of our forefathers, who in these cases were engaged in the households of the nobility and had charge of such apartments as the names indicate. Others held higher offices and from them we have the surnames Page, Butler, Proctor, Forester, Steward, Baily, Fowler, and Woodward and Hayward, the keepers, respectively, of the forest and the cattle."

In other localities it was usual to point out an individual by the place of his birth or residence, a custom which resulted in the adoption of such surnames as French, Scott, Welsh, English, Dan, Burgoyne, Cornish and Cornwallis, Kent, York, Chichester, Lincoln, Wells, Washington, Putnam, Hurst, Buchanan, Preston, and Bancroft. A great many of this sort were originally the names of baronial estates, which names the barons adopted as surnames.

Those who were not of such high estate were forced to content themselves with humbler titles. Thus John who lived by the brook became John Brook, and David who lived by a giant oak was called David Tree.

Richard who lived at the end of town became Richard Townsend, while his brother who lived under the brow of a hill became known as Peter Underwood. Those who lived near the water took the name of Atwater.

At the time family names began to be used the shops of the merchants were not numbered as they are now, but were known by their signs, which were suspended at the front doors and bore pictures of all sorts of animals, vegetables, birds, flowers, fishes, and insects. It was customary to speak of an innkeeper, then, as John of the Bear, or Dick of the Swan, and as may be readily understood, these names were soon converted into Bear, Hogg, Hart, Bull, Fox, Wolf, Colt, Hare, Beaver, Lyon, Swan, Peacock, Heron, Dove, Partridge, Cock, Finch, Hawk, Crane, and Drake, as well as Burt, Chubb, Haddock, Herring, Pike, Perch, and others. From vegetables, trees, fruits, and flowers we have Bean, Broome, Clover, Birch, Ash, Hawthorne, Hazel, Peach, Flower, Nettle, Vine, Plant, Budd, Branch, and Root, besides dozens more.

The shop signs bore other devices, and from these we have such names as Bell, Hammer, Coates, Mantell, Jewel, Potts, Pipes, and others.

She Tried to Enlist.

The adventures of a twenty-year-old domestic servant employed at Leyton, Essex, who conceived the idea of joining the army as a man, in imitation of Russian girls about whom she had read, are related by a Windsor correspondent. On her afternoon off she traveled to London, and got a barber to cut her hair short, saying a doctor had advised this course. She bought a suit of clothes "for her brother," and then journeyed to Stoke Poges, where in a shrubbery she changed into male attire. The girl, however, was dismayed on finding that a medical examination was necessary for army recruits. Then it came on to hail and snow, and, not knowing what to do, she called at a house, and confessed her dilemma. She was given hospitality, and servants provided her with an outfit of girl's clothes. She was then taken in charge by the police.

The Woman Bus Conductor.

A British diplomat was praising the cheerful and devoted spirit wherewith the women of Britain are doing their share of war work.

"There is a story that illustrates this fine spirit," said he. "A man asked his next door neighbor in an English town: 'Anybody ill in your house? I heard a lot of frantic running up and down stairs last night. It seemed to go on pretty much all evening.'

"Here, by the way, I'd better explain that an English 'bus has a double deck like the New York 'bus of Broadway and Fifth avenue.

"The other man said to his friend: 'Oh, no, we've got nobody sick. It was just my wife you heard. You see, she's taken a job as 'bus conductor, and last night she thought she'd have a bit of practice running up the steps.'"

THIS IS THE 682ND DAY THE BRITISH EMPIRE HAS BEEN AT WAR WITH GERMANY.

CANADA AND AUSTRALIA.

It is interesting to note that while Canada has been financing its own war expenses for nearly a year, Australia, during 1916, is borrowing $125,000,000 from the Imperial Treasury. But the Canadian pessimists still go on holding up Australia to us as the one beautiful example.—Ottawa Free Press.

There is at least one Liberal organ in the country willing to voice a calm reminder of something which, amidst the noisy clamor of hysterically partisan newspapers, seems to have been lost sight of by our people. Whenever Liberal organs are short of ammunition to carry on their unpatriotic warfare against their own Government and their own country they point to Australia's superior conduct of her part in the war. There is no doubt but that the great overseas Commonwealth has responded magnificently in this struggle, but it is not true that our own achievements are paled in comparison.

Of the Australian forces about 185,000 had been embarked up to the 15th of May, which left about 65,000 in training in home camps. Canada, in comparison, has something like 225,000 men overseas, and will soon have four full fighting divisions at the front.

During the past year the Dominion Government has been able to finance all Canadian war effort without borrowing a cent from the British Treasury. In addition it has supplied credit to the British Government to the extent of $150,000,000, not including a further credit of $25,000,000 cabled the Imperial Government by Mr White only the other day.

Australia, on the other hand, is borrowing this year $125,000,000 from the British Government to finance its share of the war. In making this announcement a few months ago the Australian Finance Minister pointed to Canada as an object leson to Australia, and said that he was of the opinion that the time had arrived when Australia should at least furnish the money to pay her own share of war expenditure, if not, indeed, to lend money to the Imperial Government.

Much has been heard from Liberals and people whom they have misled in regard to how much better Australia served the Empire in respect to the delivery of munitions. At the present time Australian shell deliveries are very creditable, but the truth of the matter is that long after the Canadian Shell Committee had been shipping munitions of all kinds not a single shell was exported from Australia.

On May 10th the Australian Government announced its intention to place a tax on the profits of munition makers and also upon the profits of other businesses which had done well out of the war. A great deal has been made out of this in the Liberal press, yet the cold truth is that Australia merely patterned its legislature after that put through in Ottawa by the Borden Government three months before. Indeed, so closely did the Australian Ministry follow the example of Sir Thos. White's budget that it expressly exempted agriculture from the impost.

These facts are cited, not in an attempt to depreciate Australia's great sacrifices in blood and treasure to the Empire's cause. They are given simply in the hope of dispelling some of the wrongful impressions created in the public mind in regard to Canada by the mad partisans who think they are serving their country by slandering its Government and its people.

A MEANINGLESS APPEAL.

Ostensibly to visit his dear friend the Hon. Sidney Fisher, ex-Minister of Agriculture, Sir Wilfrid Laurier recently wended his way to Knowlton, in the county of Brome. Mr Fisher owns a beautiful home upon the shores of a picturesque lake adjacent to the quaint little village mentioned—an ideal spot to rusticate for a week or longer during the summer season. As it turned out, however, Sir Wilfrid was scheduled to address the ladies of the Red Cross Society, an invitation to which he responded with avidity, in that it gave him an opportunity to appeal to the English-speaking people of the Eastern Townships to support the fight against German tyranny, and, incidentally, establish a reputation for loyalty to the Empire as a whole.

Brome, as is well known, is one of the few counties in Quebec where such an appeal is unnecesary. That county has given its brave young representative in Parliament, Col. Geo. H. Baker, to the cause of the Empire. Many other of the sons of Brome laid down their lives with their leader holding back the German horde at Zillebeck. After this great sacrifice by the great English-speaking county of Quebec, Sir Wilfrid hastens there and appeals to them to fill the depleted ranks of the late Colonel Baker's regiment.

Sir Wilfrid represents Quebec East and Soulanges in Parliament, and his native county is Drummond-Arthabasca. Brome has given a score of its young men for every man from the three counties where Sir Wilfrid's influence is supreme. Why did not Sir Wilfrid hasten to Quebec East, Soulanges or Drummond-Arthabasca and ask his supporters to help the cause by volunteering to take the places of the men of Brome who fell on the bloody field of Zillebeck a few week's ago? He was billed to speak at Hull just across the river from his home. Did he rush to Hull and appeal to his compatriots to avenge the death of the men of Brome? He cancelled his Hull engagement and went down into a county mourning for its dead and asked the fathers and mothers of Brome to send their remaining sons, while in Quebec East, Soulanges, Hull and Drummond-Arthabasca his supporters urge the young men not to enlist.

Consistency — consistency — thy name is not Sir Wilfrid Laurier!

Montreal Gazette: Roumania again has the world guessing. Will her neutrality stand the pressure that Russia is making with increasing force upon the Austrians, within measurable distance of her own border? Neither the bullyings nor the blandishments of diplomacy prevailed to entangle her into a fighting alliance on the one side or the other. The sound of Russian guns, however, may succeed where even "concrete arguments"—to which certain Roumanian politicians are said to have unusually responsive palms—have failed until now. The German Chancellor advises the close observation of what he is pleased to call the war maps. Roumania is watching the map nearest her own with rising feelings.

Edmonton Bulletin: Gone are the days when business flowed through every street in the city, poured into every shop of its own accord, and filled the till of the merchant with no more effort on his part than to wrap up the goods and hand out the change. There is still business to be done, probably more of it outside the city than ever before, but it has to be gone after. And the cheapest and most "fetchful" way of going after it is by newspaper advertising.

Current Comment

Sir Wilfrid Laurier is announced to make a recruiting tour of Ontario in August and of Quebec in September. One would naturally think that Sir Wilfrid should reverse his program, his own province requiring his ministrations more than Ontario does.

Of course, there never can be any extensive submarine commerce. Travel under water is much slower than on the surface. Enormously expensive must be the construction of an underwater craft big enough to carry to Germany such things as she wants—rubber, oil, meats, etc. The Deutschland may be regarded as a curiosity; it cannot be much more—Hamilton Spectator.

The newspapers have been recording the fact that Rufus Avery, a farmer in the township of Augusta, county of Grenville, Ont., has passed his 104th birthday and is still able to be about. Mr. Avery is a great old man, surely, but he has a contemporary up in the Laurentians, in the county of Terrebonne, who has reached the remarkable age of 108.

The report of Admiral Jellicoe shows that the British fleet remained on the scene of action around Horn Reef till 11 o'clock in the forenoon of the day after the battle, and could see no German fighting craft. The losses in ships and men in the fight may have been fairly even. The side which held the field has the best claim to having had the balance of fighting results in its favor.

Alexander Troop of the Canadian Engineers while instructing troops at Shorncliffe, placed a marking disc in his eye and ordered them to test their steadiness by aiming at the disc. The order, of course, was given to rifles loaded with blanks, but when the volley rang out Troop fell dead. By mistake a loaded cartridge was placed in one of the rifles.

In a booklet on the Irish rebellion, F. A. McKenzie, a Canadian journalist, who was an eyewitness of events at Dublin, expresses the opinion that the British Government would have been well advised had it exercised greater leniency to the Irish rebel leaders, and that a great opportunity for supreme statesmanship was passed by.

Every time The Examiner has occasion to refer to the resignation of Mr. Torrance in North Perth, to become collector of customs at Stratford, it says that he has accepted a position of graft. It is too bad, really, if our contemporary's intimacy with the records of its own party has forced it to the conclusion that it is impossible to administer a public office honestly.—Peterborough Review.

The Duck.

A little schoolgirl in Michigan has written the following essay on the duck:

"The duck is a low heavy set bird. He is a mighty poor singer having a coarse voice caused by getting so many frogs in his neck and he likes the water and carries a toy balloon in his stomach to keep from sinking the Duck has only two legs and they are set so far back on his running gears by nature that they come pretty near missing his body some ducks when they get big curls on their tails are called drakes and don't have to set or hatch but just loaf and go swimming and eat everything in sight if I were to be a duck I would rather be a drake they have a wide bill like they use it for a spade they walk like a drunk man they bounce and bump about from side to side if you scare them they will flag their wings and try to make a pass at singing."—Detroit Journal.

Browning's Peculiar Eyes.

Browning's eyes were peculiar, one having a long focus, the other very short. He had the unusual accomplishment (try it and prove) of closing either eye without "squinching" and without any apparent effort, though sometimes on the street in strong sunshine his face would be a bit distorted. He did all his reading and writing with one eye, closing the long one as he sat down at his desk. He never wore glasses and was proud of his microscopic eye. He often wrote minutely to show off his powers. When he left the house to go for a walk he shut the short eye and opened the long one, with which he could see an immense distance. He never suffered with any pain in his eyes except once, when as a boy he was trying to be a vegetarian in imitation of his youthful idol, Shelley.—Boston Transcript.

Objections to Seriousness.

If everybody were able to see clearly, think straight and reach sound conclusions there could be no objection to seriousness except its mortal monotonousness. But, inasmuch as about 90 per cent of what serious people think and know and say is incorrect, the evil effect upon the social body is tremendous. It may be, probably is, equally true that 90 per cent of what nonserious people think and know and say is incorrect, but as nobody takes them seriously, no harm is done to the community, and these nonserious ones have at least added to the sum total of enjoyment. The people who take themselves seriously ought to be carefully selected by law and their number rigidly limited.—Life.

The Spitting Snake.

A snake found in Africa is called the spitting snake by the Boers. It is between two and three feet long and is especially bold and active, readily attacking every one who approaches it. In confinement it is very savage, opening its mouth and ejecting its fangs, from which the poison may be often observed to drop and even sometimes to be forcibly ejected, whence the name given it by the Boers.

BUSY BEES IN WINTER.

How They Generate Heat to Keep the Colony Warm.

The bee upholds his reputation for industry throughout the winter months as well as during the summer. Being susceptible to cold, the bee must turn to his colony for warmth. Communism, which in bees is so highly developed in the storing of food and caring for the young, is also the basis for the heating system.

It was found by experiment that only the shell of the cluster made by the bees in cold weather is compact. This is formed by one to several layers of bees all solidly arranged with their heads inward, their hairs interlacing. This arrangement is perfect for conservation of the heat within. Except for an occasional shifting of position the bees forming the shell are quiet. But within the shell strange things are going on.

It is here that the heat is generated. And the antics are not unlike our own when we are cold. The bees are packed loosely within the shell so that there is plenty of space for many bees to be exercising at a time. Rapid fanning of the wings, shaking the body from side to side, rapid breathing and other movements are all part of the scheme for raising the temperature. In one particular instance, when a bee had been rapidly fanning with his wings for seven and a half minutes, the thermometer nearest him rose half a degree F.—Pearson's Weekly.

Johnny Roche's Tower.

Standing on the banks of the river Awberg, between Mallow and Fermoy, County Cork, Ireland, is a remarkable edifice known as "Johnny Roche's Tower." The whole tower was built by the labor of one man, who subsequently resided in it. This individual, who received no education whatever, also erected a mill, constructing the water wheel after a special design of his own. Long before the introduction of the bicycle he went about the country in a wheeled vehicle of his own construction propelled by foot power. His last feat was to build his tomb in the middle of the river bed. John Roche died, but was not interred in the strange burying place which he selected for himself, his less original relatives deeming such a mode of sepulture unchristian.—London Strand Magazine.

The Horseshoe Legend.

Here is an explanation of the old horseshoe superstition: St. Dunstan was a skilled farrier. One day while at work in his forge the devil entered in disguise and requested Dunstan to shoe his "single hoof." The saint, although he recognized his malign customer, acceded, but caused him so much pain during the operation that Satan begged him to desist. This St Dunstan did, but only after he had made the evil one promise that neither he nor any of the lesser evil spirits, his servants, would ever molest the inmates of a house where the horse shoe was displayed.

The Coffee Plant's Friend.

In Colombia there is a tree highly esteemed as a shade for the coffee plant. It is found also in tropical Brazil and possesses qualities that make it peculiarly suited for this particular use. It will live on a stony, poor soil, and a tree only eighteen months old will shade 144 square yards of ground, while when full grown it may be fifty feet high and have a spread of fifty feet on every side.

Grandeur.

"Where did your ruler get his ideas for this magnificent palace?"

"It was modeled after an American drug store," explained the grand vizier. "Some fine effects, eh?"

Needlework Notes.

Fascinating workbags, made of Austrian handkerchiefs such as the peasants wear for headdresses, are being shown. The handkerchief is of a large size in cream white and has a border of purple plums and green leaves. The bags are half moon in shape and sixteen inches deep and are shirred on oblong wooden frames, which form the handles.

Smocking on Aprons.

Daintiness itself is an apron made of silk muslin, the fullness of which is confined by smocking instead of gathers. The smocking is arranged in five points, and a slight touch of color can be introduced by using a faint shade of blue or pink thread for the smocking.

A FATAL BARGAIN
OR
THE MAN WHO DARED FATE
BY
NICHOLAS CARTER

Author of the celebrated stories of Nick Carter's adventures, which are published exclusively in the New Magnet Library, conceded to be the best detective tales ever written

CHAPTER II.—Continued.

"I have followed your work with much interest of late, in so far as the press comments upon it, and I hope you may finally win out," Nick added. "You are up against tremendous odds, however—men with barrels of money, of which they know how to make the best use."

"Or the worst," Fenno grimly supplemented.

"Well there is something in that, I'll admit."

"I have a few milions of my own, Mr. Carter, and also very strong financial backing," Fennon gravely rejoined. "At all events, I have knocked United Transit under fifty in the stock market since it was launched upon a credulous public at one hundred five months. God willing, moreover, I'll make it worth less than the paper on which its certificates are written. I can see plainly what will result from this federation of our municipal railway service, and I'm going to beat the public-robbing sharks that are back of it, as well as the gang of crooked financiers and blackleg politicians or I'll go broke in the attempt."

"The politicians are, I judge, as much to be feared as the money power."

"Indeed, Mr. Carter none knows better than I."

"Probably not," smiled Nick. "Even the bribing of the judiciary is soft walking for some of them, eh?"

"If I can get evidence of anything of that sort, they'll find it a rocky road to Dublin—or to Sing Sing," Fenno forcibly declared with a frown that did not improve his strong aggressive countenance, yet which evinced the depth of his interest in the work under discussion and the desperate measures of which he might be capable.

Though formerly strangers, Nick knew Percival Fenno very well by reputation—a stock-market operator of Lawsonian type a young man who had started with little and amassed a vast fortune, who at times had posed as a reformer of financial and political methods, who had acquired a following of big and little fish by no means to be despised, and who of late had come more than ever into the limelight by his fierce opposition to a tremendous railway federation inaugurated months before, incorporated with a rush under the name of United Transit, and its stock five times oversubscribed by a hungry public, on the stomach of which it soon began to sour under the allegations, injunctions and market operations of this man Fenno.

The details concerning United Transit, or the probable facts pro and con, are not essential here however for they have only an indirect bearing upon the incidents of this night, and upon the subsequent work of Nick Carter in the criminal investigations that resulted from them.

There had been talk of corruption in the legislature, or bribery in the courts of deals that could not stand publication, all of which had resulted in injunctions and litigation that had effectually held up the execution of the vast enterprise, and made United Transit stock a football for violent speculation in the market a gridiron on which financial gladiators were fighting daily over it,— with the ferocity of beasts in an arena.

And all the while, whether in the courts, in the markets, in the columns of the daily press, in public inquiries, or private discussions, this man Fenno was the man in the limelight.

Nick Carter glanced furtively at his refined, resolute, hard-set face, as the car swung into Sixty-fourth street. A keen physiognomist, Nick saw what no layman could have discovered.

"I think I saw in one of last night's papers," he remarked, "that much depends upon a decision soon to be rendered by Judge Packard, of the Court of Appeals."

"Yes."

The monosyllable came grimly from Fenno. His brows were knit closer and he spoke without turning his head.

"When is it expected?"

"It ought to have been rendered before this."

"Do you know what occasions the delay?"

"No."

"Got any idea?"

"None. Judges, like large bodies, move slowly."

'What decision do you expect, Mr. Fenno?"

The evidence admits of only one decision," said Fenno, still grimly frowning.

"Documentary evidence, isn't it?"

"Yes, almost entirely."

"Such evidence is sometimes suppressed or destroyed."

"True."

"Or perhaps a judge may be bribed," added Nick. It is said that all men have their price."

"True again. But Detective Carter"—Fenno turned abruptly, with as ugly an eye as ever gleamed, and added through his teeth—"if a judge wearing Packard's robes were to accept a bribe in a case of this kind, I should be tempted to kill him on sight."

"H'm! That is a rash remark, Mr. Fenno, when one considers the situation in all its lights and shades, and all the possible contingencies If a decision adverse to your anticipations and interests should be handed down. and if Judge Packard were to be killed a little later, and you found yourself unable to establish an alibi—well, that remark of yours might be a chicken come home to roost. It would have serious weight with most hearers."

"Yet not with you?" queried Fenno, who noticed a subtle intonation, purposely adopted by the detective.

"No, not with me," replied Nick, smiling faintly. "I should not under any reasonable circumstances, believe you guilty of such a crime."

"Why do you say that, Mr. Carter?" Fenno bluntly demanded, almost aggressively.

"Because I can read your character in your face," Nick said simply.

Fenno's countenance, for the first time since the discussion began, lighted wondrously. With a quick, impulsive movement, he laid his hand on that of the detective, replying with much feeling:

"Mr. Carter, I thank you. I am very glad to have met you, and I hope to know you better."

"Even that may come to pass," Nick genially returned, laughing lightly.

Neither so much as dreamed what this meeting and these remarks were to bring forth in the near future. It was not in Nick's nature, however, to forget the declaration he had made. Its very simplicity added to its weight.

Before a reply could be made by Percy Fenno, as he was popularly known, Nick saw not only that they were approaching the scene of the recent assault, but also that three men were standing nearly on the spot, one of them without a hat, and another wearing a smoking jacket and Turkish fez that matched it.

"Stop here, Peters," he commanded, touching the chauffeur's shoulder.

The instructions were quickly obeyed, and Nick sprang out of the car and approached the three men on the sidewalk.

"I infer that you gentlemen live here and heard the disturbance a short time ago," said he indicating the nearer dwellings with a wave of his hand. "What has become of the victim of the assault?"

"Ah! then there was an assault?" cried the man in a smoking jacket. "I was sure I heard two reports of a revolver. I hurried into my clothes—for I was then in bed—and came out as quickly as possible. I found only two of my neighbors here, who also had heard pistol shots; but this blood on the sidewalk and in the street shows there was trouble of some kind. We were discussing whethere we would notify the police."

"I am a detective," said Nick. "I saw two men fighting here, and have been in pursuit of one of them. The other was lying in the gutter, evidently badly done up. How soon did you come out after hearing the revolver?"

"In about three minutes, I think."

"I was out here sooner than that," put in the man without a hat.

"Did either of you see or hear a carriage passing?"

"I heard it," replied the same man. "When I came out it was just turning the corner of Madison Avenue, going south. I wondered at first if the trouble was in the carriage. I knew that could not be the case, however, when I saw this blood on the sidewalk and the drops here and there in the street, showing that the injured man must have recovered quickly and hurried away."

"You did not hear the carriage stop?"

"No sir. If it did so, it must have gone on very quickly.'

"Can either of you give me any more information?"

The question brought negative replies, and Nick glanced at the blood staining the sidewalk in many places; then followed a trail consisting of a few drops here and there, which led him from the spot where he had seen the stricken man lying, out into the street and for several rods in the direction of Madison Avenue.

"H'm! Very curious," he remarked to Fenno, who had followed him, while the three men stood watching him from the curbing. "There is more of a mystery here than appears on the surface."

"You do not think the injured man recovered so quickly??"

"It seems hardly probable, yet this trail of blood indicates that he revived and hastened away. Possibly he was not as badly injured as I thought."

"That seems to be the only reasonable assumption."

'I see no other evidence here,' Nick observed, while he retraced his steps. "What there is will be effaced by the drizzle and dampness before morning. I think there is nothing more to be learned here.'

Nevertheless, Nick took the names of the three men and their addresses, and entered them in his notebook. As he was about to depart, Fenno asked agreeably:

"Will you allow me to take you home? My car will land you there more quickly than any conveyance you can obtain at this hour."

"You are very kind," nodded Nick. "Since you suggest it, Mr. Fenno, I think I will accept, hoping that some time I may repay the service."

"Don't mention it. Command me at any time." Fenno graciously replied, while they entered the car together.

ROUTED BY AN ECHO.

Story of the Most Curious Victory Ever Won on British Soil.

Did you ever heer of an army of fierce fighters that fled in terror when it was attacked by the one word, "Hallelujah!" shouted by an army that was not even in sight? The fact that the shouters could not be seen had something to do with the amazing effect of the word. The knowledge and wit of a foreigner, who knew how to utilize a curious fact in nature and a remarkable topographical formation, must be given the final credit for the most interesting victory ever achieved on British soil. It was less than fifty years after the beginning of the conquest of Britain by the Angles, Saxons and Jutes from Germany, when a small band of those who were forming the nucleus of a coming nation was on the point of being attacked by a vast army of ferocious Picts.

There were no better fighters than the Picts, and the native Britons, together with the Saxon invaders, were facing certain extermination. Then one of the foreigners, called Germanus by the Britons, told the soldiers that he would give them the victory if they would follow him. He led the way to a hollow place in the hills, on the road the Picts were using in their approach. When the scouts reported that the enemy was coming up the mountain road Germanus and his band shouted "Hallelujah!" three times in quick succession. The hills took up the echo, and the Picts thought they were surrounded by a mighty army. They turned and fled.

HINDU FLIRTING IS RARE.

There Is Little Chance For That Kind of Pastime In India.

There's less flirting per square mile in India than in any other country in the world. The glance out of the corner of the eye and the lowered lash is unknown. A Hindu woman has to dress so that it can be told whether or not she is married; it's a pretty safe bet, however, that she is. When a Hindu girl begins to edge up around fifteen without having made the leap her parents begin to spend listless, feverish nights.

By the rings in her ears and by the way she wears her hair it may be told in a Hindu woman is married and sometimes how many children she has. The best evidence that she is married is the child sitting astride her hip. When you go to lift a Hindu child its little legs automatically fly open as if you had pressed a button.

Flirting is an almost unknown pastime in India. Even the men have to let the world know if they take their wages home each week unopened. A Hindu man can't go around making innocent women believe that he hasn't a single photo on his dresser, for he has to wear a ring on his toe showing if he has ever walked down the aisle in conventional black at high noon. All a woman in India has to do to see if she is wasting her time is to glance down at the man's toes.

A Military Surprise.

This story of the Russian Grand Duke Nicholas is told by Julius West in "Soldiers of the Czar." Some years ago, during an inspection, the grand duke was standing next to the emperor, a few yards away from a group of generals. He ordered General Russky, then in command of the forces in that region, to step forward. The grand duke next ordered a private soldier to come forward and hack off the general's epaulets. "We can imagine," says Mr. West, "the dismay of the other generals as the soldier obeyed.

"'Now, cut mine off,' was the next order. The soldier did so. 'Now, put them on his shoulders.'"

It was the grand duke's playful little way of promoting Russky to the rank of adjutant general, the highest in the Russian army.

READING THE HAND.

Most Murderers, It Is Said, Show Their Characters In Their Palms.

A French savant contends that the murderer has a distinctive hand. His face may not be hideous, but the hands are and are self condemnatory. Evidence on the latter characteristic is scanty and rests upon the investigations of the French criminologists; but, as to the former, it is a fact that some of the most brutal murders on record have been perpetrated by men whose countenances habitually wore a very mild expression.

Deeming was a pleasant man to speak to until crossed, but some of the authorities who examined his hands declare his broad thumb indicated the born murderer.

The true ballheaded thumb gives to the first phalange a round, bulbous appearance. It is short, and the nail is so abbreviated as to suggest that it has been gnawed. It is embedded in the flesh, which rises on either side and beyond it.

Dumollard, a wholesale murderer, had a hand remarkable for its thickness and length of palm in proportion to the fingers. He had a significant sign, common to most murderers—namely, almost entire absence of lines in the palm, save the three principal ones—the lines of life, head and heart. These lines were very strongly defined. The line of the head—the center line extending across the palm—was violently cut by the line of life running upward from the wrist. Chiromancy interprets this to foretell a violent death. His fingers were knotty and uneven at the nail phalanges.

THE ART OF NORWAY.

It Reflects the Early Peasant and the National Character.

Long before the art of painting was practiced in Norway the Norwegian peasant, like his Magyar contemporary, had developed an art that was and still remains thoroughly national. The Norwegian peasant art, like that of other countries, is characterized by a primitive purity of color that anticipates the art of today and forms, so to speak, a connecting link that ties the present to the past. If we remember the crude vigor and bold color of this early peasant art we shall perhaps bet-

DUELS OVER TRIFLES.

At One Time Almost Any Incident Was an Excuse For a Meeting.

Duels at one time were fought for the merest trifles. Colonel Montgomery was shot in a duel about a dog. Colonel Ramsey in one about a servant, Mr. Featherstone in one about a recruit, Sterne's father in one about a goose, and another gentleman in one about a bottle of anchovies. One officer was challenged for merely asking his opponent to pass him a goblet. Another was compelled to fight about a pinch of snuff. General Barry was challenged by a Captain Smith for declining wine at a dinner on a steamboat, although the general pleaded as an excuse that wine invariably made him sick, and Lieutenant Cowther lost his life in a duel because he was refused admittance to a club of pigeon shooters.

In 1777 a duel occurred in New York between Lieutenant Featherstonhaugh of the Seventy-fifth and Captain McPherson of the Forty-second British regiment in regard to the manner of eating an ear of corn, one contending that the eating was from the cob and the other contending that the grain should be cut off from the cob before eating. Lieutenant Featherstonhaugh lost his right arm, the ball from his antagonist's pistol shattering the limb fearfully, so much so that it had to be amputated. Major Noah lost his life in 1827 at the dueling ground at Hoboken in a simple dispute about what was trumps in a game of cards.—London Chronicle.

BLOCKADE TRIPS.

Rubber Onions a Means Used by Enemy to Import Commodity.

Tumbling over the waves on her way back from a "search" came Seascraper's boat. She tied up alongside and her crew scrambled inboard along the boom.

"Bill, here's something to put in your soup," called one of them to a messmate, holding up a large onion.

"Right you are; pitch it here," answered Bill, extending a huge, work-hardened palm. Whizz came the onion, which touched Bill's horny paw, rebounded from it, struck the edge of a table, and then went bounding along the mess-deck like a ball.

"Well, I'm blowed;" exclaimed Bill, looking after it with a surprised yet understanding eye. "So that's the latest, is it? Blest if you can ever make sure you've properly overhauled them ships until you've prized open the mouths of the crew and looked down their throats with a telescope."

The alleged "onion" was made of rubber and had been brought back as a curio by one of the search party from the ship that had just been overhauled. All sorts of clever devices are adopted to try to get contraband through the British blockade. The American genius who invented wooden nutmegs gave an idea to would-be blockade runners which they have elaborated and vastly improved.

But hard war experience has taught our patrol service not to accept things as being just what they seem—no matter how guilelessly like them they may appear. In this particular case, when the vessel was boarded many sacks of onions were found among her cargo. Most succulent, oniony onions, too, they looked, and the crew opened the sacks quite confidently. However, when the examining officer picked up one of the onions at random and dropped it on the deck it bounced back into his hand—and the game was up. Except for a few real ones spread carefully at the top of the sacks, the whole of the "onions" were made of rubber. They were undoubtedly on their way to Germany through some neutral port, but the discovery of their real composition meant confiscation, and the wily Hun got none of these "vegetables" for his warbroth.

Long months spent in countering the wiles of clever tricksters have made the crews of our blockading ships the most suspicious people on earth. And not without good cause do they decline to judge by appearances only. Yet with all their astuteness they sometimes come very near to being deceived.

Harrow Boys Struck.

A "Strike" among the boys of Harrow School, who had a conscientious objection to being taught by a master who, in turn, had a conscientious objection to performing any kind of military service, ended with the resignation of the master. The master applied at the local tribunal for exemption from military service on conscientious grounds. He stated that he objected to joining the R.A.M.C. because its main purpose was to keep the maximum number of men in the firing line. The boys heard next day for the first time of these views, and steps were taken to organize a protest. When the master met his first form the next day things were very unsettled. A note pinned on his desk read: "The man who takes this class is a 'funk,'" and several boys arrived with quill pens made of big white feathers. A form of older boys who were due to take a lesson in the afternoon "cut" it in a body and sent a protest to the headmaster, in which they stated that "the boys of Harrow, one of the leading public schools, object to being prepared for the army by a master who objects to going into the R.A.M.C." The master then tendered his resignation, which was accepted.

A Non-Combatant Corps.

An army order recently issued, announces the formation of a non-combatant corps. The pay will be that of infantry of the line. Working pay and proficiency pay will not be given. Medical, and Ordnance Corps is paid at the higher rate of these corps. "Working pay" means that a soldier temporarily employed with the Royal Engineers, the Army Service, Army "Proficiency pay" is that given for professional skill in arms or mechanical or trade skill. The pay of an infantry private is 1s. a day. The lowest in the several army corps is 1s. 2d., and the highest is probably 6s. a day (motor transport). Conscientious objectors have nearly all been certified as "non-combatants" by the tribunals.

Army Grows Its Potatoes.

The army has started to grow its own potatoes. Instructions have been sent, or are being sent, from the War Office to every command, indicating the lines which should be followed.

Military requirements are very large and little more than half the usual supplies of potatoes are coming into the markets, with the result that war prices to the public are nearly doubled.

At one camp in Surrey digging operations began last week, and the seed potatoes are to be planted in a few days in rows between the huts. A number of men are being told off each day for digging.

Big Price for Photo.

At a lawn tennis tournament in New Zealand a photograph of the late champion, Captain Anthony Wilding, presented by his parents, was sold for $2,625, the money going to the Wounded Soldiers' Fund.

MURDER CASE TANGLES

REMARKABLE LEGAL MUDDLES OVER CAPITAL OFFENCES.

Third Disagreement of Jury Over Guilt of Irish Prisoner Sets a Record in British Law Courts—Only Once Before Have Three Trials Been Necessary—Two Acquittals in Celebrated Gorse Hall Mystery.

FOR the third time, the other day a jury was unable to agree as to the guilt or innocence of Samuel Hermon, indicted at Downpatrick Assizes on the charge of murdering his stepson, W. Quinn.

This sets up a new record in abortive murder trials. Never before has an accused person been tried three times for murder without a decision being arrived at, and only once before has it happened that three trials have been necessary in any one murder case.

In this latter case, however, the prisoner was found guilty on his third trial, and was duly hanged. Curiously enough, too, this series of trials also took place in Ireland, the accused being Sub-Inspector Montgomery of the R.I.C. His victim was a man named Glass, residing at Newton-Stewart.

The murder, an exceptionally brutal one, was committed in June, 1871, and it was not until August, 1873, more than two years later, that Montgomery was finally brought to the scaffold. Before he was executed, the unhappy man acknowledged the justice of the sentence and made a full confession.

Of course, there have been several cases of men having been tried twice for murder without any agreement being reached by the jury. A typical instance is afforded by the notorious Peasenhall case, when a man named Gardiner was indicted for the murder of a girl named Rose Harsent.

At the end of the first trial, which lasted for several days, the jury, after deliberating for five hours, announced that they were unable to agree on a verdict; and the same thing happened at the second trial. Whereupon the Public Prosecutor caused a nolle prosequi to be entered, and Gardiner was free.

The above case occurred in 1903. In the year 1910 a curious new record in murder trials was set up in connection with what came to be known as the Gorse Hall Mystery. A gentleman of social position and standing in the community was brutally done to death in his own house by an unknown miscreant. For this crime two men were arrested at different times, each was tried separately, and each was pronounced not guilty.

This case, as has been intimated, is quite without parallel in the annals of British jurisprudence, for it was not alleged by the police that there was any collusion between the two accused men, who were not, in fact, known to one another.

Yet another remarkable case, also unique of its kind, occurred so far back as the year 1864. A man named Harrington was stabbed to death in a public-house brawl in the Hatton Garden district of London, and an Italian named Pellizioni was arrested for the crime, tried, found guilty, and condemned to death.

Almost on the eve of his execution, however, another Italian, named Mogni came forward and confessed that he, and he alone, was responsible for the murder.

Mogni was forthwith arrested and tried in his turn, and, a verdict of guilty being returned, he also was sentenced to death, with the strange result that now two men lay at Newgate, both convicted independently, not jointly, of one and the same crime. Was ever justice in such a quandary? Clearly, if Mogni was guilty, then Pellizioni was innocent, and vice versa, for the police admitted that one knife only was used, and it was indisputable that only one fatal blow had been struck.

Eventually Pellizioni was set at liberty. At the same time the capital sentence on Mogni was remitted, and one of five years' penal servitude substituted, in consideration of his having voluntarily come forward and confessed to his crime.

Up to now one man, and one man only, found guilty of murder and condemned to death, has had his sentence quashed by the Court of Criminal Appeal. The lucky individual to achieve this unique record was a youth named Charles Ellsom, who was alleged to have stabbed to death his sweetheart, Rose Render, in a street in Clerkenwell. A jury found him guilty without hesitation, and his execution seemed practically a foregone conclusion when, at the eleventh hour, the conviction was quashed on a technical point of law by the judges of appeal, and Ellsom was set free.

Light of the Firefly.

Probably as far back as 1733 it was known that the luminous parts of fireflies, glowworms, etc., could be dried and preserved out of contact with the air for considerable periods without losing their light giving power. In late years it has been possible to prove this permanence of the light giving power for at least eighteen months. Kastle and McDermitt were able, upon opening tubes containing the luminous organs of the common firefly preserved in hydrogen or a vacuum, to obtain quite a brilliant light by simply moistening with water. The light was increased when hydrogen peroxide replaced water. However, scientists have yet to discover the firefly's secret of producing light without heat.

Beets were first found growing wild in sandy soils near the sea in Europe and western Asia. The wild beet still found there is regarded by authority as the original type. This wild beet is slender rooted and has a taste so different from the beet we know today that one must consider the first man who tasted one and thought it possible to develop had gifts of hope and imagination far beyond ordinary. The beet has been cultivated since 200-300 B. C.

Old Time Railway Travel.

Third class passenger coaches in England used to be coupled on next to the engine. The travelers came in for terrible treatment when any accident occurred. At times the engine was driven tender first, in which case frozen hands could be warmed at the smokestack. The passengers were packed, seventy of them into a truck eighteen feet in length by seven and a half in width. There was no roof and not, as a rule, proper protection at the sides.—Exchange.

A Servile House of Lords.

When King Henry VIII.'s name was spoken in his presence in the house of lords every peer prostrated himself with Asiatic servility. An entry in the records of the house gives the substance of a speech delivered by the chancellor on Jan. 16, 1541, in which the king's goodness and wisdom are extolled, and it tells us that whenever his majesty was mentioned, "which happened often," all the lords prostrated themselves, bowing to the ground as one man.

300,000 MEN AT FRONT

INDIA'S FINE SHOWING IN THE GREAT WORLD WAR.

Lord Hardinge in His Farewell Speech Before the Legislative Council at Delhi Says That There Has Been a Vast Improvement in the Indian Situation Both at Home and With Neighbors.

LORD HARDINGE'S farewell speech as Viceroy of India, delivered before the Imperial Legislative Council at Delhi, proved to be a frank discussion of Indian problems, mingled with high praise for the loyalty of the princes and peoples of the Empire. Parts of his address dealing with matters of more than local interest, are reproduced from the Calcutta Englishman:

"Turning to foreign affairs nearer home, it is pleasant to be able to state that in Persia there has been a very distinct improvement in the situation. We are on the most friendly terms with the Persian Government, who have at last realized the danger to which their country was exposed by the machinations of German and Austrian bands, and are doing their utmost to suppress them. I need hardly say that in their efforts to restore order the Persian Government will continue to have our hearty co-operation and assistance in any way that they may desire. Our friend and ally, the Amir of Afghanistan, continues to maintain very friendly relations with the Government of India, and has recently renewed his assurances to observe an attitude of strict neutrality, and we have implicit confidence in his royal word.

"On the frontier perfect tranquility has for some time prevailed, except for raids by gangs of Mahsuds in the Dera Ismail Khan district. The cup of their misdeeds is already overflowing, and the day of retribution is at hand. As soon as our preoccupation elsewhere is relieved, and when it suits our convenience, it will be necessary for the Government to take drastic steps to put an end forever to the campaign of murder and plunder that has disgraced the Mahsud tribe during the past few years.

"Except in Bengal, where, I am sorry to say, there has been a regrettable number of murders and dacoities which dim the fair fame of that province, and which every effort should be made not only by the Government, but by the people themselves, to suppress, the internal situation of India could hardly be more favorable, and it is a source of profound satisfaction for me, on the eve of my departure, to be able to say so. When I hear pessimistic prophecies or apprehensions as to the future of India, I ask myself who, twenty years ago, would have predicted the magnificent loyalty of the ruling princes and the people of India which we have seen since the outbreak of the war? None ever doubted the valor of the Indian army, British and Indian, but who would have said twenty years ago that it would be possible to send out of India to the different theatres of war army after army of brave and experienced soldiers? When it is remembered that the largest expedition that ever left the shores of India before the present war numbered only 18,000 men, and that since the outbreak of the war India has despatched about 300,000 soldiers overseas, and has contributed several million pounds' worth of war materials to the Empire, I think we have everything to be proud of the efforts that India has made, and of the situation on and inside our frontiers that have rendered such efforts possible. Many gallant men have died for their country. Of these the whole Empire is the tomb.

"During the past few months I have seen mention made in speeches at meetings in the country and in the press of self-government, colonial self-government, and Home Rule for India. I have often wondered whether those speakers and writers fully realized the conditions prevailing in dominions such as Canada or Australia which render self-government possible. I wish that some of these could visit the dominions and see for themselves. A study of the history of the dominions would show that the development of their self-governing institutions had been achieved not by any sudden stroke of statesmanship, but by a process of steady and patient evolution which has gradually united and raised all classes of the community to the level of their enhanced responsibilities. I do not for a moment wish to discountenance self-government for India as a national ideal. It is a perfectly legitimate aspiration and has the warm sympathy of all moderate men, but in the present position of India it is not idealism that is needed, but practical politics and practical solutions to questions arising out of the social and political conditions in this country. We should look facts squarely in the face and do our utmost to grapple with realities. To lightly raise extravagant hopes and to encourage unrealizable demands can only tend to delay and not to accelerate political progress. I know that this is the sentiment of many wise and thoughtful Indians. In speaking thus frankly it is far from my intention to create a feeling of discouragement, for nobody is more anxious than I am to see the early realization of the just and legitimate aspirations of India. But I am equally desirous of avoiding all danger of reaction from the birth of institutions which experience might prove to be premature. During the past five and one-half years I have steadily kept this aim in view, and as far as I am able will do all in my power to help the course of Indian progress in the future."

WAR PIGEONS.

Flying From France to Yorkshire With Messages.

The announcement of the War Office that a large number of homing-pigeons are being utilized for naval and military purposes, and that many of these have been shot at and killed or wounded when homing to their lofts by ignorant people, calls attention to the value of the work of these winged messengers.

The pigeons referred to by the War Office are, in the majority of cases, birds offered to the Government by a large number of patriotic pigeon-fanciers. Wireless, aeroplanes, and telephones have supplanted the use of pigeons for various war purposes on the Continent, and the British Admiralty, which up to a few years ago had a pigeon service to a loft in the south of England, discontinued it on account of the introduction of wireless. Lately, however, pigeons have been found rather useful for certain kinds of work, and it is well known in east coast shipping circles that the British fleet in the North Sea found panniers of trained homing-pigeons on board German trawlers at an early period in the war.

These pigeons are able to fly tremendous distances in an incredibly short period of time.

The best record for long-distance flying in Great Britain is held at present by Messrs. Vester and Scurr, of Spennymoor, in Durham, who possess a pigeon named Prince of Rome, which flew from Rome to its loft in 1913, a distance of 1,099 miles, when competing in a test race. A bird, King of Rome, owned by Mr. C. H. Hudson, of Derby, flew in the same race, and won it by flying a distance of 1,001 miles in much less time than the Durham arrival. A hen pigeon, Her Majesty, flew from Bordeaux, in the South of France, to her loft at Aberdeen, a distance of 854 miles, but took several days over the journey.

A very satisfactory feat was performed by a bird owned by Dr. Barker, of Clitheroe, Lancs, which, when liberated at Mirande, in the South of France, flew home to Lancashire and entered its loft the day following the toss.

The first English-bred bird to fly from Spain to England was a dark chequer cock named Alfonso, which in 1907 flew from San Sebastian to the loft of its owner, Mr. T. H. Burton, of Liverpool, a distance of 705 miles, homing on the third day following the toss, and thus winning the first prize in the Manchester Flying Club. Before the war birds frequently flew from Renes, in France, to Yorkshire lofts, and reached home the same day as the toss or, in bad weather, early the next morning.

A Socialist's Error.

Mr. R. B. Cunninghame-Graham, the well known English Socialist lecturer and writer, while on a visit to Morocco, had a very strong desire in Tangier one day to spread Socialistic views, a desire which proved impossible to resist, and within a very few minutes he was, therefore, addressing a motley crowd on the unhappy lot of the working man. He addressed them to the best of his ability in their own language, but soon discovered, rather to his surprise, that his audience were most decidedly unfriendly. After loudly disagreeing with some of his remarks they became somewhat threatening, and started to hustle him away. Fortunately for Mr. Graham some of his friends appeared on the scene, and he was extricated from his somewhat perilous position.

"What was wrong?" one of them asked him after they had got safely away from the irritated crowd. "What have you been saying to annoy them?"

"I was only telling them," replied the aggrieved Socialist, "that I thought an eight-hour-day was the only fair working day."

"Great Scott!" exclaimed his friend, dragging him away faster than ever. "Not one of those beggars ever works more than two hours a day in Tangier!"

How Halfpenny Newspapers Came.

The threatened shortage of paper in England brings to notice the rapidly increasing requirements in paper-making materials. Besides wood pulp, something like a million and a half tons of rags, straw, and waste-paper are also used to supply our requirements in paper.

It was the introduction of wood pulp in paper-making that so cheapened the material as to make the halfpenny newspaper possible. Indeed, it is said that the circulation of English newspapers trebled between the years 1875-1885, owing to the cheapening of paper following the introduction of wood pulp.

Quite a variety of other things are, of course, produced from wood pulp beside the paper necessary for the weeklies, dailies, and magazines. The most novel are paper saucepans, which have been used by Japanese soldiers among others, and ladies' imitation silk stockings, these being hardly detectable from the real article.

Mimics Among Birds.

Birds, from the ostrich down, are imitative. The ostrich, where he lives alone, is silent, but in a country where lions abound he roars. Why? Because for centuries, admiring the lion's roar, he gradually learned to roar himself. Among small birds, buntings imitate pipits, and greenfinches imitate yellowhammers. They seek their food in the winter together, and they gradually steal each other's calls. The jay is an insatiable imitator. Some jays will include in their repertory not only the cries of songs of other birds, but also the bleat of the lamb and the neigh of a horse. Even the nightingale imitates. In a nightingale's song it is sometimes quite easy to detect phrases he has borrowed from other birds.

A PRACTICAL DUCHESS.

£35,000 Spent on the Soldiers in Hospital.

While the Duke of Westminster has been performing deeds of heroism at the front—it will be remembered that he saved the life of his friend, Captain Francis Grenfell, of the 9th Lancers, while time after time he has carried despatches under the heaviest fire—his wife, the Duchess of Westminster, has been working indefatigably since the beginning of the war at Le Touquet, where she has established the most luxuriously-equipped private hospital for soldiers in France. And not only has her Grace devoted the whole of her time to this hospital, but she has herself spent some £35,000 upon it.

A daughter of Colonel and Mrs. Cornwallis-West, and younger sister of Princess Pless, the Duchess has long been one of the most popular women in society, noted for her beauty and accomplishments. At the same time, she was never in any sense a society butterfly, for she has always displayed a strong sense of duty and of her responsibilities. A widely-read woman, she is keen on politics, and has brought about many reforms on her husband's estates for the benefit of the poorer tenants.

The Duchess was married in 1901. She had known the Duke from his early boyhood, and they had always been devoted to one another. Indeed, as boy and girl they went through the graceful old-world ceremony of nursery betrothal. Essentially an outdoor woman, the Duchess prefers country to town life, and there is probably no more accomplished sportswoman in society today. Like her sister, Princess Pless, she has a splendid singing voice and a talent for amateur theatricals, which she has often displayed at performances organized for charitable purposes.

It might be mentioned that the Duke of Westminster is a soldier by profession. He was a lieutenant in the Royal Horse Guards, and served as A.D.C. to Lord Roberts in South Africa. As a child he received the name of Bend Or, after the late Duke's celebrated horse that won the Derby; and to his friends he is still known by that name. The Duke was a great favorite with the late King Edward, for his Grace, with no father of his own, was the first, outside his own immediate family, in whom His Majesty took an interest that was truly paternal.

Few Diamond Finds.

Much prospecting work was carried out by the different diamond companies in South West Africa, prior to the outbreak of the war, but no important diamondiferous deposits were discovered. With regard to the main claim holdings, a recent report states that except in so far as the Pomona area is concerned the richest and most accessible areas of gravel have been worked out. The deposits at Pomona, while of phenomenal richness, are shallow and of limited extent, and they have already in great part been exhausted. Vast resources in the form of low-grade material still remain, and as improved methods for recovering the very small stones are introduced a considerable quantity of stones is expected from this field.

One Man's Adventures.

A remarkable story of how a gunner was first punished and then decorated was published recently in a London newspaper. The gunner was one of the naval reservists who were called up on the outbreak of the war, and one day while on duty he saw the periscope of a submarine appear. Without an instant's hesitation he turned to his gun and opened fire, and for this act of disobedience he was placed under arrest. Subsequently the real facts came to light, and he was awarded the D.S.M. Unfortunately he lost his life when the Alcantara went down after her fight with the Grief.

The White Tower.

The White Tower, or Keep, of the Tower of London, said to be the oldest, largest, and most interesting part of the whole fortress, will, shortly be opened to the public to its uttermost depths. It was during the reign of William the Conqueror that the White Tower was built, though legend has erroneously connected its erection with Julius Caesar. Although it looks loftier, the tower is only about ninety feet high. It is very strongly built, its walls being from eleven feet to fifteen feet in thickness. It got its name through being so frequently whitewashed.

To Boycott German Goods.

A society was formed recently in various important towns in South Africa under the title of the British Patriotic Traders and Consumers' Alliance. The object of this alliance is to enlist members pledged not to buy German-made goods, to dissuade others from doing so, and to exert their influence to induce traders to support this movement, thereby encouraging trade within the Empire.

A Maori Kaiser.

Fifty armed police recently attacked the Maori Prophet Rua, who proclaimed himself to be a Kaiser, and his armed followers, in the bush. They succeeded in capturing the Prophet, and in the fight killed two Maoris, including Rua's son. Four policemen were wounded, two of them seriously. The trouble originated in the conviction of Rua for illicit sale of liquor.

Coal Owner Loses Two Sons.

Lord Joicey, who has lost a second son in the war, is probably the greatest coal-owner in the United Kingdom. His father worked in the pits, and that fact lends an added appropriateness to the family coat of arms, in which two miners' picks and two Shetland ponies stand out prominently.

A CASE OF GRENADES.

Indian Soldier Stemmed German Rush Lone Handed.

The following letter has been written to Madras, by a soldier now serving at the front. He is an Indian belonging to Pondicherry who went to France, being accompanied by his master, a French gentleman under whom he was serving while in Pondicherry. Several medals have been awarded to him for his heroic deeds. He writes:

Dear Brother,—From 25th September fighting took a different turn. Comparative calm and inactivity were followed by a furious attack. We are now fighting with more fierceness and vigor. On the 25th and 26th we advanced and gained some ground without any serious loss. All of us were quite cheerful, but later on we had to meet serious difficulties. In spite of them we continued to advance. On 21st October it was a fearful engagement. The Germans were watching very carefully and seemed to be determined to attack at our first move. Our sergeant called for four persons as volunteers ready to face anything in order to avert immediate danger. I offered myself as one of them in response to his call and jumped out of the trench with three of my comrades carrying bombs and throwing them rapidly on the Germans, who on their part were also throwing bombs very violently. But when they came out of their trenches with their guns my friends ran back to the trench, leaving me alone. As I was exposed to the continuous fire of the enemy I thought my death was certain. Then a kind of blind faith and desperate courage got hold of me and took me forward. All my bombs were exhausted and I was defenceless. Should I succumb to death without seeing the result of our attack? I asked myself. Certainly not. This idea was instinctively taking me back towards our trench. On my way I found a big case full of bombs and grenades. I sat down behind it. I began to throw quickly these bombs upon Germans who were then rushing towards me. It seems to me that I threw more than fifty bombs or grenades. In a few minutes I had almost lost my consciousness and was acting like a madman. The enemy could not stand this terrific fire. They were forced back to their trenches, and myself being unhurt I joined my comrades, who received me amidst cheers and clapping of hands. Our sergeant came and shook hands with me very cordially. This is my first adventure in life, and I hope will not be the last if life is prolonged.

Is Old Age Hereditary?

It is interesting to note that the centenarian Mrs. Arthur Mozley, who so recently celebrated her hundred and first birthday, spent her venerable birthday under felicitous circumstances—in fairly good health, and in the society of her friends, by all of whom she was warmly congratulated, and was made happy by many gifts and congratulations.

It seems that Mrs. Mozley's grandmother was also a centenrin, she being the widow of the late Rev. Arthur Mozley, who, as will be remembered by many of our readers, held livings in London and Devonshire, and who died some twenty-three years ago at Cheltenham.

The fact that two almost direct descendants of the same family have reached a centenarian age would seem to point to the inference that centenarianism is hereditary.

Certainly observation favors the idea that ordinarily longevity is hereditary.

What a comforting thought for those who are able to trace their ancestors back through long years!

Officers' Training School.

The Defence Minister of Australia has decided to establish a Central School of Instruction for selected candidates for commissions in the Australian Imperial Force. The school, which will be in the neighborhood of the Royal Military College at Duntroon, will have 400 candidates, and will be under the supervision of the staff of the Military College. This will ensure a uniform standard of instruction throughout Australia. It has also been decided to establish a non-commissioned officers' school in each district, and no non-commissioned officer will be permitted to embark with the Australian Imperial Force until he has qualified at one of these schools. Candidates for commissions will also be required to pass through the non-commisisoned officers' school.

An African Myth.

Kilimanjaro, where General Smuts is marching from victory to victory, is believed by the natives to be crowned with silver, and on this ground has been identified with the "silver mountain" which Aristotle supposed to be the source of the Nile. It was discovered by some missionaries of the British Church Missionary Society in 1848. A revolt of mountain tribes against Teutonic tyranny took place in 1892, which resulted in a disastrous defeat of the German force and the death of Baron Bulow. After that the Kaiser insisted on the withdrawal of all British missionaries from Kilimanjaro, the pretext being that their presence encouraged rebellion and diminished German prestige.

Economy.

"There is much truth in the saying of the cynic, that the economical wife is a woman who never allows a crumb to fall from her husband's table without carefully picking it up and putting it in her husband's bed," says a writer in an English paper.

Meat Exports Grow.

A remarkable increase in the export of frozen meat from the Port of Auckland is shown by recent returns. The shipments during 1915 were greater by nearly 77 per cent. than those in 1914.

FAMOUS WOMAN EXPLORER.

Death is Recorded of Widow of Late Sir Samuel Baker.

The death took place recently at Newton Abbot, of Lady Baker, widow of the explorer Sir Samuel White Baker.

She was a daughter of Herr Finian von Sass, a Hungarian, and married Sir Samuel as his second wife in 1860, accompanying him through all his subsequent travels. Her first experience of African exploration was in Baker's exploration of the Nile tributories of Abyssinia during 1860-62. For a great part of the time she suffered from ill-health, but in all circumstances she showed her pluck and readiness to be of assistance. On Bakers' second great expedition to the Albert Nyanza, 1862-1865, she had ample experience of the trials and dangers of African exploration, and was able on many occasions to render important services to her husband and to his expedition, and on more than one occasion to save it from disaster.

After the expedition reached Gondokoro, a serious mutiny broke out among Baker's followers, and his position became perilous, but his wife rushed to the rescue, though herself scarce able to stand owing to an attack of fever. Her sudden appearance on the scene created a diversion, and her cries to some of the men to stand by her caused them to waver, thus giving Baker an opportunity, of which he took instant advantage. Finally, Lady Baker may be said to have saved the situation by imploring her husband, who naturally was burning with anger, to deal leniently with the insubordinates, which he did amid loud and profuse protestations of loyalty.

Just before reaching Unyoro, both Baker and his wife were seriously ill, and their condition was not rendered any the more tolerable by the brutal treatment received at the hands of the King of Unyoro. However, all was forgotten on the discovery of the Albert Nyanza in March, 1864. Before the arrival at the lake Lady Baker received a sunstroke which so nearly put an end to her life that Baker's men had searched for a spot in which to dig her grave. But she finally recovered, and heartily seconded her husband's determination to proceed.

After some years in England Baker in 1869 accompanied the Prince of Wales on a journey up the Nile. He was subsequently appointed to command an expedition for the suppression of the slave trade on the White Nile and for the establishment of order in the Sudan, and early in 1870 Sir Samuel and Lady Baker reached Khartum in order to conduct this expedition, the narrative of which was published in his work, "Ismailia." From the first Lady Baker threw herself whole-heartedly into the preparations and the work of the expedition. At Gondokoro there was a serious engagement between Baker's troops and the Baris. After settling the affair he returned to Government quarters, where he found all hands armed and well stationed for the defence of the Divan powder magazine by Lady Baker, who was commandant in his absence. She placed rockets in readiness to fire the town the instant a volley of musketry should be heard. "My good little officer," as Sir Samuel called his wife, "had also laid out a large supply of spare ammunition, together with every gun and pistol, all of which were laid out on the table in the Divan ready to repel the attack."

Afraid to Talk.

When Lloyd George was a young country solicitor in Wales he was riding home in his dog-cart one day, and came upon a little Welsh girl trudging along so wearily that he offered her a ride. She accepted silently and all the way along, although the future statesman tried to engage her in conversation, he could not get her to say anything more than "Yes" or "No."

Some days afterwards the little girl's mother happened to meet Mr. Lloyd George, and said to him smilingly, "Do you remember my little girl riding with you the other day? Well, when she got home she said: 'Mamma, I rode from school with Mr. Lloyd George, the lawyer, and he kept talking to me, and I didn't know whatever to do, for you know Mr. Lloyd George, the lawyer, charges you whenever you talk with him, and I hadn't any money.'"

Jobs for Ex-Anzacs.

Along with the call for soldiers in Australia there is the promise that special efforts will be made to provide the men with suitable employment after their discharge from the army. Prompt steps have been taken to redeem this promise. The task of providing employment has been left almost entirely in the hands of the State Councils. So far they have had little difficulty in finding situations for the men who are available. Acting in conjunction with the Victorian State War Council, there is a Medical Committee, who deal with men who need treatment after their discharge. There are, for instance, returned soldiers who require artificial limbs or other aid, and, on the recommendation of the committee, these are provided without charge. Medical advice and general help are also given free.

Smelting in New Caledonia.

Mineral smelting works have now been established in the colony of New Caledonia, according to a recent consular report. A very considerable capital has been embarked in these and similar enterprises and in future the mineral riches of New Caledonia will be developed in a regular and methodical fashion, which will safeguard the colony against the recurrence of those economic crises which she has had to face periodically in the past. Openings for trade present themselves in respect to a number of articles, which have hitherto reached the colony from German sources.

"BIGGEST SET OF COWARDS——"

Lance-Corporal Tells How a Big Bombardment Feels.

A vivid picture of trench warfare is drawn by a lance-corporal, who, in a letter to his home at Boston, Lincs., says: "No doubt you have read of the big success we had the other day. I was in that lot, and I am glad to say I came out without a scratch, but I had some very narrow escapes. I think it is only by God's mercy that I am alive now. I did not imagine there was such a thing on earth as the lot I went through.

"The bombardment started about four in the morning, and lasted until five o'clock next day, tea time. I thought that hell was let loose. The noise of the guns was awful. They nearly deafened me. There were Jack Johnsons, whizz-bangs, trench mortars, and coal-boxes dropping all round me. If it had not been for the steel helmet I was wearing I should have got killed a hundred times over. Such terrible sights I never saw in my life before. At another time I should have died at the sight of such things. Some longed to get at the Germans although they were wounded. To make matters worse, it was raining and snowing all the time.

"When the time came for the charge things were awful. The Germans came out of their trenches waving white rags and any other things they could get, surrendering in hundreds. They are the biggest set of cowards I ever saw in my life. They cannot stand an English bayonet charge, but they make horrible work of our trenches with their guns. They levelled them down all over, but the German prisoners say their trenches were worse than ours. If they were, God help them. The German trenches were blocked with their dead and dying.

"I am writing this letter without any clothes on to speak of. I was in an awful mess coming out of the trenches—but still I am quite happy and cheerful."

Command of the Sea.

In his essay on "True Greatness of Kingdoms and Estates" Bacon speaks thus of command of the sea:

"To be master of the sea is an abridgement of monarchy. Cicero, writing to Atticus of Pompey's preparation against Caesar, saith: 'Consilium Pompeii plane Themistocleum est; putat enim, qui mari potitur, eum rerum potiri' ('Pompey's plan is clearly that of Themistocles; for he believes that whoever has command of the sea will attain the supreme power); and without doubt Pompey had tired out Caesar, if upon vain confidence he had not left that way. We see the great effect of battles by sea; the battle of Actium decided the empire of the world; the battle of Lepanto arrested the greatness of the Turk. There be many examples where sea-fights have been final to the war; but this is when princes or States have set up their rest upon the battles. But this much is certain: that he that commands the sea is at great liberty, and may take as much and as little of the war as he will, whereas those that be strongest by land are many times, nevertheless, in great straits. Surely, at this day with us of Europe the vantage of strength at sea (which is one of the principal dowries of this kingdom of Great Britain) is great; both because most of the kingdoms of Europe are not merely inland, but girt with the sea most part of their compass; and because the wealth of both Indies seems in great part, but an accessary to the command of the seas."

A Willing Worker.

An amusing incident is told which took place in one of the occupied districts of Belgium where the German occupier doles out potatoes to such of the starving people as agree to work for him. One recipient presented himself before the German authorities and declared himself quite ready in return for a supply of potatoes to work for the Germans and only for them. He seemed quite decided and genuine in his offer of work.

"Then you are quite willing to sign the declaration?" asked the German officer.

"Yes, quite willing."

"And what is your trade?"

"I am a grave digger," replied the Belgian stolidly.

Revenge!

An interesting discovery was made a few days ago, when a resident in the Eastern Counties picked up in a meadow what appears to be a message dropped by one of the Zeppelins that took part in a recent raid. It was in the form of a piece of pasteboard, on one side of which were the words, written in pencil, "Vengeance for L19," with a signature underneath. On the reverse side were some words in German which were so indistinct as to be undecipherable.

Meredith's Daughter-in-Law.

Mrs. Margaret Meredith, whose choral ode will be performed at the Kingsway Hall in aid of wounded soldiers, is a daughter-in-law of the great novelist, George Meredith, and daughter of John Maclean, the engineer associated with De Lesseps in the construction of the Suez Canal. Her son has won the Military Cross.

Scotland is Rich.

"Scotland has rarely, if ever, possessed in the hands of its wage-earning people so much ready cash, says the Glasgow Herald. Glasgow is revelling in gold. Ask the shopkeepers. Ask the directors of our places of public entertainment. Ask the publicans themselves.

Tallest Privy Councillor.

Mr. John Xavier Merriman, statesman, orator, economist, farmer, surveyor, and last Premier of the Cape Colony before the South African War, was born in Somersetshire and went to South Africa at the age of eight. He is the tallest Privy Councillor in the Empire.

WORK FOR BLIND MEN

BRITAIN PREPARES TO COPE WITH GRAVE PROBLEM.

Training of Sightless Veterans of the War is Now Going on at St. Dunstan's Home, Where Men Are Being Taught Various Trades Within the Scope of a Blind Man—Stenography Proving a Big Success.

WHAT shall we do with our blinded soldiers after the war? To merely give them a pension to supply their needs will not suffice; it is necessary that they be taught some occupation, not primarily because they will thus become self-supporting, but because they will be far happier and more contented if they have occupation to take their minds off their great affliction. In England a noble work is going forward at St. Dunstan's Home with the object of training the blind soldiers to earn a living. It is under the direction of Arthur Pearson, the famous publisher, himself a blind man. Mr. Pearson became blind from overwork, just as Joseph Pulitzer, founder of the New York World, became blind. But he did not become helpless or hopeless. To an interviewer not long ago he said that he doubted if he had ever experienced the joy when he had his sight that he has felt on occasions since when he has overcome some obstacle. With his great energy and organizing ability Mr. Pearson makes an admirable director of the St. Dunstan's Home.

The object of the home, as mentioned, is to give the blinded soldiers trades. Several are taught, and it is astonishing the number of trades in which the lack of sight is no insuperable obstacle to efficiency. Typewriting, for instance, is a blind man's job, and Mr. Pearson says that the typewriter was originally invented to provide the blind with a means of writing. One of the typewriting instructors at St. Dunstan's can take dictation in Braille shorthand as fast as one wishes to speak, and then will transcribe it on the typewriter more accurately and swiftly than many first-class stenographers with normal eyes. It used to be said that it required three years to teach a blind man a trade, but Mr. Pearson says that most of them can be trained in a very few months well enough to become self-sustaining.

Another occupation particularly well adapted to the blind is that of masseurs. Even masseurs with good eyesight depend upon their sense of touch instead of their eyes; and Mr. Pearson remarks that in Japan it used to be illegal for any but the blind to follow this occupation. Masseurs are now in demand at all the War Office hospitals, and as a result of the war we may expect a greatly-increased demand for the services of men trained in this business. Carpentering is another trade that the blind can learn, and, of course, while highly skilled carpenters cannot be made out of the blind, they can become very fair rough carpenters who can make certain articles of patterns that can be repeated. Shoe repairing is also a blind man's trade, and several first-class cobblers have been turned out of the institution. When the cobbler is trained he is helped to a shop, and in the window a card announces that the proprietor is a soldier blinded in the war. He does not have to wait long for trade.

Poultry farming is being taught to several men at St. Dunstan's, and with this trade is enough carpentering to enable the victim to make his own coops and runs. A sergeant who left the institution not long ago is able to distinguish among the various breeds of poultry by his sense of touch, and he can also truss and dress fowls quite well enough to make an attractive display on the poulterer's stand. He mixes the food perfectly, selecting it from the different bags by his sense of touch. It is said that since blind men move more deliberately than those who have all their senses, they are less likely to frighten the fowls, and this is an advantage not to be lightly disregarded. Others are being trained as telephone operators for small exchanges. The indicators are made to scale and the blind learn very quickly to distinguish their identity by the sound each makes as it falls.

Mr. Pearson says that he believes blind men will make excellent divers. He says that they would do better work in muddy waters than others, for, being accustomed to working in the dark, they would find nothing abnormal in their task. Darkness handicaps a sighted man, but light and darkness are the same to the blind. Contrary to general belief, great delicacy of touch does not follow almost automatically upon blindness. It has to be laboriously acquired in very many cases. Moreover, though the blindness may be equal, some blind men have a far better sense of direction than others. Mr. Pearson mentioned the case of a blinded Canadian officer. He can rise from a chair, turn round several times, and then throw a cigarette into a fireplace without error nine times out of ten. Some of the blind have a very keen sense of when they approach an object with which they might collide. Others, again, blunder like a sighted man in a dark room. Edward Marshall, who visited the St. Dunstan's home, was struck by the fact that there was no despair to be seen on the faces of the blinded heroes. On the contrary, most of them were smiling. They do not grudge the terrible price they have paid for their citizenship, and are looking forward cheerfully and confidently to many happy, useful years to come.

FARM LABOURERS WANTED.

The Western Provinces of Canada have experienced an acute shortage of farm laborers for spring seeding and summer work this year.

Even when times were normal throughout Canada, it was always necessary to bring from twenty-five to thirty thousand laborers from eastern points for the harvest season.

As voluntary enlistments have been very heavy, and inasmuch as a successful crop is predicted by the experts, grave fear is being felt along the lines of the Canadian Northern Railway on account of the difficulty experienced in obtaining labor, which means steady work and good wages for all who visit in the districts served by the C.N.R.

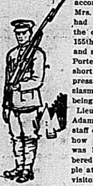
MILITARY MATTERS AT BARRIEFIELD HEIGHTS

BELLEVILLE PEOPLE AT CAMP



Many visitors were at the camp on Sunday afternoon. Among the guests of the 155th Battalion were Mr. E. Guss-Porter, K. C., M.P., of Belleville, accompanied by Mrs. Porter. They had dinner with the officers of the 155th on Sunday and afterwards Mr. Porter made a short address, expressing his enthusiasm in what was being done by Lieut.-Col. M. K. Adams and his staff of officers and how the battalion was being remembered by the people at home. Other visitors to the battalion over the week-end included Mrs. Stewart, Mrs. Hammond, (wife of the transport officer,) C. Gladney, Marmora, brother of Captain Gladney, who went overseas with the 80th Battalion and Dr. and Mrs. Potts and son, Stirling. All were given a hearty welcome to the camp and made a thorough inspection of its many interesting points.

BOMB AND GRENADE SCHOOL

The course for officers at the School of Bombing last week was a most successful one with an excellent syllabus having been carried out by the instructors. The trenches that were started last year have been partly reconstructed and this work being done by the class which is just returning to the units taught the nature of this all important work. The instructors gave the system as used at the front by the Allied armies and those of the enemy. The grenade branch of the work was gone in as much as a seven day course would permit and the elementary part of a course such as this was given to those in attendance at the school. The grenade and bombing work generally would require weeks of study to make a man proficient but the basic principles were taught last week. This includes the material contents of the bomb and the making of them from jam pots or any tins that may be handy.

MUSIC BOX FOR 156TH

The 156th Battalion has an organ or at least a musical instrument that can be telescoped into a box no larger than a suit-case. The wonderful music box was presented by a Brockville resident to Capt. Hagar, chaplain of the battalion, and it will shortly be installed in the recreation tent of the battalion.

NOTES

As soon as the 93rd Battalion has left camp the artillery in the city will be brought to Barriefield.

Lt.-Col. Putman, Captain Noble, Lieut. Wallace, of the 155th Battalion, spent the week-end at their homes.

Dr. Pots and wife motored from Stirling yesterday to visit friends in the 155th Battalion.

Mr. Clarence Gladney, brother of Captain Gladney of the 80th Battalion, came down from Marmora Sunday to visit friends in the 155th Battalion.

Arrangements are being made to bring officers and men to Barriefield camp from Camp Borden, Petawawa, and other places for the purpose of taking the course in military cooking.

Lieut.-Col. Johnston, officer commanding the 93rd Battalion, returned yesterday from Peterboro', where he went to turn over the stores and equipment of the 3rd P. W. D., to Maj. W. W. McCullough of Wellington.

MUSIC AND DRAMA

COOP AND LENT'S CIRCUS WILL EXHIBIT AT BELLEVILLE

What promises to be the big amusement event in the history of Belleville is the visit of "Coop and Lent's" All New United Monster Shows on Wednesday, July 19.

Much time and care have been spent in securing acts and novelties suitable to blend into a superb and harmonious program and judging from advance rumors, the performance which utilizes 3 rings and 2 stages is of unusually remarkable excellence and entirely free from the repetition so often seen with tented organizations.

The aerial acts, riding, racing and hippodrome features are of an exciting and thrilling nature, calculated to arouse the wildest enthusiasm and unqualified appreciation of spectators.

There is also a large and valuable Menagerie of wild animals as well as a well stocked and interesting field museum of ancient and modern curios.

THE MARTYDOM OF NURSE CAVELL TO-MORROW

The Martyrdom of Nurse Cavell, a realistic and inspiring drama depicting deeds of bravery and sacrifice as suffered by England's Joan of Arc, Nurse Cavell, is announced for exhibition at Griffin's Opera House to-morrow and Thursday evening. The first part of the story shows her as a young girl in the wholesome surroundings of an English home. Then the scene shifts to Belgium, where as a trained nurse she receives an appointment in the Brussels Hospital. Then the war comes and the others flee the country. The English nurse in Brussels hospital refused to leave her patients when Brussels was captured by the Germans. She stayed to nurse wounded soldiers—friends and foes alike. But she couldn't resist the appeal to help her friends escape to France. Spies betrayed her. "I give my life willingly for my country. I have no fear or shrinking. I have seen death so often it is not strange to me," was her last message. Besides the above offering a selected program of varied photoplays will also be exhibited.

"THE LIVING DEAD" AT GRIFFIN'S LAST NIGHT

If anyone is fearful that "Davey," Mr. Golden's Secretary in "The Iron Claw" was to allow his record to be easily snuffed out by Legar's bandits, he should get another think. They entombed the casket, with suitable ceremony, with Davey's form apparently resting quietly in death, but when representatives of Legar were sent to "enquire further" they were met with a spectacular scene that drove them hilter-skilter from the cemetery. Legar himself, attempting to investigate, became engrossed in trouble, sending him up a ladder, followed rapidly by the "Laughing Mark," who is ever on his track. This, the fourteenth episode of "The Iron Claw," is most realistic, and one must view the situations to understand the progress of the great Photoplay. Margery Golden, the heroine of the story was at her best last night. Other attractive films, including "Evidence," featuring Edwin August and Lillian Tucker, a 5-part film depicting high life and its inner doings were particularly fine. Throughout this story was engrossing, many situations calling for expert acting. The programme in its entirely will be reproduced this evening.

FLORA PARKER DEHAVEN SHINES AT THE PALACE

Flora had everything that a heart could desire but love. This principal ingredient to the making of life's joy was lacking. So Flora started after it in a matter-of-fact way, under the captron of "The Madcap," a 5-part photoplay worth seeing. The situations revealed by the story occurred in Europe and America, and as one follows its course much is to be acquired in the form of wordly knowledge—and Flora obtained it without a doubt. Glimpses of Normandy and Trohville were brought near, and in the annual fetes the spectator was particularly interested. The play is well set, the surroundings engaging, and the acting superb. Miss DeHaven as the charming daughter of a deceased captain of industry, with ample means, was certainly well up in her part. Other catchy films were also thrown upon the screen. See them all tonight.

Celebrated Their Golden Anniversary

Mr. and Mrs. Wallace Root, of Toronto, Formerly of Belleville Observe Important Event

The Toronto World of July 10th contained the following, which will prove of interest to local readers in that Mr. and Mrs. Wallace Root were for years residents of Belleville, and highly respected. The Intelligencer will join with many of its readers in wishing the esteemed couple many more years of happiness. The World sketches their golden anniversary as follows:

On Monday, June 26, at the residence of their daughter, Mrs. L. J. Miller, 737 West Bloor street, Mr. and Mrs. Wallace Root celebrated their golden anniversary. Mr. and Mrs. Root, formerly of Belleville, were married on June 26, 1866, by the late Rev. Septimus Jones, and have resided in Toronto for the past 18 years. The happy couple were the recipients of many beautiful and useful presents, also a purse of gold. Among the children out of the city who were present were: Mr. and Mrs. Jas. Root of Chicago, Mrs. A. A. Le Blanc and family, Mrs. Bedford from Grand Rapids, Mich., Dr. and Mrs. A. C. Plaud, and Mrs. Baker, Wheeling, W. Virginia. The children residing in Toronto are: Mrs. F. B. Darragh and Mrs. H. Gemmell.

Mrs. Root was the youngest daughter of the late James Mellor of Blackburn, Manchester, Eng., who was a gunner on the celebrated battleship "Victory," the flagship of Admiral Lord Nelson, and who was present when Nelson received his death wound.

Alkali in Soap Bad For the Hair

Soap should be used very carefully, if you want to keep your hair looking its best. Most soaps and prepared shampoos contain too much alkali. This dries the scalp, makes the hair brittle, and ruins it.

The best thing for steady use is just ordinary mulsified cocoanut oil (which is pure and greaseless), and is better than the most expensive soap or anything else you can use.

One or two teaspoonfuls will cleanse the hair and scalp thoroughly. Simply moisten the hair with water and rub it in. It makes an abundance of rich, creamy lather, which rinses out easily removing every particle of dust, dirt, dandruff and excessive oil. The hair dries quickly and evenly, and it leaves the scalp soft, and the hair fine and silky bright, lustrous, fluffy and easy to manage.

You can get mulsified cocoanut oil at any pharmacy, it's very cheap, and a few ounces will supply every member of the family for months.

THE TURF

BLUE RIBBON MEETING

What promises to be the greatest racing in the history of the trotting turf will be seen during the thirty-second annual Blue Ribbon meeting of the Detroit Driving Club at the state fair grounds, July 24 to 29. To insure contests in every mile the racing will be on the three-heat pan, in other words, every heat is a separate race. This will eliminate the laying-up or waiting until the pacemakers are exhausted. The only way a horse can win is to be among the first four in every heat and there will be just three heats to every race.

So popular is this system with the horsemen of the country, that the entry in the fixtures exceeds that of any other year, and the final payment finds a larger list of eligibles than in the past.

The Merchants' & Manufacturers' stake of $10,000 is unusually attractive, for one of the lot has shown 2:03 ability and half a dozen are better than 2:05 trotters, so the record for the stake is certain to be lowered if conditions are favorable.

In the Board of Commerce stake of $5,000 for 2:06 pacers are at least ten that can pace in 2:04 or better and one that has been in 2:02.

The same speed characterizes all of the events. On Monday, July 24, there are three purse races for $1,200 each. The Board of Commerce stake is the Tuesday feature, three-year-olds also racing that day. The M. & M. is set for Wednesday. Two stakes and the free-forall are on for Thursday and four fast purse events for Friday.

Weber's band, the most famous traveling organization in the country, has been engaged for the week, and time between heats will be filled with a musical program of superlative excellence.

A GREAT DAIRYMAN.

Late Senator Derbyshire was a Builder of the Cheese Industry.

Senator Daniel Derbyshire, who died in Brockville a few days ago following an illness of ten days of paralysis, was one of the most interesting figures in the agricultural world of Ontario.

Born in the heart of one of the great dairying districts of Ontario, at Plum Hollow, Leeds County, December 11, 1846, Mr. Derbyshire was connected during the greater part of his life with the industry which he saw rise to immense proportions. So intimately and to such an extent was he associated with the dairying industry that he became known as the "Eastern Ontario Cheese King," being for twenty-five years President of the Eastern Ontario Dairymen's Association.

What the late Speaker Ballantyne was to the dairy industry of Western Ontario, "Dan" Derbyshire was to the dairy industry of Eastern Ontario. For about a quarter of a century the latter was President of the Eastern Ontario Dairymen's Association; he might almost be said to have been the association during that period. In physical stature, in personality, in enthusiasm, he was the dominating figure of all the annual conventions held during the period of his Presidency. Even after laying down the office of President he was a regular attendant at the annual convention, and always presided at one session at least. His work was not confined to the more or less spectacular duties of convention week. He went up and down the concession lines and urged the formation of syndicates for the building of factories, and largely as a result two-thirds of all the cheese for which Ontario is famous is made in the territory within the limits of his activities. Mr. Derbyshire was also chiefly instrumental in inducing the Eastern Association to take up factory instruction work, and, when the Department of Agriculture assumed the task later on, he loyally aided in making the new departure a success. His activities were not confined, either, to the purely factory end of the cheese industry. Everywhere he preached better cows, and corn as the basis of feeding the cows. In short, to Dan Derbyshire more than to any other one man Ontario is indebted for the pre-eminence she has long enjoyed in cheese-making.

He entered the business as a manufacturer in 1874 at Athens. He came to Brockville in 1879, and two years later became local representative of A. A. Ayer & Company. He served as Councillor and was Mayor of Brockville in 1889 and 1890. He was a big man in more ways than one, standing six feet four inches in his stocking feet. After unsuccessfully contesting the riding of Brockville in the Liberal interests in 1891 and 1900, he was elected in 1904, and three years later resigned and was called to the Senate, Hon. G. P. Graham being returned in his stead by acclamation.

Senator Derbyshire was a ready wit, also an authority on agricultural matters in the House and Senate. He was Grand Master for Ontario of the Oddfellows in 1909-1910, and was also a prominent Mason of several degrees. He was a prominent member of the Baptist denomination.

WEIGHT AND LONG LIFE.

Don't Get Too Heavy After You Pass the Age of Thirty.

Recent investigations show that the longest life and best health are not to be found among those of average build at any particular age. On the contrary, it is discovered that in those at the younger age who are slightly over weight and at the older ages among those who are distinctly under weight the longest life and best health will be found.

Overweight above thirty odd years is a definite disadvantage to health. It means staleness, lack of elasticity, clogged up tissues and lack of the power of adaptability to invading germs.

Men from twenty to twenty-four can be accepted as healthy and for a long life fifty to sixty pounds above normal. Less excess weight is permissible between twenty-five and fifty and increasingly less as you go up. There are one-third more deaths among men between sixty-five and eighty who are fifty pounds to sixty pounds fatter than they should be for a given height.

At the ages of thirty-four to forty-five from thirty-five pounds to forty-five pounds heavier weight than a man should be doubles his risk of death. For any one above thirty-five who is thirty pounds too obese life insurance companies hereafter will consider poor risks or raise their insurance rates.—London Ideas.

The Miserable Moors.

The lives lived by the Moors are without perhaps any exception the most precarious and miserable that can be imagined. The poor man is thrown into prison for sums he never possessed and can never pay, the rich to be squeezed of all he possesses, while those only can hope to escape who are members of families sufficiently powerful to arouse the fears of the local governor should he attempt extortion and not sufficiently powerful to stir up the avarice of the sultan.

Even the governors of the provinces suffer themselves as they make others suffer, for just as they squeeze the agriculturist and the peasant so are they in turn squeezed by the sultan and his viziers, and should they fail by constant presents to maintain a good opinion at the court they can expect only imprisonment and often death.

LAND FOR EX-SOLDIERS.

Jesse Collings Discusses Future of Men After the War.

That indefatigable friend of British farmers, Mr. Jesse Collings, in a letter to The London Times regarding the meeting at the Colonial Institute to consider the future of soldiers after the war, says:

"Sir Rider Haggard as the representative of the Institute is about to investigate the means by which our soldiers who return after the war can be settled in the Dominions oversea. Lord Curzon rightly stated that at the end of the war the men, after their military experience and life in the open air, will not be inclined to return to the factory, workshop, or the office stool, and that it was the duty of the Government to provide an outlet for the employment of such men.

"These sentiments are excellent and true, but the conclusion which Lord Curzon arrives at is very disappointing. It contains a suggestion that the returned soldiers should be sent overseas and settled on Colonial lands. It is certain that there will be no sufficient employment for them in the industrial world in England. The only outlet for them is on the land.

"If an investigation similar to that about to be made by Sir Rider Haggard were made with regard to the situation at home, it would be found that there is profitable employment for all the returned soldiers in cultivating the uncultivated and waste lands in our own country. There is something repulsive in the idea that after these men have fought so bravely in defence of the nation they are to be deported oversea, while the land of their own country is crying aloud for their service.

"The immense outlay required for sending these men away would be largely, if not quite, sufficient to pay the expenses of settling them at home.

"On these land settlements returned soldiers and their womenkind would be engaged in rearing strong and healthy families, and, what is most important, would be solving the question of our food supplies and adding to the economic and industrial strength of the country.

"Lord Curzon rightly states that after the war there will have to be a readjustment of the basic principles on which our public life now rests. That readjustment will, no doubt, involve an industrial and a social revolution, of which no one can foresee the nature and extent

"It is certain, however, that our effete land system will be overhauled. That system, which exists in no other country in Europe, gives the control of nearly all the land—a prime necessary of life—into the hands of a comparatively small number of persons. It permits the land to be held up and put to inferior uses or to no use at all. No thinking man, with any foresight, can conclude that such a system, in view of the needs of the nation can continue for long.

"In view of the action, which is certain to take place, by bodies of men who hold extreme views with regard to the land—nationalizers, Socialists, and others—it becomes more than ever wise and necessary to create a numerous rural population, which at all times and in all countries has proved itself to be an element for safety and restraint in the economy of a nation. Our rural districts are already enough depleted without taking steps to turn them into a desert.

"I am as anxious as anyone to strengthen our Empire; but surely it is a poor way of doing it by weakening its heart and centre."

Fleets in the Baltic.

The correspondents of the Petrograd Telegraph Agency has forwarded an account of the visit to the British Grand Fleet of a party of Russian publicists, from which the following is an extract:

At the luncheon on the Iron Duke Sir John Jellicoe, after proposing the health of the Emperor of Russia, made the following speech: "It is a great pleasure to me to welcome you to the Grand Fleet. I am sure we are very obliged to you for coming so far at such a season, and I hope you will take away pleasant memories of your visit. We know and appreciate the great work done by the Russian army. It saved us at the beginning of the war. It is saving us now. I need only refer to the splendid victory of the Caucasus army at Erzerum.

"The Russian navy, too, has won our admiration by its efficiency. Nothing would give us greater pleasure than to be able to fight side by side with Russian sailors against our common foe. It would be difficult for us to go to the Baltic, but not impossible, and I hope the day may come when our ships will engage the enemy together. Let me raise my glass to the health of our Russian guests, associating with it that of the Russian army and the great Russian fleet."

Kitchener's Threat.

An amusing story which does not seem to have got into print yet is being told about Lord Kitchener. It concerns a famous poster, issued some time ago, with an appeal in his handwriting for more men and yet more men.

He had, of course, to write the original appeal from which the facsimile on the poster was made, and he did so, and it went to the department concerned with such things. His writing was found to be too small for poster-size reproduction, so the sheet was sent back to him with a cautious explanation in this sense, and the request would he rewrite it. He did, but again it was too small, and he wrote it a third time, and with that third draft sent that grimly humorous message:

"Don't ask me to write this again, for rather than do it we'll have conscription!"

Berlin says the Russian drive has failed to stay the fall of Verdun. Apparently the German people are being told that Verdun has fallen.

Studying Timber Problems.

The laboratories situated on University street, Toronto, in which extensive work is now being carried on towards the better knowledge of Canada's timber resources has a total staff of about thirty, with a technical staff of about twenty-four, eight of whom had enlisted up to date. In addition to the division of administration there are four technical divisions; timber physics, timber tests, pulp and paper and food preservation

Timber physics is concerned with the study of the physical properties of wood, such as weights, moisture contents, conditions of growth, minute cell structure, and so forth. All the microscopic and photo-micrographic work of wood and pulp fibres is done in this division. In the division of timber physics the mechanical strength of wood is determined to give architects and engineers a basis for design when structural timbers aroused. Now that the Dominion Government and certain private corporations in Canada have decided to use only Canadian wood in construction, reliable tests are valuable in pointing out the relative merits of Canadian woods. Tests have been made on Douglas fir for structural purposes; they have also been made on timber suitable for the mines of Nova Scotia.

WILL DRAW BRITISH FIRE

Deutschland Submarine Will be Treated as Warship by the Entente Allies

WASHINGTON, July 12.—(Special.)—British naval vessels will fire upon the German submarine liner Deutschland "at sight." It will be treated as a warship regardless of any ruling the United States Government may make. a British warship, the State Department will make no inquiries.

These facts were made plain at the British Embassy and at the State Department to-day.

The British and French Embassies protested to the State Department that the Deutschland is a warship and therefore is entitled to none of the rights enjoyed by a peaceable merchantman.

At the British Embassy the position of the British Government was outlined as follows:

In view of the methods of the submarine warfare employed by Germany in the present war, the Deutschland must be considered as a war vessel.

Bulgarian Aid Asked by Kaiser

Urgent Request to Send Men to Galician and Trentino Fronts

ROME, July 12.—Kaiser Wilhelm and Emperor Francis Joseph have sent an urgent request to the Czar Ferdinand that he despatch Bulgarian troops to the Galician and Trentino fronts to help check the Russian and Italian offensives.

This information was received from Geneva to-day.

A delegation of Austro-German military and diplomatic officials arrived at Sofia on Sunday, carrying the request. They pointed out to the Bulgarian ruler that continued successes for the Russians and Italians would bring Roumania into the war, and that Bulgaria would then be squeezed between the Roumanian army on the north and the allied forces in Greece and crushed.

Czar Ferdinand replied that the withdrawal of Bulgarian troops for service in Galicia or on the Italian front would invite an immediate attack by the allies from Saloniki. He promised, however, to submit the appeal to the Bulgarian General Staff.

CRUSHED TO DEATH UNDER YARD ENGINE

MONTREAL, July 11.—Pietro Destrafano, 40 years of age, an employee of the C.N.R. Company was caught by an engine in the yard of the Queen City Oil Company yesterday morning and so badly mangled that he died before the arrival of an ambulance. He is alleged to have stepped from one track to another, on which an engine was advancing in his direction.

The case of George Narbonne, son of Constable Narbonne, who was drowned at Longue Pointe, was disposed of as accidental drowning. The body of the man, who was 33 years of age was recovered by his father, who grappled without interruption for eighteen hours. The victim leaves a wife and five children.

IRISH FUSILIERS STRONGLY IN FIGHTING EVIDENCE

Penetrate Enemy's Trenches and Do Heavy Fighting — Many Germans Were Killed While Our Casualties Were Light—Several Crowded Dugouts Successfully Bombarded

Canadian Press Special.

LONDON, July 12.—The full text of the War Office announcement says: Since the commencement of the battle the enemy has received large reinforcements. Yesterday and last night strong attacks were made against several points of our new position. Except in Mametz wood and Trones wood, in both of which localities the Germans regained some ground, all these attacks were beaten off with loss to the enemy. Between the main battlefield and the sea we have been actively engaged in bombarding the enemy's positions and raiding his front lines. South-east of Loos a party of Irish Fusiliers penetrated the enemy's trenches and remained twenty minutes, during which heavy fighting took place. Many Germans were killed while our casualties were light. Opposite Hohenzollern redoubt two companies of Seaforth Highlanders fought their way into the enemy's trench, killing and wounding many Germans and destroying one machine gun. Several dugouts crowded with the enemy were successfully bombarded and some prisoners taken.

Nickel Shipments Closely Watched

German Submarine Cannot Obtain Product of Canadian Ore—Some Made in States

OTTAWA, July 12.—The arrival of the German submarine Deutschland at Baltimore and the announcement of the captain that he intends to return to Germany with a cargo of nickel and rubber has aroused interest afresh in the question of the export of nickel from Canada.

The Canadian Government and the British authorities are thoroughly satisfied that no Canadian nickel ore has reached the enemy or will reach the enemy, but special steps probably will be taken to see that the Deutschland does not start on its return trip with any nickel from Canadian ore.

The closest possible tab is kept by the Canadian officials on what ore is shipped out of Canada, how much is refined in the United States, and where it goes when refined.

Every order is closely scrutinized. The books of the company are gone over by accountants of the Government at regular intervals. The Canadian authorities work in harmony with the British officials.

However, it is pointed out that the idea that all nickel manufactured in the United States comes from Canadian ore is erroneous. Nickel is manufactured as a by-product of other ores. One big American firm manufactures 25 tons of nickel a month as a by-product from ores which do not come from Canada. It would be quite possible for the German submarine to secure a nickel cargo in the United States from sources other than Canada.

EDITOR IS DROWNED

BROCKVILLE, Ont., July 11.—Word has been received here of the drowning in the Rideau near Westport of W. B. Adams, editor and proprietor of the Westport Mirror. He was fishing from a boat in company with James Conley, another resident of Westport, when the craft upset. Adams was about forty years of age and a member of a prominent family of the village. He is survived by his widow and three children.

ALLIES RE-OCCUPY TRENCHES AND TAKE EIGHTY PRISONERS

Canadian Press Special.

PARIS, July 12.—Afternoon statement—On both banks of the river Somme last night passed quietly.

In the Champagne district we captured some prisoners in the course of a small operation near Cernay. Also we delivered several successful surprise attacks upon trenches of the enemy between Maisons de Champagne and Le Calvaire to the north of Ville sur Tourbe. On the left bank of the river Meuse two attacks upon one of our trenches at Dead Man's Hill failed completely under our fire.

On the right bank a night counter-attack delivered by our troops east of Fumin Wood made it possible for us to re-occupy a portion of territory taken yesterday by the enemy. We took eighty prisoners, including one officer.

In Lorraine district, sector of Reillon, we drove the Germans back from certain trenches where yesterday they secured a footing.

BRITISH LOSE TRONES WOODS

Heavily Reinforced Attack by Enemy Gains Ground — Beaten off Elsewhere

Canadian Press Special.

LONDON, July 12.—The Germans, heavily reinforced, delivered strong attacks against the British on the Somme front last night. They gained ground in Mametz wood and Trones wood. An official announcement issued here this afternoon says all the German attacks were beaten off except in Mametz and Trones woods.

Rag Pickers Led by Hun General

Army Order States That Economy on Battlefield Will be Essential

LONDON, July 12.—Special—Judging from a recent German army order which has just reached London, every German General will soon be leading an army of rag-pickers. The time is not far distant when the German soldiers will use their bayonets to prod rubbish heaps in search of rags, waste paper, empty cans and old bottles.

The order states that economy on the battlefield will henceforth be essential. German soldiers must exercise minute care as rag-pickers, sand bags must be lost, under heavy penalties.

All leather and metal articles must be carefully collected; the dead, both friends and enemies, stripped of boots and clothes. Dead bodies will no longer be allowed to be wrapped in canvas. The whole tenor of the order suggests that the German shortage of war material is becoming serious.

Hungarians in A War Panic

Alarm Spreading Throughout The Country—Violent Scenes in Chamber

MILAN, July 12.—Special—The situation in Hungary continues to be grave owing to the news of the uninterrupted Russian advance.

Panic reigns on the Bukowina frontier. The alarm is spreading over the country and tumultuous scenes are occurring in Parliament. An Hungarian informant sends accounts of violent scenes in the Hungarian Chamber of Deputies.

By her popular political discontent Hungary, where the Opposition and Independent parties are fomenting an anti-Austrian movement, is giving great concern in Vienna, where it is feared Hungary may at any time make a desperate effort to withdraw from the war.

SUBMARINE IN ENGLISH PORT

Fires Thirty Round of Shrapnel One Woman Killed by The Bombardment

Canadian Press Special.

LONDON, July 12.—The English port of Seaham Harbour was attacked last night by a German submarine. About thirty rounds of shrapnel were fired.

One woman was killed by the bombardment. One house was struck by a shell.

NEW YORK PARALYSIS EPIDEMIC IS EXTENDING

Thirty-Two Deaths and 195 New Cases Were Reported Yesterday

NEW YORK, July 12—Special—Following an increase yesterday of 100 per cent. in the deaths from infantile paralysis, Mayor Mitchell has called a conference for to-morrow morning of the medical advisory board of the health department, heads of some of the city departments, and a number of prominent medical scientists to discuss the epidemic.

The Mayor issued a statement last night, in which he said everything that was known to science was being done to check the disease, that there are ample facilities to take care of all cases, and that the epidemic has not yet reached a stage where it is alarming.

There were 32 deaths from infantile paralysis and 195 new cases reported by the health department yesterday. The new cases reached a new high record all over the city, while Brooklyn cases numbered 155.

The total for the epidemic yesterday reached 1,278 cases and 270 deaths.

CONCLUSION OF WHITBY CONFERENCE

Dr. Chambers, Veteran Missionary From Turkey, Interested Hundreds

WHITBY July 12.—Special—The Missionary Conference held at the Ontario Ladies' College concluded its eight-day session here last night. One hundred and seventy-five students have been in attendance.

Rev. Dr. W. N. Chambers for nearly forty years a missionary in Turkey, spoke to hundreds of persons on the college lawn on Sunday evening, when he gave a brief history of the Turkish and Armenian races. He has been through three massacres. He resided for twenty years in Erzerum, and for seventeen years in Adana, and his knowledge of conditions in the Turkish Empire is very thorough and extensive.

The teachers and some of the students left yesterday for further conferences at Knowlton, Que., and Wolfville, N.S.

COST OF LIVING IS AGAIN ADVANCING

OTTAWA, July 12.—The cost of living—away from home at least—took a jump for a good many to-day when a popular Sparks Street lunch boosted the price of meat orders by five cents.

A meat order which formerly retailed at 15, 20, 25 or 30 cents has taken a nickel jump in each case. The old 25-cent meal, consisting of "an order of meat," potatoes, pie and tea has become a thing of the past. Chinese and other restaurants boosted meat orders some time ago.

Beans are becoming more scarce daily and although there has been no advance in the price in restaurants, one is predicted. This favorite article of food is now selling at $5 per bushel, and what for years was a reliable standby, threatens to become a luxury to be indulged in only by the wealthy.

GERMANS CLAIM TO HAVE ADVANCED POSITIONS CAPTURED 2,145 MEN

Canadian Press Special.

BERLIN, July 12.—German troops on the right bank of the River Meuse yesterday pushed forward their positions to a point nearer Souville and Laufee works, taking 29 officers and 2,106 men, says and official statement issued to-day by German army headquarters staff.

PROTEST OVER THE ARREST OF YOUNG MISSIONARY

TORONTO, July 12.—(Special.)—E. W. Jackson, aged twenty-five, late of Tillsonburg, Ont., who for some time past has been working in the interests of the Canada-India League, an organization which has for its objects the promotion of a greater sympathy and a better understanding between the various races of the British Empire, was taken into custody by the Toronto police yesterday noon on a charge of assisting in conducting a seditious campaign. Jackson volunteered a few months ago to go to India for the league. His mission was to study Indian life, and to induce educated Indians to come to this country. At Hong-Kong he was refused a permit to enter India, the Imperial police remarking that none but officials and missionaries might go at this time. He was held in custody for four days, it is alleged, without charges being made, and departed on the next steamer for Vancouver. At Victoria he was again arrested, but after examination by Immigration authorities, was released. He arrived in Toronto on June 20.

Yesterday at noon the police entered the headquarters of the league, 293 Huron street, and arrested Jackson again, later returning with a search warrant for seditious literature.

"The league publishes a journal in Toronto, called 'Canada and India,' which is purely for furthering the objects of our organization and promoting a better and fuller understanding between the two countries," said Mr. A. W. H. Joyner, Secretary of the league, to The Globe last night. "The charge that Jackson is seditious is a flimsy pretext for prosecuting a Canadian citizen, who never was away from Ontario before. The question as to what right have these people to interfere with our work will, we hope, be thoroughly investigated."

NEW CANADIAN GASOLINE CORPORATION

TORONTO, July 12.—(Special.) — Under the name of the Gasoline Corporation of Canada a company is being organized in Canada for the manufacture of gasoline by the Greenfields process. Schorman, chief engineer of the British American Oil Company, Toronto, and H. T. Bush, President of the Standard Ideal Company, Port Hope. The company will have a capital of $3,000,000.

BIG SHRINER SPECTACLE IN STREETS OF BUFFALO

BUFFALO, July 12.—Special—The most brilliant spectacle of the forty-second annual session of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine occurred to-day, when an Imperial division was escorted from headquarters to the theatre where the opening session of the Imperial Council was held. In the escort were 10,000 Nobles, 3,000 of them garbed in gay costumes of the Arab patrols.

George K. Staples, Past President of the Ismalia Temple of Buffalo, and Chairman of the General Committee of the session, presided. Mayor Fuhrmann welcomed the Shriners, and J. Putnam Stevens of Portland, Me. delivered the annual address as Imperial Potentate of the Order.

Rule Ireland With Firm Hand

British Authorities to Maintain Big Garrison in Island— To Preserve Order

LONDON, July 12.—Special—In the course of a discussion in the house of lords yesterday on the report of Baron Hardinge, head of the commission which investigated the Irish rebellion, and in which several members urged that Augustine Birrell, former secretary for Ireland, ought to have been censured as the one responsible for the Sinn Fein outbreak, Lord Lansdowne outlined a system for the provisional government of Ireland when martial law is abolished there and until a new government can be established. An Irish secretary with a capable military adviser would be appointed. There would also be a new chief of the Royal Irish Constabulary, who would be a well-known soldier.

To Keep Strong Garrison

Nobody would be allowed to carry arms without a permit, and there would be no grants of amnesty. A garrison would be maintained in Ireland strong enough to preserve order, and special safeguards woulds be created for the loyalists in the south and west.

Lord Lansdowne said he understood the Sinn Fein movement was waning, and that he had anticipated the passage of a bill embodying the Irish settlement would occupy considerable time.

Mrs. Margaret Claire Beutinger, his wife, has been arrested and locked up charged with homicide. Friends and neighbors attribute the shooting to domestic troubles. After killing her husband, the authorities say, Mrs. Beutinger calmly walked from her home to the office of the chief of police and said: "I've finished him." Beutinger had five children. He was known to be wealthy.

IN & ABOUT THE CITY

DECORATED TRENTON

On Tuesday the staff of the Thompson Furniture Co. were in Trenton decorating the town for the Battle of Boyne celebration being held there today.

ORANGEMEN AT TRENTON

The members of the local Orange Lodges, accompanied by Johnstone's Pipe Band, left this morning for Trenton where they took part in the Orange Celegrations held there.

BATHING WITHOUT SUITS

The police apprehended a number of boys, yesterday afternoon, bathing without suits. As this is an infraction of the law, the boys were warned by the police to wear either suits or trunks while in bathing.

NO SIGN OF IMPROVEMENT

By the way—some one told us that the new road bed from the upper bridge to the G.T.R. station was to be a dustless affair. This morning a Mill street business man, standing in his store door as an auto sailed by, became so inoculated with dust that he couldn't even swear. What's the matter with the improvement?

TURN AT A STREET CORNER

A local automobile expert informs us that a law has been passed forbidding auto drivers from turning at any old place on the street, the street corners or junctions being the proper turning point. Last evening we noticed the manipulator of a big car turn on Front street, in Front of Ritchie's store, in a harum-sacrum manner, taking little notice of who might be within striking distance. If automobilists were fined each time they deliberately violated such laws the city treasury would not go begging for ready cash.

A GOOD TOP-COATING

As a finishing touch to Victoria Avenue, a liberal coating of tarvia, over which is spread a layer of crushed stone, extending the entire length of the thoroughfare, was completed Tuesday, giving an admirable surface for traffic. This, we are informed, costs five cents per yard, but as it does away with the need of watering, the expense is fully offset. We can now travel this popular avenue without getting our eyes filled with dust.

MILITARY MATTERS AT BARRIEFIELD HEIGHTS

ORDER FOR FARM HELP

The original order from Ottawa dealing with farm furloughs, only dealt with furloughs for "plowing and seeding," but a more recent order deals with furlough to take part in hay harvest. In many cases commanding officers when recruiting in country places, promised that they would allow their men to assist in farm work during harvest, until they were really under orders for overseas, and some commanding officers feel that ajart from a special order that it is only fair to allow the men to go, although it affects the work of a battalion very seriously. The men have just got nicely into platoon, company, and battalion drill, and a mnoth on the farm will change the military character of any soldier.

SOME HOT WEATHER

Yesterday was the hottest day the soldiers have experienced since the camp opened. There was no cool breeze blowing from the lake yesterday, and the sun poured its rays down on the well dried, and almost baked commons, until something approaching tropical conditions prevailed. A few men were carried to the field hospital suffering from heat exhaustion, but with judicious handling of the men on parade, they were able to stand the work of the day without many asking to be excused from duty.

JOHN BULL RETURNED.

John Bull has returned to the fold of No. 5, F.C.C.E., after being absent without leave for some weeks. This dog—it is a dog, and a bulldog at that—belongs primarily to Lieut. Slinn, assistant camp engineer. It, however, threw in its lot with No. 5, F.C.C.E., when Lieut. Slinn was a member of that unit. Some of the men of Queen's Battery, not content with one mascot donated by the Engineers, had to steal John Bull and take him away when they left for the front. Since then he has been a minus quantity until discovered in the lines of the 93rd Battalion last week.

TWO BROTHERS AT THE FRONT.

One of the most anxious members of the 93rd Battalion to get overseas is Pte. Carpentier, who sent two brothers away with the 59th Battalion. He is more than anxious to go to join them in the big fight and to revenge the death of a cousin, who was killed at the front some time ago. His home is at Peterboro.

BATTERIES TO CAMP FRIDAY.

The four batteries of the Depot Artillery Brigade now located in the city will be coming into Barriefield camp on Friday of this week,, taking up the infantry lines near headquarters.

There are now about 22 officers and 240 men in the brigade, made up as follows: 72nd (Queen's) Battery, 54 men; 73rd, 75 men; 74th, 46 men, and 75th, 51 men, and Ammunition Column of 14 men.

NOTES.

Captain Charles F. Wilson has been appointed medical officer of the 83rd Battalion.

Monday a bombing and trenching class was started for officers, noncoms, and men of the 154th, 155th and 156th Battalions.

Two lieutenants, 2 sergeants, 2 corporals and 26 men from each of the three battalions will be entitled to take the present bombing and trenching course.

The Kingston Red Cross Society have notified Capt. J. M. Wilson, Assistant Director of Dental Services, that khaki coats for dentists will be presented in the near future.

Captain Adams who was drowned near Westport on Saturday, is a cousin of Lieut.-Col. Adams, officer commanding the 155th Battalion.

Barrister F. E. O'Flynn of Belleville, accompanied by Mrs O'Flynn, visited Captain Doyle of the 155th Monday and were the guests of the officers of the 109th to lunch.

The 154th Battalion is not short on mascots. First place goes to "Teddy," the bear, that won renown for himself as the pet of the St Lawrence Canal patrol. The Russian wolf hounds from the Czar Nicholas kennels at St Petersburg are also very popular. There are also several dogs, crows, etc., as pets of the men.

Sudden Death Of Kate Lally

Passed Away at Kingston Last Evening While Undergoing Operation For Tonsolitis

The sad news was received in the city this morning of the death, at Hotel Dieu, Kingston, last evening, of Miss Kate Lally, a well-known and popular young Belleville lady, while undergoing an operation for tonsilitis. Miss Lally, who was supposed to be physically strong, anticipated favorable results, and no fear was entertained by the attending physicians. Her death, therefore came with a severe shock to her numerous friends and companions.

She was the only daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Lally, and resided on Queen street. She was about 25 years of age. Surviving are three brothers, Rev. Thomas Lally, of Montreal, Joseph, of Indianapolis, Ind., and John of this city. The body was brought here this morning for interment. Further particulars will be given later.

C. N. R. COAL SHEDS DESTROYED BY FIRE

A $15,000 Fire at Rideau Junction Gasoline and Coal Burn Fiercely

OTTAWA, July 11.—Fire completely destroyed the Canadian Northern coal chutes at Rideau Junction last night. The loss is estimated at $15,000. Two box cars which were on the siding waiting for freight were burned to the wheels. Alex. Leblanc, a workman who tried to stem the course of the fire when it was discovered in the gasoline house, was badly burned about the face and shoulders. His condition is serious, but not dangerous.

Towards eleven o'clock the fire was discovered in the gasoline house. Four deafening explosions following in rapid succession gave the first hint of its presence. The building burst into flames and threw a blanket of fire right across to the coal sheds. This, a completely wooden affair, housing hundreds of tons of coal, was soon a roaring blaze.

CANNIFTON

June 30th—

Dear Mrs. Bradshaw:—

I am directed by the Quarterly Board of the Canifton circuit to contain to you and family the condolence of the Board in the sad bereavement which has removed from our midst your beloved husband. We all miss him, so diligent and interested as he ever was in the welfare of the cause of religion amongst us. Very seldom indeed was his pew vacant on the Lord's Day, and in the Fellowship and Class meetings he was seldom absent. His counsels as a class leader were always earnest and well calculated to encourage the hope of a better life. His passing was so suddednd an unexpected that it shocked his brethren, as it brought sorrow to his family. We may assure you of our prayerful and earnest sympathy. And we think we may speak likewise of the entire circuit. We wil not dwell upon the thought of a blessed rest, but assure you of the hope and reward of a better and more blessed life. And of the reunion some day which known no tears nor parting.

Sincerely yours,
J. H. BRENTON,
Recording Steward.

If Stomach Hurts Drink Hot Water

A Physician's Advice.

"If dyspeptics, sufferers from gas, wind or flatulence, stomach acidity or sourness, gastric catarrh, heartburn, etc., would take a teaspoonful of pure bisurated magnesia in half a glass of hot water immediately after eating, they would soon forget they were ever afflicted with stomach trouble, and doctors would have to look elsewhere for patients." In explanation of these words a well known New York physician stated that most forms of stomach trouble are due to stomach acidity and fermentation of the food contents of the stomach combined with an insufficient blood supply to the stomach. Hot water increases the blood supply and bisurated magnesia instantly neutralizes the excessive stomach acid and stops food fermentation, the combination of the two, therefore, being marvelously successful and decidedly preferable to the use of artificial digestents, stimulants or medicines for indigestion.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Chicago, July 10, 1916.

Dear Sir:—Among brother Tom's papers I found written in his own handwriting, the enclosed, which I fancy he intended using as the basis of an editorial in his little paper. It strikes me as a pretty good one, and you may care to publish it.

With best regards, believe me
Sincerely,
Maurice D. Lynch.

JOHN J. BULL, ESQUIRE.

Unpublished editorial of Thomas F. Lynch, 1915:

There's a short, squat-figured, pugnacious looking gentleman commonly known as John Bull, whose home is the Wide Wide World, and whose children and children's children spread his language in every clime. Mr. Bull is a sort of Big Brother to the Universe, and a Cousin to most of the older planets. His estate is bounded by the winds and washed by each of the seven oceans, and his legions tread wherever the treading is worth while and where it is not worth while John's sons soon make it so.

At the present time Mr. Bull is engaged in defending and avenging a small brother, from the wickedness of a large and brazen bully who undertook to put the little fellow out of business. When Mr. Bull started in to punish the coward who jumped on his little brother, several of his sons hurried to his assistance and they, too, are engaged in putting the kibosh on the Big Guy who tried to clean up their little Cousin. John also is being helped by some other brothers, and taking it all around it is, as one gentleman from Dublin expressed it, "the prettiest scrap I ever see."

Mr. Bull is slow to anger, but he fights hard and long once he starts, and when he gets good and ready, this time, the world is going to see as fine an exhibit of bull dog tenacity and stick-to-itiveness as ever was shown at any time. John is gathering strength rapidly and is equipping himself thoroughly, and when he feels that he is "there" he is going to show a grade of class that will astonish his systematic opponent so greatly that there will not be a single "Hoch" left in a gutteral throat with which to express anything.

Mr. Bull is essentially a seafaring man, all his life having been spent on or near the water, and he understands the water as no one else does. On this account many people have thought John was out of his element on land; but those who thought that have not read very carefully the history of Africa, of India, of Asia, of Europe or of the world in general, because if they had they would know that Mr. Bull is some landsman as well as considerable sailor.

John has quite a number of men fighting in France and Belgium, and they do fairly well on land—nobody has mussed them up very much so far. To be sure John has met with some reverses, but he expected them; but, while saddened by them, was not stopped by them. He will meet still other reverses, but he will keep on going just the same, and when the other fellows are ready to quit and to call loudly for peace, Mr. Bull will just about have made up his mind that he is beginning to feel right for a good tussle.

John has fought for as much as seven years at a stretch. One time he fought for one hundred years, but, of course, that was a long time ago, because there haven't been any hundred years lying around lately; but it just goes to show what Mr. Bull has done when some one stepped on his corns.

We are not too optimistic when we say that John J. Bull is going to repeat in this engagement, the successes that have been his in other entanglements, and we're with him to the last notch in our thought gauge, and we're pulling for him for all we're worth. Go it, John J.!

THIS IS THE 682ND DAY THE BRITISH EMPIRE HAS BEEN AT WAR WITH GERMANY.

MORE BUSINESS THAN USUAL.

The financing of a great war is wastefully, economically unprofitable, with a tendency to price-inflation. But that it is permeated with unexpected, and we might add unsuspected, possibilities is evidenced in the mammoth business revealed by Britain's most recent trade returns.

To those skeptics who have pictured Great Britain grovelling in bankruptcy at the conclusion of the present conflict, authentic trade tabulations will come as a surprise. The term quoted at the beginning of hostilities, "Business as usual," may appropriately be amended to "More business than usual."

According to figures compiled by the Board of Trade, Great Britain's imports in the month of May were $419,000,000, an increase of $61,000,000 over those for May 1915; in the same month her exports and re-exports combined were $302,500,000, an increase of $70,785,000 over those for May 1915. Imports were larger than in any preceding month in the history of British trade, with the one exception of March, as would be expected, with the outlay upon war increasing steadily. But it is surprising to find that exports not only have been rising faster than imports, so that the adverse balance tends to diminish, but that exports actually have grown to new proportions. Thus, exports in May 1916 were 39.87 per cent. greater than in May 1915, and 11.8 per cent. larger than in May 1914, before the war. Re-exports have increased in the same way. They were 7.39 per cent. greater last May than in May 1915, and 6 per cent. greater than in May 1914. These figures do not contain one very important commodity, namely, British credit, of which the exportation has enormously risen.

Great Britain is the economic mainstay of the Allied cause. She holds the purse, and with it the power to command the world's goods, especially food. By reason of her natural wealth in materials and her great industrial equipment she is able, besides, to produce for the uses of war a surplus of manufactures above her own requirements. Her exports and re-exports, therefore, include both goods produced out of her own resources and supplied directly to her Allies and other goods bought outside in the markets of the world for their account. France is a very large customer for British coal and iron, her own resources of such raw material having been conquered by the enemy. The other Allies, being industrially inferior to France, require from Great Britain enormous quantities of manufactured things.

The aggregate of Great Britain's trade with her Allies may be measured by the entry of "advances" in the balance sheet of war expenditures. This item represents not money loaned to her Allies, but almost entirely goods supplied to them on credit. At the end of March last it amounted to $1,840,000,000. In the fiscal year it would be increased by $2,150,000,000, according to Chancellor McKenna's 1917, if the war lasts till then, Great Britain's Allies will owe her more than $4,000,000,000 for goods obtained on credit. And that will be roughly one-quarter of Great Britain's aggregate expenditure for war. She is merchant, producer and banker. By March 31, 1917, she will have invested in the war, out of the proceeds of taxation and loans, domestic and foreign, the incredible sum of $16,500,000,000, of which her share will be roughly $12,500,000,000. The balance will be represented by "advances to her Allies," which they will be obliged to repay. At the close of the war, therefore, England will be what she was before, the largest creditor nation in the world. She is in the position of a banker who takes his credit from one place and puts it out in another. She is liquidating her credit in United States by sales of American securities and lending the proceeds to her Allies—to France, Russia, Italy and her own colonies. The liquidation of her U.S. investments, plus her borrowing, is approximately offset by the debts her Allies are contracting with her for war supplies.

And, at the same time, trade with non-belligerents is resuming. That is very interesting. In May, British exports to China and South America notably increased. The revival of orders from South America for fabrics was for British industry a particularly gratifying development. Having increased her exports of nearly everything but ships, at the same time checking in every possible manner unnecessary imports, by prohibitions, duties, etc., the adverse trade balance is being steadily diminished. In the first five months of 1915 it was $803,000,000; in the first five months of 1916 it was $738,000,000. Roughly, at the present time Great Britain's excess imports over exports is balanced by advances to her Allies, so that she is keeping even, or perhaps a little better. This is the extraordinary proof of her capacity for business.

An English paper announces that in the near future Queen Marie Amelie, at her quiet home at Richmond, one of London's most picturesque and charming suburbs, will celebrate the thirtieth anniversary of her marriage to the late King Carlos. She was born in exile, the daughter of the Comte de Paris, at Twickenham-on-the-Thames. After the war of 1870 her father was permitted to return to France, but fifteen years later the entertainment given at his home in Paris on the occasion of her engagement to the then Crown Prince of Portugal, led to so remarkable a demonstration of affection and loyalty on the part of the Loyalists, and of general public sympathy, that the Republican Government again became alarmed and once more drove the Comte and his family into exile in England, and he died without ever again seeing the land of his birth.

Hamilton Herald: If anyone ever doubted that the campaign of abuse against the Shell Committee and Sir Sam Hughes was inspired by partizan malice and had for its main object the discrediting of the Borden Government, that doubt ought to be dispelled by the speech delivered to a Liberal gathering at Markham on Saturday by E. F. B. Johnston, K.C., the chief counsel (nominated by Sir Wilfrid Laurier) for the Opposition in the Meredith-Duff investigation. The main subject of Mr Johnston's address was the disclosures made at this investigation. But he showed that he was incapable of viewing the matter from any other point of view but that of the party politician, and an unscupulous one at that. Evidently he is interested in the fuse charges and the doings of the Shell Committee only in so far as they afford ammunition for use against the Borden Government.

A stern tragedy was reported by a war correspondent the other day, based upon the testimony of a Yorkshire soldier boy. A German suddenly, as this lad approached to make him a prisoner, he pulled the detonator of a bomb and raised it to throw. "I put my bayonet right close to him so sudenly that he was terrified and forgot to fling his bomb," the Englishman told the correspondent, and then added: "Then a queer kind of look came into his eyes. He remembered the bomb was going off. It went off and blew him to bits." It is a grim illustration of what Shakespeare has called the "sport" of having "the engineer hoisted with his own petard," and this is only one of the minor horrors of the present war.

Montreal Gazette: When Mr J. A. MacLean, chief liquor license inspector, returned to Winnipeg from Brandon and reported that there had not been an arrest for drunkenness in either the Brandon or Virden districts since June 1st, he was asked by Attorney-General Hudson what was to be done with the prisons. Mr Hudson, of course, was speaking jocularly. There will still be use for the jails, even in prohibition districts. The grafters and the common robbers, the men of violence, the frauds and others who make up the criminal ranks, are not going to stop their wickenness just because the licensed bars have closed their doors.

Current Comment

After all, it was very inconsiderate of the Allies to start a concerted offensive just when the Kaiser had a United States presidential election on his hands.

Press despatch says London, Ont., may sue the Government if the troops are taken away from there. Somebody ought to start an agitation to change the name of London, Ont., to something German.—Ottawa Free Press.

"The war is finished!" "The war is finished!" German soldiers are reported to have cried when taken willing prisoners by the French. In this they were a little previous. They might have been nearer the mark had they added to their cry that popular phrase, "Not yet, but soon."

"A nation must win respect as an individual does," says W. J. Bryan, "not by carrying arms, but by an upright, honorable course that invites confidence and ensures goodwill." Yes, indeed; that is the way Belgium won the respect of Germany, and the way Mr Bryan won the respect of the people of the United States.—Mail and Empire.

It is strange that Canadians of French extraction do not realize the fact that France has fully as much at stake as England. How can men with French blood in their veins view with apathy the splendid industrial and military efforts of France. It will be singular if the gravity of war issues does not make the French-Canadians forget considerations of pride and prejudice.—Rochester Democrat and Chronicle.

Three hundred thousand strong she's marching in,
Night and morning, to the ammunition shop;
For Tommy's Thomasina means to win;
She'll see that British arms come out on top.
You will find her if you look
For the milliner, the cook,
Or that pretty, pigtailed flapper of mamma's;
Lady Vere with jewels many,
And the girl who hasn't any,
The Bachelor of Arts, and she who "chars."

Each leaves what she loves best—the home she made—

Coal mining rights of the Dominion, in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, the Yukon Territories, the North-West Territories and in a portion of the Province of British Columbia, may be leased for a term of twenty-one years at an annual rental of $1 an acre. Not more than 2,560 acres will be leased to one applicant.

Applications for a lease must be made by the applicant in person to the Agent or Sub-Agent of the district in which the rights applied for are situated.

In surveyed territory the land must be described by sections or legal sub-divisions of sections and in unsurveyed territory the tract applied for shall be staked by the applicant himself.

Each application must be accompanied by a fee of $5 which will be refunded if the rights applied for are not available, but not otherwise. A royalty shall be paid on the merchantable output of the mine at the rate of five cents per ton.

The person operating the mine shall furnish the Agent with sworn returns accounting for the full quantity of merchantable coal mined and pay the royalty thereon. If the coal mining rights are not being operated, such returns should be furnished at least once a year.

The lease will include the coal mining rights only, but the lessee may be permitted to purchase whatever available surface rights may be considered necessary for the working of the mine at the rate of $10.00 an acre.

For full information application should be made to the Secretary of the Department of the Interior, Ottawa, or to any Agent or Sub-Agent of Dominion Lands.

A FATAL BARGAIN
OR
THE MAN WHO DARED FATE
BY
NICHOLAS CARTER

Author of the celebrated stories of Nick Carter's adventures, which are published exclusively in the New Magnet Library, conceded to be the best detective tales ever written

CHAPTER III.
An Emergency Call.

"The heel of a man's boot—this is a very insignificant clew to start with, Chick, if I were inclined to investigate last night's affair."

It was on Monday night, in the month of October, that the assault occurred. It was about two o'clock of the following day that Nick Carter, having just come in from lunch, made the above remark to his chief assistant, Chick Carter, in the business office in the detective's New York residence.

While speaking, Nick took from his desk the boot heel found in the tunnel the previous night, and regarded it with rather sardonic amusement.

it with rather sardonic amuse

'A bootless bit of evidence, so to speak," laughed his assistant, knocking the ashes from his cigar.

"That's right Chick, in two senses," Nick smiled. "In my opinion, however there will be more before there is less."

"There couldn't be very much less, Nick," Chick dryly declared. "If a detective can win out with only a boot heel to start with—well he might do as much with a single hair, an eyelash, or even an old toothbrush."

"I believe your story."

"You did not recognize the victim of the assault, I think you said?"

"No I did not."

"Nor his assailant?"

"No," said Nick, with a headshake. "I could identify him, however. I shall long remember the look on his rascally face when that train came rushing down on us. I saw it plainly in the glare of the headlight.

"He must have escaped from the tunnel undetected.

"Yes, or we should have received a report to the contrary."

"Do you think of looking deeper into the affair?"

"Not at present, Chick."

"It seems hardly worth while. Midnight assaults are too frequent in New York to warrant very serious attention."

"This one was out of the ordinary. however, and something will soon turn up to prove I am right. That's why I say there will be more evidence before there is less."

"What do you expect?"

"I am not expecting anything in particular. I am only waiting."

"But on what do you base your opinion?"

"On several facts which some might consider insignificant," replied Nick. "First, the desperate determination of the crook to make his escape. He put up as ugly a battle for liberty as any mortal man could have waged."

"You think he had some very powerful incentive?"

"Yes. Something far more important to him than mere personal freedom, even assuming that he may have feared that he killed his victim. He was resolved to escape, Chick, or die in the attempt."

"Yes I judge so, from what you've told me of the encounter."

"Now, what was his motive for the assault?" Nick went on discursively. "It was not revenge, nor any personal grievance, or he would have taken a less hazardous time and place. Nor was it ordinary robbery, for it is safe to assume that he could not have robbed his victim before a blow was struck, and I am sure I saw the first blow and all that followed, and that he had no opportunity to rifle his victim's pockets. Yet he certainly got something he was after, which was in part, I think the occasion of his desperate efforts to escape."

"He feared losing it again, having secured it at such a risk."

"Precisely."

"Did you see him get anything?"

"I saw him stop over the fallen man for an instant, just before he fled, but I could not see what he did. Moreover, I know he had something in his hand, or hanging around his wrist, during my brief fight with him in the tunnel. I could not tell what it was, however."

"You had other business just then?" Chick dryly observed.

"Yes, rather," Nick nodded. "Now, here's another point: I was positive that the man I saw in the gutter was insensible, if not dead. It is utterly absurd, then, the idea that he could have recovered and walked away in less than three minutes. Yet that is according to the testimony of three men who reached the spot as soon as that after hearing the pistol shots which occurred almost immediately after I had a momentary look at the man on the ground. I ran across the street after his assailant, and directly in front of a hack that came around the corner from Park Avenue. In my opinion, Chick, the victim of the assault, whether dead or alive, was taken away in that hack.'

"But how do you account for the trail of blood in the street, as if the injured man had gone that way? The spots of blood could not have fallen from his wounds to the pavement, if he was in the hack."

"That is very true," Nick admitted. "But a few drops might have been scattered here and there from the window of the hack by one of its occupants, some provided earlier and contained in a bottle, assuming that he wanted to have evidence that the wounded man had departed without assistance."

"Well, yes, that might be," Chick thoughtfully said. "But one of the three men told you he heard the hack passing, yet did not hear it stop."

"He might not have heard it stop if he was hurriedly dressing, or on his way downstairs," Nick reasoned. "He stated that the carriage was just turning the corner of Madison Avenue when he came out of his house. Now, Chick, it wouldn't have taken a hack, moving as rapidly as that was when I saw it, three minutes to reach the avenue. The natural conclusion is, then, that it stopped for a few seconds."

"It certainly does appear so."

"Now take the two shots that were fired from it," continued Nick. "I inferred at the time that they were fired at the rascal I was after. I am now convinced, however, that they were aimed at me, with a design to prevent my overtaking and arresting the crook."

"You think that the persons in the carriage were his confederates."

"Exactly."

"By Jove, that may have been the case."

"Which would further indicate that they had some serious reason for stopping to pick up the body of his victim."

"That's logical, surely."

"Hence," concluded Nick, "there was more doing last night than a mere case of assault. There was greater knavery afoot than appears on the surface. A carefully arranged plot was being executed, you may safely bet on that."

"Did you have this opinion last night?"

"Yes, after hearing the testimony of the three men."

"You did not so inform them?"

"Not by a long chalk," said Nick. "The publication of my views might alarm the crooks and make the doubly wary. Let them think they have turned their knowish trick, as designed, and they will be less guarded. I'll get in my work later, if I see any further occasion. As I said before, something may turn up sooner or later that will give us a clew to the identity of one of the men, or to— Ah, here's Patsy."

The latter was another of Nick Carter's detective force, a bright, keen-eyed fellow whose native shrewdness had been only developed under Nick's careful training. He entered while the detective was speaking, tossing his hat upon the table and crying a bit excitedly:

"Gee whiz! there isn't a thing doing in Wall Street to-day."

"What's the trouble," asked Chick.

Trouble enough. Talk about wonders—this Percy Fenno's the ringtail roarer of the whole bunch."

"What has he done to-day, Patsy?" inquired Nick.

"Done?" Patsy echoed. "He has knocked United Transit down to twenty-eight off sixteen points from last night's closing. The Street has gone wabbly. The Exchange looks like a den of wild beasts. Two small banking houses that are long of the stock have made assignments, and it's said there are more to follow. It's even hinted that Damon, Dale & Smith, who are known to be Andy Todd's floor brokers, are getting groggy under the awful drubbing."

"Andrew Todd—he was projector of this combine, and is now vice president of the corporation," said Nick. "A secondary position, yet it's long odds that he is the big finger. He's a shrewd fellow, with a tremendous backing, and one who knows how to cover his tracks. Fenno may throw a shoe if he plunges too heavily against this man. Todd has the Ironclad National Bank to draw upon, and, unless I mistake the man, he'll fight Fenno to a standstill."

"Well there's an awful round on at this stage of the scrap," Patsy emphatically declared. "No one stock ever rattled the Street in this way. It looks like the days of a panic."

"It will be a good thing," growled Nick, "if Fenno can queer this scheme and prevent—— See what that is, Chick."

Chick sprang up to answer a telephone call. The bell had interrupted Nick and was ringing noisily.

Of all overworked women probably the housewife is the hardest worked. She has so much to attend to, with very little help. Her work can be lightened if she knows the value of system and she should try and take a short rest in the daytime. A physician who became famous almost around the world, Doctor Pierce, of Buffalo, N. Y., the specialist in woman's diseases, for many years practiced medicine in a farming district. He there observed the lack of system in the planning of the work.

If it is a headache, a backache, a sensation of irritability or twitching and uncontrollable nervousness, something must be wrong with the head or back, a woman naturally says, but all the time the real trouble very often centers in the organs. In nine cases out of ten the seat of the difficulty is here, and a woman should take rational treatment for its cure. The disorder should be treated steadily and systematically with Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription.

For diseases from which women suffer "Favorite Prescription" is a powerful restorative. During the last fifty years it has banished from the lives of tens of thousands of women the pain, worry, misery and distress caused by these diseases.

If you are a sufferer, get Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription in liquid or tablet form to-day. Then address Dr. Pierce, Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N. Y., and get confidential medical advice entirely free.

◆

A Dramatic Situation.

Beau Brummel was once sitting at a table with one Bligh, who was known to be insane. The Beau, having lost a considerable stake, affected, in his farcical way, a very tragic air and cried out, "Waiter, bring me a flat candlestick and a pistol!" Upon which Bligh, who was sitting opposite to him, calmly produced two loaded pistols from his coat pocket, which he placed on the table, and said, "Mr. Brummel, if you are really desirous to put a period to your existence I am extremely happy to offer you the means without troubling the waiter." The effect upon those present may be easily imagined at finding themselves in the company of a known madman who had loaded weapons about him.

Probably So.

"No, Harold," said the sweet young thing after listening to his proposal, "I am very sorry if you have misunderstood my feelings toward you, but I can never be anything but a sister to you."

"Oh, that's it, is it?" said Harold as he dusted off the knees of his trousers. "Then I suppose that sissyfied simp I saw you flirting with at the dance last night is my future brother-in-law."

THE CALL OF CANADA.

The Late C. C. James Warned Canadians to Prepare for After War.

The late C. C. James, who was, in many respects, the Sir Horace Plunkett of Ontario, recalls in "Canada's Future"—a symposium just published by Macmillans of Toronto—an interesting event of just a century ago, when a band of Irish settlers from county Wexford, among whom was his own great-grandfather, arrived in this country and settled in what was then Upper Canada. "To-day," he writes, "the descendants of that small group of Irish farmers are numbered by thousands." Then began the big movement westward from the British Isles to which so many Canadians now living can trace their connection with the New World. These settlers brought to this country as their chief assets sturdy families, a few household effects, and "an inexhaustible reserve supply of hope and determination." What Canada is to-day she owes largely to the splendid faith and broad vision of those hardy pioneers. Their coming marked a new departure in the history of the old land. In one of the most striking chapters of the symposium, "The Call of Canada," the late Dominion Commissioner of Agriculture leaves, as a last word to the country he served so well, the injunction to the Dominion to be guided by the experiences of the past and to be ready to grasp the opportunities that await her on the threshold of another epoch in the life of Canada and the Empire.

To those in the United Kingdom who are stirred by the tragic events of the past two years and who are unsettled by the exacting period of readjustment through which Europe must pass when peace is declared, this, in the words of the late C. C. James, is the call of Canada:

"The man who has fought for his country and for the highest human ideals will desire to settle down where he can best find the peaceful enjoyment of the ideals for which he has made sacrifices. The first thing that suggests itself is, that, as the British Empire has staked the very essence and life-blood of its existence, he should and will desire to live, and have his family live, and his descendants after him, in some part of the British Empire. An Empire that is worth fighting for is worth living in. Canada has given of her best for the Empire, and now, in 1916, she opens her doors to the Britisher as she did in 1816."

To the assurance of comfort and reasonable prosperity for all who make good use of the opportunities offered Canada adds the privileges of citizenship in a country that is entering upon a new era, a country in which democracy will explore beckoning paths of reform along which lie greater vistas of hope for the people than the Fathers of Confederation conceived of when national unity gave rein to free government in a Federal Parliament. With the single eye of the patriot, C. C. James saw the coming of this day, and warned his countrymen to prepare for it, the day when Canada, fresh from the battlefields of Europe, shall face the widened responsibilities and enlarged opportunities of a new era. — The Globe.

Pontiff Resumes Efforts for Peace.

BERLIN, July 11.—The Pope is continuing his efforts for peace, and with this purpose, according to the Cologne Volks Zeitung, has sent instructions to the bishops to devote the last Sunday of the second year of the war to a general communion of children. This service is to be celebrated in all the churches and chapels of Europe, and, by the Pope's instructions, is to take the most solemn possible form.

British Merchantmen Released.

LONDON, July 11.—As an immediate result of the great North Sea battle nearly 200 British merchantmen have been released from Baltic ports, according to the morning papers. These ships have been lying idle in Petrograd, Kranstadt, and other Baltic harbors since the outbreak of the war. They have passed through the Cattegat without interference from German warships and arrived safely in British ports.

CHURCH HUMILIATION PRECEDES GLORY

God's Time and Seasons Absolutely Fixed.

Our Earth the Only Part of God's Universe in Rebellion—How the Rebellion Came About—Divine Permission of Evil for Six Thousand Years—Reign of Sin Soon to End—The Church's Present Experiences of Suffering Violence a Preparation for Future Glory—Apostate Systems, Claiming Present Right to Rule, Not the True Church — Distinction Soon to Be Clearly Seen—Church in Glory to Be Known and Honored of All.

PASTOR RUSSELL

Sioux City, Iowa, July 9.—Pastor Russell is in our city, in attendance upon the I.B.S.A. Convention here. Today he delivered a powerful lecture based upon Matthew 11: 12, "The Kingdom of Heaven suffereth violence, and the violent take it by force." He said in part:

According to the Bible, our earth is the only province in all God's Universe that is in rebellion against the great Creator. We will not recount the history of this rebellion, save to remind you briefly that our father Adam was created in the image of God, in perfect harmony with his Maker. He was abundantly supplied with suitable food, delightful surroundings, and everything needful to his welfare and happiness. The terms under which he might have life and its accompanying blessings continued everlastingly were clearly stated to him by Jehovah God, and were most reasonable. But the temptation to disobedience came; and in his inexperience Adam succumbed to the Tempter. He became a rebel against his Creator, and brought upon himself the sentence of death—not eternal torment. That sentence was, "Dying, thou shalt die"—NOT "Living, thou shalt live in torment."—Genesis 2:17; 3:19; Ezekiel 18: 4, 20; Romans 6:23.

This is the plain statement of the Scriptures, no matter how much we have been taught to the contrary. That rebellion, which set in more than six thousand years ago, has continued ever since. During this period, God has not interposed to stop this rebellion in the human family. Ever since the fall of man, death has reigned over all of Adam's posterity. God purposed to permit sin to take its course for a certain limited period, in order that mankind's experiences with sin should be a great lesson, not only to themselves, but to all of God's intelligent creatures throughout eternity.

The angels have been very deeply interested on-lookers regarding what has happened upon this planet, as the Scriptures plainly show. Some of the angels followed man into sin; others remained true to their Creator and His laws. But while the holy angels have not transgressed at any time, yet they have beheld the transgression of mankind, and are noting how it has turned out. They perceive that in its very nature sin brings a sure penalty; that its only possible effect is mental, moral, and physical decay; and that misery, pain, and sorrow are its inevitable accompaniments, ending in death.

Divine Plan of the Ages.

But our wise Creator does not purpose to permit sin to continue indefinitely. Why should He permit sin to mar His great Universe? Before deciding that nothing can be done for humanity, God purposes to give the whole human family an opportunity to return to harmony and fellowship with Him. This opportunity, the Apostle Peter tells us, will be given during the "Times of Restitution." "Times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord; and He shall send Jesus Christ, which before was preached unto you; whom the heavens must retain until the Times of Restitution, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all the holy Prophets since the world began."—Acts 3: 19-21.

There have been no Times of Refreshing since Father Adam's sin of disobedience; for there the curse began and has continued even until now. St. Peter tells us, however, that in God's great Plan our Lord Jesus Christ is to be sent to earth, to accomplish the great work provided for in His death over eighteen hundred years ago. For a thousand years He will reign for the purpose of eradicating sin, of helping mankind up out of their fallen condition and bringing back to the image of God all the willing and obedient. That will be the time when Messiah will take to Himself His great power and reign. First of all, He will bind Satan, so that the nations will no more be deceived by him.

In His own due time God sent forth His Son to be the King, sent Him into this world, this rebellious province, to tell mankind that the great God who had condemned them has mercy on them and wishes to bless them. Our Lord Jesus came to the most favored nation of His time; but they rejected Him and crucified Him. He who had come into the world as its rightful King, as God's Representative, suffered violence even unto death. Since He represented the Kingdom which God purposed to set up on earth, when He was crucified, violence was done to the Kingdom.

These things have not taken the Lord by surprise. God foreknew it all from the beginning. It was a part of the Divine Program to permit His Son to me crucified; and knowing that it was the Father's will, the Son permitted His life to be taken from Him by wicked men. He humbled Himself and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross. "Wherefore God hath highly exalted Him, and given Him a name above every name," next to His own. He who came into the world as its rightful King was crucified. But His death as a man was the gateway to glory, when He was resurrected by the power of the Almighty, and sat down at the right hand of the Majesty on High, there to remain until He should come to earth again to take His rightful authority as earth's Ruler for a thousand years.

Why the Saintly Are Misunderstood.

God foretold the death of our Lord Jesus through the Prophets hundreds of years before He came to earth as a man, in order that we might be able to see that all things have worked according to the counsel of the Divine will, and that sin and evil have not been permitted in any wise to frustrate His plans and purposes. And as it was the Father's design to permit the great Head of the Church to suffer violence, even so has it been His design to permit those who have followed the Master in the way of sacrifice to suffer violence. "If they have called the Master of the House Beelzebub, how much more shall they call them of His Household?" (Matthew 10:25.) In these, as representatives of the Heavenly Kingdom, the Kingdom of Heaven has suffered violence throughout the Gospel Age.

How comes it that so false and unjust an impression of Jesus and of His saints could exist? Why should good appear to be evil to many and the evil appear to be good? We answer, "The god of this world hath blinded the minds of them that believe not." (2 Corinthians, 4:4.) The religious leaders of Jesus' day said that He had a devil because He did not join in with the Scribes and the Pharisees, because He would not teach the traditions of men, because He would not endorse their theories nor walk in their ways. Had He joined in with them, He would have been popular. They would have praised Him and pointed to Him as one of themselves. But He would not do this because they were wrong. Our Lord stood for God and the Truth; therefore He could not and would not endorse the theories of the religious leaders of His day. He would not teach their doctrines. As a result, the leaders opposed, maligned and persecuted Him. And thus it has been with all who have followed in His steps ever since.

There was a time when Christ's true followers were put to all manner of gross indignities, were tortured on the rack, were roasted at the stake. We may not to-day suffer in the same manner; for such physical tortures are out of style. Tormenting, burning, crucifying, etc., are no longer practised. Now the Lord's faithful servants are held up to public opprobrium. This is called "roasting." The former kind of roasting has become unpopular; and so we now have this more modern method.

Many newspapers and preachers seek to dishonor those who follow the Master and have His spirit. What shall we do when thus misrepresented and defamed? Shall we return evil for evil? Oh, no! Our Lord Jesus did not do so. (1 Peter 2: 21-23.) Although He had the power to do so, yet He would not use that power. He could have saved Himself from the cross; but if He had done so, He would not have been the Saviour of the world. He knew that His enemies did not realize what they were doing. This was the testimony of the Apostles.—Acts 1: 13-17; 1 Corinthians 2:8.

Suffering Precedes Glorification.

Thus it has been all down the Gospel Age. The members of the Kingdom class have suffered violence from those who knew not what they were doing. Had they realized that they were persecuting the true Church of Christ, they would surely have refrained at once. But the Lord's faithful followers are to put up with this ill-treatment with good grace, knowing that it is working out for them a great blessing, and that in due time a blessing will come even to our persecutors.

This is God's arrangement for all whom He has called to be of the Gospel Church. If the Head of that Church, our Lord Jesus Christ, had not suffered, even unto the death of the cross, He would have not received the high reward of exaltation to the right hand of the Majesty on High. The same principle is operating toward all the Kingdom class. If we miss the persecution, we shall also miss the blessing, the reward. (Romans 8:17; 2 Timothy 2: 11, 12.) We cannot change God's Plan.

The Scriptures assure us, however, that this matter of suffering violence under present evil conditions will ultimately work out for the good of the saints of God. It is written: "We know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to the called according to His purpose." (Romans 8:28.) How reasonable a proposition, that He whom God has purposed shall be the great King to bring the fallen race of man back to harmony with Himself should first learn sympathy for those whom He would uplift and restore. How reasonable, too, that those called to be associate rulers and blessers with Him should learn the same lessons.

The Masterpiece of Deception.

There has been a great mistake made regarding the nature of the Kingdom of God and the time for its domination of earth. We have not properly understood the matter. We have thought that the Kingdom of God was already here, that its rule had already begun. Some have thought that it was set up when our Lord arose from the dead. Others have supposed that it was set up at Pentecost. But long after Pentecost St. John prayed for this Kingdom to come. (Revelation 22:20.) Still others have thought that it must have come with the destruction of Jerusalem. But it did not come then.

Many people believe that the Kingdom of God was established on earth in the year 800 A.D. Then the Roman Catholic Church had become very powerful, and the European kingdoms very weak. Religious leaders said, "We have waited eight hundred years for our Lord to return and set up His Kingdom. He has not come. But the Church is growing strong and influential. Surely it must be the will of God that we should set up the Kingdom."

According to this conclusion, the Holy Roman Empire was established about the year 800, with the Bishop of Rome as the Vicegerent of Christ—His earthly representative. Doubtless the leaders of this movement thought that they were following Divine instructions regarding the establishment of the long-promised Kingdom; but the Adversary deceived them. The Bible tells us that he has deceived the whole world. (Revelation 20: 1-4.) For centuries this pseudo kingdom of God made and unmade kings, as appointees of God's Kingdom. For a while the kings had to walk very humbly and quietly; for if they displeased the Pope, he would depose them and appoint their successor. History records many humiliating experiences which disobedient European sovereigns were compelled to undergo as a result of the Pope's anger at their course.

Counterfeit vs. Real Millennium.

Surely the kingdom which had such power was not the Kingdom of Heaven which, according to our text, was to suffer violence at the hands of men throughout the Gospel Age. In the light of the Scriptures we cannot believe that the Kingdom of God has been reigning on earth for the past 1,100 years. If it has been in power, we would be greatly disappointed; for the Word of God leads us to expect that Kingdom to accomplish something far greater and far more lasting than anything that has been accomplished during these centuries. That Word assures us that when Messiah reigns, He will reign in righteousness and in judgment; that His control will extend over the entire earth, for the uplift and blessing of the whole world, for their deliverance from sin, sorrow, and death.—Isaiah 32: 1-4; 35: 1-10; Psalm 72, etc.

All this is in harmony with our text, which declares that during the present life the Kingdom of Heaven, the true Church of Christ, suffereth violence, and the violent take it by force. The meek have not yet inherited the earth; they seldom get even a good slice of it. Are the righteous blessed and the wicked punished today? No; just the reverse. Those who are living godly lives in Christ Jesus are misrepresented, persecuted, and put out of the synagogues. All manner of evil is spoken against them falsely, for Christ's sake. And all this is being done in the name of Christ.—John 16: 1-4.

Reign of True Kingdom at Hand

For centuries the true Church has suffered violence at the hands of the rulers of this world. Some have done this under one name, some under another; but the persecution has been done under the direction of Satan, whose object it is to destroy the true saints of God. But when the true Kingdom is set up, there will be a great change in this respect.

God's times and seasons are absolutely fixed. No one can hasten them. Everything is in the Father's power. Now we see that God wished the world to have six great Days of a thousand years each, during which to learn certain necessary lessons; and that these six Days were to be followed by a Seventh Day, during which Christ and the Church will occupy the office of Prophet, Priest, and King, in order to teach, help, and uplift the world, restoring them to all that was lost in Eden and redeemed at Calvary.

The present order of things will not last. Our Lord will set up the Kingdom of God (Daniel 2:44), which will do away with this present order and will bring in the New Order. At that time He will have associated with Him all those who have been loyal to Him and His Cause, and who have proved themselves faithful even unto death.

Seeing these things, perceiving the fulfilment of the prophecies of the Scriptures all about us, and knowing from the sure Word of God the outcome of present events, the Lord's faithful people may well wait in patience for their deliverance, may well lift up their heads and rejoice. (Luke 21:23.) Daily we are getting ready for that Kingdom by proving and manifesting that we have a thoroughgoing loyalty of heart to the coming Kingdom and its principles of righteousness. If we are willing to suffer violence for the Kingdom and its righteous principles, God will know that we are loyal to Him; and He will reward us openly. The deliverance of the suffering saints of God draws near.

Daily are we seeking more and more to be conformed in character to the likeness of our Lord and Head, in order that we may be fitted for the glorious work beyond the veil. We are ambassadors for God, even though the world knows us not. Therefore it remains for us to stand firmly for all the principles of righteousness found in the Word of God. Of those who prove to be worthy it is written: "Blessed are they that have part in the First Resurrection; on such the Second Death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with Him a thousand years."

THE NEW P. C.

Sir George Foster is the Fourth Canadian to Be Called "Rt. Hon."

"The two living Canadian public men who have made by far the most favorable impression over here are Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Sir George E. Foster." This was what a writer in The Toronto Star Weekly says he was told not very long ago by one who is quite exceptionally well placed for gauging public opinion in Great Britain—at any rate in London—and who is himself no mean judge of public figures.

The raising of Sir George Foster to the dignity of membership of the Imperial Privy Council raises the number of resident Canadians who are members of that august body, every member of which is entitled to entitled to the prefix "Right Honorable," to four—Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Sir Charles Fitzpatrick, Sir Robert Borden, and Sir George Foster. The honor is, naturally, regarded as a very high one. Prior to its being conferred on Sir George Foster, only one Canadian who had neither held the Premiership nor been Chief Justice of Canada—namely, the late Rt. Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright, who became a member of the Imperial Privy Council in 1902—had been an Imperial Privy Councillor.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Sir George Foster! The one almost the direct antithesis of the other, and in so many ways. And yet he would possibly be a bad judge who would deny that theirs are the two outstanding figures in Canadian statesmanship. Of the two, Sir Wilfrid Laurier undoubtedly made the greater "hit" in the Old Country. This in spite of the fact that his general climate of opinion is not so congenial to an Old Country audience—and it is from his speeches that the British public mainly form their estimate of a visiting Canadian politician—as that in which Sir George Foster moves.

Sir George Foster is at his best when making a short, extemporary speech. There he is concise, cogent, and convincing.

It used to be said that his speeches frequently had about them something of a vitriolic quality. That is now no longer the case. As a politician he has mellowed considerably. He is no longer frankly a partizan. His attitude now is often almost non-party—that of a man shrugging his shoulders at both parties.

A FISH SURVEY.

Ontario Government Plans Inquiry Preliminary to Restocking.

A survey of the fish resources of every section of this province is to be undertaken by the Ontario Fish and Game Department, as a preliminary to the department with data showing stocking inland waters with game fish.

At the present time, while the fish resources of the Great Lakes are comparatively well known, the department has little definite information as to conditions in the inland lakes, rivers, and streams, with the exception possibly of some of the well-known tourist districts. The scheme now being put into effect is to furnish every fish overseer with a detailed map of his district with instructions to return it to the department with data showing the variety and quantity of fish in every river, stream, or lake, together with all general information available.

With these maps and reports on file the department will be able to "take stock" and to decide upon the streams which can be restocked with advantage when the game fish hatchery plans now under consideration are put into effect.

The Game and Fisheries Department has received from Dr. Prince, the fisheries expert at Ottawa, a report upon the immense speckled trout caught in the Nepigon district some time ago. The trout was taken by Dr. W. J. Cook, of Fort William, and weighed 14½ pounds. The size of the fish was so remarkable that its species was called in question. In order to remove doubts the department had the fish sent to Ottawa, and Dr. Prince has now declared that it is a true speckled trout. The Nepigon district during the past year or two has been producing some exceptionally large trout, due largely to the fact that the department has been protecting the fish from the depredations of the pike. Last year special men were employed in capturing the pike in their haunts, while this year the Department is permitting the Indians to go into the district without licenses to catch pike.

Boy Scouts Will Pick Fruit.

A call has come to the Boy Scouts of Toronto to help pick the fruit in the district of Clarkson. The call is going to be answered. This is one of the activities in which the boys who are not old enough to don khaki can help the Empire, and they are responding splendidly. They will be camped in the district of Clarkson in a number of small camps, each under a camp supervisor, and the whole group under a chief supervisor.

Arrangements are now well under way. The staff has been selected, and a large number of names have been handed in of boys who are willing to go out and do their bit.

A Marvel of Vigor.

When at about 75 years of age Sir Mackenzie Bowell made a trip through our Far West there were notes of admiration of the vigor of body and resolution of mind of so old a man. That was 18 or 19 years ago. Now in the 93rd year of his age the venerable statesman has set out on a journey to the Yukon.

RESCUED BY ENEMY.

Fournival of Montreal Had a Queer Experience at Ypres.

A young Montreal soldier, Fournival, who had the experience, after being wounded, of being carried out of the zone of fire by a German, has just arrived here. Fournival, who lives in Chaboillez Square, enlisted in the Montreal Grenadiers, but eventually was transferred to a certain battalion belonging to the city which has been in most of the fighting. Fournival went to France with the first Canadians, and was wounded in March of last year and laid aside for four weeks. He went through Festubert and two battles of Ypres, and has now in the same deadly neighborhood received shrapnel wounds in the thigh which will put him out of action for some time to come.

Fournival was attached to a trench mortar party at the time the Canadians made their counter-attack by which they recovered the ground temporarily lost to the Germans.

"Our party," he says, "advanced with the battalion. When we had got some way, with every sort of fire playing round us, we had to go back because we had no more ammunition. The battalion, however, were all right when we stopped for the time being. They went on just as before, losing men all the time, but still kept going on.

"When we were ready to go forward again the battalion had got far in front. We went after them, and came across a good many Germans who had been left behind in our men's rush. Our chaps had just swept over them. Matters were so exciting that neither German nor Canadian thought of taking cover from the shrapnel fire, which was intense.

"I got hit in the foot, but took no notice of it, and went on for a time. Soon, though, I was obliged to drop, because I could not keep up with the others. I lay for a while, but then began to crawl back. A German, a big fellow, who was just wandering round, with shells dropping everywhere, saw me, and picked me up on his back, and began going to the rear with me, looking for a dressing station. He carried me easily enough. While we were going along I was hit again with a fragment of shrapnel in the same leg. My German was not touched. He spoke English well, and told me he was working in London, England, before the war. He got me to a dressing station, where I was at once attended to.

"My German waited around. I was just going to shake hands with him when one of our chaps said: 'None of that!' I lost sight of him directly after. I suppose he would be taken along with the other prisoners. Nearly all the Germans I saw spoke English well, better than you hear me speak it, although I have lived in Montreal many years."

Goulding's Scrapbook.

Eight years ago George Goulding, one of Ontario's best-liked athletes, was unknown to the sporting writers; now he holds every world's walking record that he has gone after, and every follower of athletics has his career "down pat."

Before he broke into the walking game he liked to do a little long-distance running, and incidentally got his name in the papers once in a while. He kept these clippings, and decided to get a scrap-book for them. When he got to the stationer's shop, however, he found that prices for good scrap-books were rather high. But the shopkeeper was a good-natured old man, and pulling down a massive volume, he said, "I'll tell you what I'll do; I've had this book on my hands for several years, but if you'll take it I'll give it to you at a rare bargain."

George was a little "hard-up" at the time, so he took this book. After he had filled a few pages he took it down to show to his employer. The "boss" looked it over a while, and then he said, "Well, George, when you get this book filled up I will think you really are an athlete."

Now Goulding has the book brimfull of newspaper accounts of his achievements, and has enough more to fill two or three more books.

Compliment to Foster.

Lord Northcliffe paid a neat compliment to Hon. Sir George Foster recently at an Australian dinner in London in honor of Premier Hughes of Australia. In supporting the principal toast, Lord Northcliffe said he did not know why a plain man should not speak frankly of those assembled at the table, and say that probably among them were the five best orators of the British Empire, namely, Lord Rosebery, that most eloquent of all Canadians, Sir George E. Foster; Lord Grey, Colonel Winston Churchill, and Premier Hughes of Australia.

Reynolds Newspaper, in an open letter extending a welcome to Sir George Foster, credits the Canadian Minister of Trade and Commerce with a magnetic personality, great vision, and high ideals, combined with practical experience as a man of affairs.

A Gift of Tobacco.

A generous contribution of 4,000 pounds of Virginia tobacco, donated by Mr. Henry Anderson of the War Relief Association of Virginia, U. S. A., through the kind offices of Lady Williams-Taylor of Montreal, is gratefully acknowledged by the Militia Department. The tobacco is now being distributed to the troops in England and at the front.

The generous gift proves the warm sympathy entertained by the American donors for the Canadian soldiers. Lady Williams-Taylor has taken a most active part in the organizations looking after the care and comfort of the Canadian soldiers, and it was through her instrumentality that this two tons of tobacco was proffered by Mr. Anderson.

THE CHAPLAIN'S WORK.

It Is One of Constant and Exacting Labor.

When a minister is appointed chaplain there are those who say, "Well, now that's a nice comfortable way of getting into khaki; why don't he go into the ranks and——?" But a deeper consideration of the military announcement as it generally appears: "To be chaplain, with the rank of captain, cannot but help bring forth an appreciation of the variety and complex nature of the duties of a chaplain, especially in time of war, says Morley B. Drake in The Toronto Sunday World. The other day a military man said: "A general glimpse over the whole field leads one to the conclusion that it is not easy to be a chaplain, and that it is not so simple a thing as it might appear to secure men who can make a success of spiritual work among our men in khaki."

When the present war broke out it laid new demands upon the work of the chaplains whose duties, important as they were, had not involved the constant daily labor for the spiritual welfare of the men, extended over the many successive weeks and months of life in camp and in barracks, under present war conditions. The situation had to be faced in a new spirit, and carried on on a new basis; new methods and appliances had to be devised.

In Military District No. 2, the leadership in the work fell upon Major J. Russell Maclean, who fulfilled his task with great energy and zeal, with the result that when the Exhibition Camp closed a year ago last month, much experience had been accumulated, and many new methods of coping with the work had been tested. At the Niagara Camp the system for work was still further developed under Major Forneret, then senior chaplain, whose many years of service as a chaplain in the militia, together with his business gifts and training, made him a safe and steady leader.

Experience acquired at the long summer camp at Niagara—a quite new thing in Canadian history—was again made to serve as a guide for the work of the past winter, under the able and resourceful direction of Colonel G. H. Williams, then Major Williams, who joined the staff early last summer.

A glance over the past makes clear the fact that the religious work in the three stages, the Exhibition Camp of the season 1914-15, the Niagara Camp of 1915, and the Exhibition Camp of 1916, has in each case been different, because the situation which had to be faced has varied, and hence had to be met with new plans. To one who has seen all this, it is evident that a very great deal of thought and effort and prayer have been put forth by the chaplains who have with great zeal sought to make their part of the work assume its full share of responsibility for the life of the camp, and to be faithful to the confidence placed in them. It is also very delightful to recall the spirit of harmony and fraternity that has characterized the work of the chaplains with one another from the very outset.

Perhaps the most conspicuous part of the chaplain's work is the Sunday church parade. A year ago there was in Exhibition Camp only one parade. This was held in the transportation building. On the opening of the camp at Niagara the plan of one service was still carried on, but with the growth of the camp this single service became quite unwieldy, and four-brigade services were therefore organized. During the winter just past, in Toronto, another modification was made by giving a separate parade to each battalion. For the summer camp the brigade parades are being again resumed.

It will perhaps astonish most people to know that the length of the brigade service does not exceed thirty-five minutes, with a leaning to half an hour, but it must be remembered that all those on parade at these open-air services stand throughout its duration. This means that the sermon lasts only ten minutes, and a chaplain's position is in serious danger if he preaches longer.

No More Kilts for Overseas Forces.

A recent despatch from Ottawa says that no more kilts will be issued to Scottish regiments of the Canadian overseas forces. Units which have the kilts now will have to wear "trews" when their present clothing has been worn out. The pipers are to be the only exceptions in the Order just issued by the Militia Council. However, Scottish corps will be allowed to wear the Balmoral instead of the regulation staff pattern caps as a distinguishing mark. It has been found that the kilt is not suitable for trench work in rainy and cold weather, and has caused considerable inconvenience. Active militia regiments will not be affected by the order.

Not to Commandeer Wool.

Rumors to the effect that the Canadian Government is planning to commandeer this year's wool crop in Canada in view of war requirements and wool scarcity are denied by the Minister of Agriculture. No such drastic action is necessitated by present circumstances, but the action taken last year in prohibiting export to the United States, except under license, will be in effect again this year, according to present plans.

Wheat Carriage Expedited.

Exports of Canadian wheat during the present month show that the crop is being transported out of the country with great expedition this year. The total for this June was 21,003,485 bushels, as compared with 6,611,879 in the corresponding month last year. Canada is evidently not meeting with the tonnage difficulties which have led Australia to establish a State-owned steamer service.

Resolved that each Union holds at least two Parlor meetings during the year that the members may become better, acquainted with our work and privileges.

Recommended that each union donate a certain amount to the county work and one half of this be paid before the new year.

Mrs. Gibson then called on Miss Gandie to offer prayer for Divine guidance in the election of officers.

Mrs. Smith and Miss Reeves, Miss Holton and Mrs. Hatton appointed tellers.

Mrs. Pugsley was asked to take charge of the election of officers, after reading the constitution ballots were taken for president, resulting in 26 for Mrs. Gibson.

Moved and carried that the informal ballot be made the formal ballot.

Resolved that we continue sending comforts to our soldiers in the trenches and hospitals and that a W.C.T.U. leaflet accompany each article, that they may know our women are thinking and praying for them.

Resolved that this county convention express their appreciation of the splendid work of Premier Hearst and Mr. Rowell and the Ontario Legislature in placing upon the statutes of this province the Ontario Temperance Act. which in our opinion is one of the best and most far-reaching measures of Temperance Legislation ever put on the statute books of a country.

Resolved as a county Union we express to our president, Mrs. Gibson, our sincere appreciation of her ceaseless efforts on behalf of the Conuty Organization and the success which has attended them during her term of office. LETTERS FROM OVERSEAS

FROM FRED DIXON

Shorncliffe, Eng., June 28.

Editor Intelligencer.

Dear Sir:—It gives me great pleasure in writing to you once again before I leave for France. Most of the 59th Battalion left to-day, June 28th, and I tell you they were a happy lot of men, and I felt sorry to see them go, but duty must be done. I expect to leave shortly with the transport section. I bid the Belleville boys good-bye, and wished them all a safe return, and I hope soon to follow them. I had a little chat with Oscar DeShane, also George Barlow and others. They all wished me to thank the many kind friends of Belleville for ther kind thoughts of them. So they left with good smiling faces, knowing that their loved ones in Belleville will be well cared for; not forgetting the ladies of the Red Cross Society for the socks which I saw that each man received, as Lieut. Hyman requested me to do so, as he was called away to the front. He was well liked by the men of the 59th, and his name will never be fogotten by them. Also Lieut. Hambly, who is away at present.

Things are very expensive here in this country; especially food. The poor certainly do suffer. It is very strange to see the women doing the work of men, such as farm work, train conductors, office and other kinds of work in the factories. It is all done to allow men to go and fight for their King and Country. The Canadian boys are getting great praise all over England for their splendid fighting at the front. I am proud of our Canadian boys, not forgetting our English, Irish and Scotch boys. In fact we are all born with British blood. No wonder the Germans are losing, but they will not admit it. Germany knows she is beaten; but wait, time will tell, and we must all do our part in this war.

We have a nice camp here in Shorncliffe. We see aeroplanes flying all day around here; also on a dull day we can hear the guns over in France. I am going to see Captain O'Flynn. He is in a hospital here. I was at the trenches here and saw them bomb throwing. It is a great sight to see the explosion and the earth go up in the air. It gives us an idea what it must be like at the front, but we will soon be there. We regret again to hear of another of our comrade's death, Albert Green. He did his duty like all are doing, fearing not death.

I will bring my letter to a close. Kindly remember me to all the staff of the Intelligencer.

Yours sincerely,
Driver Fred Dixon.

FROM MERLE PREST

France, June 20, 1916.

Dear Mother:—Just a few lines to let you know I am well at present, and hope this will find you all the same. We are having fine weather here now. I guess they are holding up the mail again, for I have not had any for a month now. Don't send any more than one lot of chewing tobacco for we have been getting a lot lately.

I have an idea that I will be getting a pass before we go to the trenches again. I can't think of much to tell you. Every thing is quiet here. We are getting used fine. They are drilling us pretty hard though; but we are used to it now. We have a band now. I saw in one of the English papers that Corporal Prest was wounded. He is in the British army. I don't know him, but I saw his picture.

Well, I think I will close for this time. So good-bye. Answer soon. Love to all.

Your loving son,
MERLE PREST.

MUSIC AND DRAMA

THE PIRATES OF FINANCE UNMASKED TO-NIGHT

"The Pirates of Finance," constituting the 16th, 2 part episode of the serial series, Graft is announced for exhibiton at the Palace Theatre to-night and Thursday matinee and night. The greatest battle of all is at hand. Stanford Stone the head of the Graft Trust and head of the mighty money trust is preparing to create a panic in the money market to discredit the activities of Harding in his fight against organized big intertests, and at the same time to crush Harding and anyone who may be in sympathy with him. Harding also is gathering his forces for a last great effort. Since coming to New York he has established a residence that he may practice his profession. Being a resident and a voter, he is entitled to hold office. They induce Harding to accept the nomination of their party for Mayor of New York. Stone and the big bankers dominating the clearing house committee which in turn exercises arbitary power over the finances of the country, start a panic and destroy a number of solvent banks.

"THE MARTYRDOM OF NURSE CAVELL" TO-NIGHT

"The Martyrdom of Nurse Cavell," has proven one of the supreme human tragedies of the war. The fate of this heroic woman, England's Joan of Arc, has stirred the heart of the whole world. The photodrama, which is in 4 parts shows the shocking inhumanity of England's enemies. The first part of the story shows her as a young girl in the wholesome surroundings of an English home. Then the scene shifts to Belgium, where as a trained nurse she receives an appointment in a Brussels' hospital. Then the war comes, and the others flee the country. Nurse Cavell, however, stays to nurse wounded soldiers—friends and foes alike. But she couldn't resist the appeal to help her friends escape to France. Spies betrayed her, ending as the world knows.

RESULT OF RECRUITING

PROPORTION OF CANADIAN-BORN SOLDIERS IS VERY LOW.

Figures Compiled by Officers of the 235th Battalion Show That the British-Born Have Carried Most of the Weight of Enlistment—Farmers Are Behind the Cities—Quebec is Away Behind.

A KHAKI-CLAD man in Bowmanville writes to say that he and other officers are having trouble in getting recruits for the 235th Northumberland and Durham Regiment in a community which is very largely rural, says The Toronto Mail and Empire. He encloses a pamphlet which a couple of the officers have prepared, giving some comparative statistics concerning the recruiting among the various trades and callings in this country which are interesting, even though they are likely to be unpalatable in some quarters. They show, in brief, that the native-born Canadian has not done his share; that the farmers have not done their share, and, of course, that Quebec particularly has not done her share, a fact that has been notorious ever since the first call went out for recruits. The pamphlet points out that if 500,000 men are to be recruited, and if all parts of Canada were to contribute equally, the Dominion would contribute one soldier for every 16 of population. Leaving Quebec out of the calculations with her 2,000,000 population, Canada will be required to recruit one in 12 if the half-million mark is to be reached.

It is figured that the rural population of Canada is about one-half of the total, perhaps a little more. Yet up to February of this year the rural population had contributed only 14,200 men; while from the cities and towns had come 218,800. In other words, out of every 18 recruits the farming population has contributed one, which is about one-ninth of what it ought to have done if it was to make a showing in proportion to its numbers. In addition, however, there have been 2,844 ranchers, all of course from the Western provinces, which have answered the call more promptly than any other part of Canada, so with these men also credited to the rural population, its showing is slightly improved, though it remains far below what it ought to be.

The pamphlet seeks to answer the argument that it is of the utmost importance that the farms of Canada must be maintained at all costs, and denies that the military authorities either in Canada or Great Britain have urged the farmers to remain at home. They have laid stress upon the necessity of munition workers providing shells for the army. Attention is called to the fact, too, that overseas men are granted leave from military duties for seeding and harvesting as long as they remain in Canada, their pay going on just the same. The authors of the pamphlet say that there are in the High schools of the country 15,000 boys who might be called upon to replace to some extent men of military age who desired to enlist. Reference is made also to the fact that in Europe women are replacing men in most occupations. Thousands of women ought to be available to replace enlisting farmers.

Of the 263,000 recruits who had been secured up to February the farmers and ranchers combined had contributed, as noted, 17,000; students had enlisted to the number of 4,200; employers and merchants, 6,500; professional men, doctors, lawyers, teachers, et al., 16,000; clerical workers, 49,000, and manual workers, 170,500. There is no reason to suppose that this ratio has not been maintained ever since. One rather stinging point made by the pamphlet is that out of a foreign-born population in Canada of 278,000, including Americans, Italians, and other non-British elements, 19,000 had volunteered for overseas service. That is to say, these foreign-born had sent 2,000 more soldiers to the front than the entire rural population of Canada.

Out of a population of 285,000 the British-born have enlisted 157,000 men, or 55 per cent. The Canadian-born out of a population of 970,000 men of military age by the census of 1911 have contributed 74,000, or 7½ per cent. It is useless to speculate upon motives; it is equally useless to attempt to bully Canadian farmers or Canadians of any class whatever into enlisting. All that should be done is to put the figures before them and leave the decision with their own consciences. The Mail and Empire has enough confidence in the patriotism of the Canadian farmer and every other Canadian who is eligible from a military point of view and who is not kept at home by pressing domestic responsibilities to believe that a study of the situation is enough to move him to action. Perhaps a little serious thinking over the present military map of France and Belgium and the figures here presented will have some gratifying results.

Holding Back.

It appears there are a number of Frenchmen and Belgians living in Montreal who have not responded to the appeal to defend the national colors. Ald. Lariviere, leader of the City Council, says he will propose a motion asking the Dominion Government to intervene and compel these subjects to perform their patriotic duty.

"I do not see," he said, "why Canadians should go to the front when those more interested remain here in Montreal."

The Board of Control is also being asked to award no contracts to an individual or company managed by an ally not doing his duty.

Ten Thousand In The Parade

Toronto Orangemen Turn Out in Large Numbers For Annual Event

TORONTO, July 12.—One of the most remarkable demonstrations of loyalty ever witnessed in Toronto was the annual procession of about 120 lodges of the Loyal Orange Association. Every available member was in the long column, which took two hours to pass any given point, and prominent in the parade were more than two thousand men in khaki who had come from Camp Borden to Niagara Camp in order to participate in the celebration. An estimate of several prominent officers was that approximately ten thousand men, women and children were in the parade. There were scores of bands, including brass, fife, bugle and pipe organizations and the usual riot of orange and blue decorations with many banners and flags of the Allies were in evidence.

THE FIRST PROSECUTION

Proprietor of a Toronto Moving Picture House in Trouble Over War Tax

TORONTO July 12.—The first prosecution under the Amusements Tax Act is being brought against Mrs. E. Macdonnell proprietress of the Alexandra Theatre on Bloor street, near Lansdowne, on the charge of allowing people to enter the theatre without payment of the tax.

The Provincial Police allege that Mrs. Macdonell had been neglecting to destroy tickets in the chopper, and was re-selling them to patrons, thus avoiding the payment of full returns to the Government, and making money for herself in the process. The maximum penalty for the offence with which she is charged is a fine of $200.

TEUTONS RETREATING IN A VERITABLE PANIC

Russians Advance Twenty-Five Miles in Three Days on Fifty Mile Front—Kovel Fortress is More Than Ever Desperately Threatened

LONDON, July 13.— Special —On the Russian front the battle continues along the Stokhod River with the same determination to win animating the opposing forces. The Germans are reported to be bringing up all possible reinforcements and guns in an endeavour to save Kovel, against which the Russians are advancing along two railway lines. In Bukowina and Galicia the advance of Gen. Brusiloff's troops seems to have halted for the moment.

The Petrograd correspondent of the Daily News, telegraphing under date of July 11, says:

"'The last three days have been another vast sweep forward by the Russians, comparable in speed to the opening stages of the Lutsk advance. Roughly the Russians moved forward twenty-five miles on a front of fifty miles.

Trusted Employee of Hochelaga Bank Alleged to Have Fled With $5,000

MONTREAL, July 12.—Rushing away in a waiting automobile which is said to have been driven by a young lady the teller at the Bank of Hochelaga at the corner of Royband and St. Denis streets, whose name is said to be Lefort, carried away in his flight a sum of $5000.

The young man is alleged to have stated that he was going over to the barber shop near by for a shave and the manager having no suspicions, made no objections. When the man had been away nearly an hour the manager grew anxious and sent a messenger to find him and bring him back. It was then that it was discovered that $5000 in cash had disappeared as well as the teller.

Shopkeepers in the vicinity are reported to have said that they saw the man jump into a waiting automobile driven by a girl and speed away.

ALLIES PENETRATE ENEMY LINE AND RETURN WITH PRISONERS

Canadian Press Special.

PARIS, July 13.—(Afternoon statement.) There have been intermittent artillery exchanges along the front of the River Somme. In Champagne district we penetrated the salient of a German line in the vicinity of Prosnes and brought back prisoners. In Argonne two surprise attacks delivered by the enemy upon the northern and eastern portions of Boiante salient failed under our fire.

At Lefille mort we caused the explosion of a mine and then occupied the southern side of the crater.

On the right bank of the Meuse there has been no infantry fighting. During night, however, there was an intense bombardment in the sectors of Souville Chenois and La Laufee.

In Vosges an attack by the enemy upon one of our trenches to the south of Carshach has been deputed after a spirited engagement with hand grenades.

Jewelry Stolen From Canadian

New York Negro, Charged With Theft From Montreal Woman Is Locked up

NEW YORK, July 13.—Special.—Charged with the theft of five pieces of jewelry valued at $5,000, the property of Mrs. D. C. MacArrow, wife of the General Manager of the Merchants Bank of Canada, John Powell, a young negro elevator operator, was locked up in police headquarters to-night. He is held on charges of burglary and grand larceny.

Mrs. MacArrow came to the city in the middle of June and stopped at an uptown hotel where Powell was employed up to last night as chief elevator operator. On the night of June 20 her rooms were entered, apparently by means of a pass key, and the jewellery stolen.

Two of the stolen gems were highly prized by Mrs. MacArrow owing to their workmanship design. One was a Maltese cross set with diamonds and other stones and the other was a broach. She promptly notified the police, with the result that Powell was arrested, charged with the theft.

FOE HELD FOR TWO HOURS BY CANADIANS

Made Charge With Only Rifles in Face of Machine-Gun Fire

KEENE, July 13.— Special — A Peterboro boy in writing home of the bombardment by the Germans of the Canadian trenches just before the Allies' Big drive began, tells how the Canadians with only rifles to fight with charged the Germans in the face of the latter's machine-gun fire. He says the enemy got within five or six hundred yards of their first line, "but we held them for over two hours and a half until the reinforcements reached us. The Germans were only fifty yards away when we saw them coming through the woods. Then it was a race for our lives to see who would get there first, and, as our men won the race, the Germans were falling in bunches, not saying anything about our selves.

"After three counter-attacks we managed to drive them back, and we regained all lost ground."

Two Girls Drown While Bathing

One Went to Rescue Other, Though a Poor Swimmer—Other Drownings

WHITBY, July 13.—Special—A sad drowning accident occurred here yesterday by which Miss Evelyn Elvidge, daughter of Principal and Mrs. W. L. Elvidge of Whitby, and Miss Clara Nevin of Windsor, lost their lives. The young ladies were in attendance at a Sunday School picnic at the lake shore southwest of the town, and were in swimming. Miss Nevin was a fair swimmer and had been in the water for some time when she apparently took a cramp and being beyond her depth called for help. Miss Elvidge, though able to swim but little, at once went to her assistance, but this only resulted in both girls going down together. Their companions on the shore were unable to give any form of assistance, and had to run some distance to the Hospital for the Insane to obtain help. Dr. Mitchell at once hurried to the rescue, and brought the victims of the accident to the shore, but after working over them for some time was obliged to declare life extinct.

Miss Elvidge was about sixteen years of age and a very bright High School girl; Miss Nevin was some years older.

Body Found In Goose Pond

Remains of George Stephenson Missing Since April 26, Discovered Floating on Water

PETERBOROUGH, July 12.—The body of the late George Lee Stephenson, who has been missing from the Peterborough Protestant Home since April 26th, was found last night in the Goose Pond. The body was seen floating upon the surface of the water a short distance out, by Mr. Edwin Elcome and he at once notified the police department.

Constables Blade and Pratt responded and, with Mr. Elcome, went out in a punt and brought the body to the shore, when it was removed to Comstock's morgue.

The long immersion in the water rendered identification almost impossible, but two inmates of the home identified the body by birth marks.

The funeral took place this morning to the Little Lake Cemetery.

In the evening the battalion gave an entertainment to the people of Bolton, a physical drill, moving pictures and camp fire scene being the chief features.

ALLIED AEROPLANES HOVER OVER THE GERMAN LINES

Fighting Continues Along The Battle Area, With No Change in The Situation —Attempted Raids South of Labasse Canal Driven Back by Allied Fire—Hostile Airships Are Active

Canadian Press Special.

LONDON, July 13.—An official statement this afternoon says:—Heavy artillery duels were in progress in certain sectors of the battle area since last report, and fighting continues at various points on the front, but there was no change in the situation on any part of our line. West of Wyschaete and south of Labasse Canal many attempts to raid our trenches were driven off by our fire. Despite unfavorable weather our aeroplanes have been constantly attacking. Hostile machines were active but all their attacks on our aeroplanes operating over the German lines were driven off. One of our aeroplanes is missing.

Wire Fences Protect Plant

Cars to be Escorted by Armed Guards in Power Zone

NIAGARA FALLS, Ont. July 13.—Special—Barbed wire entanglements extending from the Ontario Power Company's plant to a point above the Dufferin Islands, isolating all the upper section of Victoria Park, are being put into place, with the idea of protecting the power plants from plotters. The boulevard through the power zone and the Table Rock House will be closed. The administration building will probably be permitted to remain open. While electric cars will be permitted to pass through the park after the entanglements are in place, they will be escorted by armed guards, and no person except regular employees of the power companies will be permitted to get on or off the cars while they are in the zone. This will prevent the Ontario Power Company from carrying out its plans for a third pipe line, and may cause delay in the improvements now being made to the fore-bay of the Canadian Power Company.

DECIDES DEUTSCHLAND IS A MERCHANTMAN

United States Naval Experts Make Report of Investigation on German Sub.

WASHINGTON, July 13—Special—The naval experts detailed to inspect the super-submarine merchantman Deutschland reported to Secretary McAdoo to-day that the ship "inconsequently classed as a vessel of the merchant marine."

The State Department will determine the exact status of the vessel from these expert findings, together with the report of the collector of the port of Baltimore.

Secretary McAdoo issued the following statement this evening:

"I received to-day the official reports of the officers designated to examine the German submersible steamship Deutschland at Baltimore, for the purpose of determining whether the vessel is a warship or a merchantman. These reports were made by the collector of customs of the port of Baltimore, the surveyor of the port, and Captain C. F. Hughes, and two other officers of the navy detailed for the purpose at the request of the Secretary of the Treasury.

"The three reports, based upon a careful examination, agree that the Deutschland is a merchant vessel and not a warship."

BALTIMORE, July 13.—The North German Lloyd has received from persons in all parts of the country offers reaching as high as $50,000 for the privilege of taking passage on the submarine Deuschland on her return trip.

Man-Eating Shark Claims Two Victims

MATAWAN, N.J., July 13.—(Special.)—Lester Stillwell, twelve years of age, was killed by a man-eating shark while bathing in an arm of Raritan Bay near here this afternoon. Stanley Fisher, twenty-four years of age, who went to his aid, was so badly injured in a desperate struggle with the nine-feet sea monster that he died while being taken to a Long Branch hospital. Joseph Dunn, twelve years of age, bathing some distance away in the same inlet, was attacked by a shark and one of his legs was so lacerated it probably will have to be amputated.

This is the third time within two weeks that sharks have claimed the lives of bathers along the New Jersey coast. Charles E. Van Sant, a youth of Philadelphia, was killed by one at Beach Haven, N.J., on July 2.—Chas. Bruder of Springbrook, N.J., was attacked and both his legs taken off by a shark on July 6. He died while men who went to his rescue, were carrying him ashore.

The summer population along the New Jersey coast has become terror-stricken and few persons now are venturing in the water at beach resorts which have not been protected by steel nets. Motor boat patrols carrying armed men have been established at various points to hunt the man-eaters.

In addition to handling the purchase of war supplies for Canada, they have also been entrusted with the supervision of the purchase of millions of dollars worth of munitions in Canada for the War Office. They have served the Crown without remuneration, and the order of Knighthood is in recognition of their loyal labors of the past year or so.

It is also understood that the honor of Knighthood will be conferred a little later on Mr. J. W. Flavelle, Chairman of the Imperial Munitions Board.

THINKS WAR WILL NOT FINISH GERMANY

Rider Haggard Believes Foe Will Start to Rebuild—Urges Britain to Retain Every Man

EDMONTON, July 12.—Sir Rider Haggard addressed an audience here on the question of the settlement of ex-Imperial service men in the Dominion after the war. Sir Rider said he did not think the present struggle would be the end of wars. Rather, he believed, Germany would rebuild and restrengthen with one great object in view—the crushing finally of the British Empire. The only way to be prepared for this was by keeping every possible man within the Empire and seeing that none, as in the past, drifted to foreign countries.

There can be seen from the station at McBride, a G.T.R. peak, 9,000 feet hight and in honor of Sir Rider Haggard who passed over this route from Vancouver to Edmonton, this peak may be named after him, at the suggestion of G.T.P. officials. Applications has been made to the Geographical Board to have the name confirmed.

101,000 TONS SUNK DURING MONTH OF JUNE

NICKEL AND RUBBER TO BE TAKEN BACK BY DEUTSCHLAND

NEW YORK, July 13. — Special—Every pound of the Deutschland's return cargo of rubber and nickel is already stored at her pier. The nickel is in small boxes, which can be stored readily in space available for it. The great quantity of rubber has been cut into odd shapes, which are reported to be so arranged that they can be used to fill practically every odd nook and corner aboard the Deutschland. Maritime men here assert, therefore, that there can be no real reason for delaying the departure of the submarine, and that they would not be surprised to see her start boldly down the bay at any hour after to-morrow night.

Nothing has been learned or given out regarding the nickel and rubber for the Deutschland, but from fragmentary stories in the past several days, it was originally sent from New York to different points and later assembled at Baltimore.

Officials of the International Nickel Company are not concerned over despatches from Ottawa stating that agitation has again arisen for an embargo on the exports of nickel to the United States, in the belief that such action would prevent any of the metal reaching Germany by way of the new U-freighters.

All the exports of nickel from this country have been distributed through the British Admiralty, and none of the metal has reached any enemy of Great Britain.

Belleville was particularly quiet yesterday for two reasons—absence of Orangemen at Trenton and elsewhere, and closing stores in the afternoon.

LIGHTNING STRIKES BARN

During the severe electric storm which spread over the district early this morning, the barn owned by Mr. Walter Lingham on Dundas street, was struck by lightning, and within an hour was burned to the ground. Several horses which were in the barn at the time, were saved after considerable difficulty.

A MORNING FIRE

The firemen were called out at about 7.30 o'clock this morning to Wellington street, where a blaze was in progress in a frame building attached to the house owned by Mr. Savage. The brigade made a quick run and soon had the fire under control, but not before the frame buildings were badly damaged. The house itself, which is built of brick, was slightly damaged by smoke. The barn near the house was practically untouched.

Peterborough In Orange Attire

Two Hundred and Sixty Lodges Participate in Enthusiastic Celebration

(Peterborough Review, July 12)

All the roads from at least six counties led to Peterborough today, and the Lift Lock City certainly welcomed its thousands of visitors with open arms. The anniversary of the Battle of the Boyne always attracts vast throngs of people, and to-day's celebration of the 226th anniversary is no exception. Train after train brought capacity crowds; others came by vehicular means, and some walked. And among the vast concourse of Orangemen and their friends were noticed many of the veterans, Mr. Chas. Crowe and Mr. Solomon Northey being among the old guard who have walked with the colors since they were old enough to do so.

But there are many familiar faces missing from the ranks. Over two hundred members of the Order are with the 93rd Battalion. Many other members who heard the call of King and Country have marched away with Canadian forces during the past two years. Some of these passed out of the life playing the hero's part, and others are numbered among the sick and wounded.

Gathered in the city were Orangemen, True Blues, Orange Young Britons and Prentice Boys from the Counties of Durham, Northumberland, Peterborough, Hastings, Haliburton and Victoria, to make the 226th anniversary of the Battle of the Boyne the most successful that has yet been held here. The principal streets of the city are a mass of bright colors. Flags and bunting are in the greatest profusion, while the bright uniforms of the Orange Orders together with the immense concourse of people who lined the streets, made an intensely interesting scene.

The parade occupied one hour in passing the corner of George and Hunter streets. The route, as previously announced, was carried out, and on the return to Central Park, addresses were delivered by E. F. McLean, Grand Master, of Bowmanville, George McCartney, provincial organizer, Oshawa, and W. A. Howard.

The address which Capt. Burnham had prepared for the Orangemen was distributed in pamphlet form. As is generally known, military duty prevented Capt. Burnham from being present.

SPLENDID EXAMPLE SET BY ORANGEMEN

Fifty Thousand Men From Canadian Homes at The Front—Celebration at Windsor

WINDSOR, July 12.—Ex-Mayor H. C. Hocken, of Toronto, addressed a crowd of several thousand people at the 12th of July celebration here today. In a thoughtful speech he drew an analogy between the present war and the Battle of the Boyne, showing that in the conflict of the 17th century and the European struggle of today the same principles are being fought for. He commended the Orangemen for the splendid work which they have done for the Empire in the war.

"There has never been a more appropriate time to celebrate the anniversary of the Battle of the Boyne than this year," he said. "Our Empire is engaged in the same age-long conflict for human liberty to-day that was waged on the banks of the Boyne in 1690.

"From every section of the red belt that encircles the globe, Orangemen have gone in thousands to defend those priceless privileges earned at the Boyne. Human liberty is a sacred cause. The right to think and act in accordance with one's conscience should be universal. Orangemen have fought for that, and will continue to fight for it as long as they live. They won it for themselves at the Boyne and extended it to even those who fought against them.

"What a splendid example of loyalty Canadian Orangemen have given. Fifty thousand men have gone from the Orange homes of Canada to defend the Empire. Tens of thousands of our brethren from Australia are in the trenches. New Zealand Orangemen fought at Gallipoli and are now in France, while we celebrate the day in Canada. We who remain in our homes honor their devotion to-day as we group them in our thoughts with the heroes of the army of the Prince of Orange."

Trenton En Fete For Orangemen

Lodges From Various Sections Congregate in Town—Take Part in Creditable Parade

Favored with perfect summer weather, Orangemen from all points, including the local lodges, flocked to Trenton yesterday, to take part in the "walk" to celebrate the 226th anniversary of the Battle of the Boyne. The town was en fete for the reception of the hundreds of strangers who made their way by every mode of conveyance to attend the celebration. Flags and bunting flew from every house and store, refreshment booths were opened, while the dining accommodation was taxed to the utmost.

Over a thousand Orangemen took part. A feature of the walk was the number of men in uniform who were present with their lodges.

The local Orange Lodges, Nos. 274 and 2519, were under the command of Mr. Milton Bateman and Mr. J. W. Davidson, respectively.

The speech of the day was given by Rev. W. G. Clarke, B.A., former pastor of the Tabernacle church, this city, the address being mainly in the aid of recruiting.

BITES GOLF BALLS AND THEN DIES

Boy Swallows Acid From Fluid Pocket He Examined

GREENWICH, Conn., July 12.—Biting into the centre of a golf ball cost the life of Charles Andria, twelve years old, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Andria, of Greenwich. he died in the Greenwish Hospital.

The boy bit the small pocket, which in the better grade of golf balls contains acid, and it is believed that he swallowed a quantity of the fluid. It is supposed that he decided to examine the interior of the ball and, after unwinding the elastic that is used between the fluid pocket in the centre and outside covering, he probably attempted to break the small shell, and failing, bit it with his teeth. The fluid then spilled into the inside of his mouth, burning him painfully.

The exact substance contained in centre of the ball is not known, as it is a secret preparation and has been carefully guarded by patents secured by the makers.

FARM LABORER'S WANTED

The Western Province of Canada have experienced an acute shortage of farm laborers for spring seeding and summer work this year.

Even when times were normal throughout Canada, it was always necessary to bring from twenty-five to thirty thousand laborers from eastern points for the harvest season.

As voluntary enlistments have been very heavy, and inasmuch as a successful crop is predicted by the experts, grave fear is being felt along the lines of the Canadian Northern Railway on account of the difficulty experienced in obtaining labor, which means steady work and good wages for all who visit in the districts served by the C.N.R.

For further particulars apply to E. M. Fisk, Station Agent, or J. A. Patterson City Agent, or write to R. L. Fairbairn, General Passenger Agent, 68 King St., Toronto, Ont.

Use Cocoanut Oil For Washing Hair

If you want to keep your hair in good condition, be careful what you wash it with.

Most soaps and prepared shampoos contain too much alkali. This dries the scalp, makes the hair brittle, and is very harmful. Just plain mulsified cocoanut oil (which is pure and entirely greaseless), is much better than the most expensive soap or anything else you can use for shampooing, as this can't possibly injure the hair.

Simply moisten your hair with water and rub it in. One or two teaspoonfuls will make an abundance of rich, creamy lather, and cleanses the hair and scalp thoroughly. The lather rinses out easily, and removes every particle of dust, dirt, dandruff and excessive oil. The hair dries quickly and evenly, and it leaves it fine and silky, bright, fluffy and easy to manage.

You can get mulsified cocoanut oil at most any drug store. It is very cheap, and a few ounces is enough to last everyone in the family for months

MILITARY MATTERS AT BARRIEFIELD HEIGHTS

TALKING ON SIGNALLING WORK

Major R. D. Ponton, Instructional Cadre, gave a very interesting lecture on Monday evening, to the signallers attending the School of Signalling. The address dealt with the methods used by the signallers at the front.

At Neuve Chappelle, the Allied armies learned the lesson of the great necessity of having all wires buried. Every wire now between the hundreds of trenches and headquarters, were buried some five feet under ground, so that shells or German scouts could not bother them. The wires come up at certain points, and are tagged. Before this change of burying the wires was made, the telephone booths or "dug-outs" were easily seen by the enemy, by the converging wires going in from all directions. Now, there is none of that and the Huns find it impossible to concentrate their fire on what they can learn to be a telephone booth.

Major Ponton stated that on quiet nights in the trenches, he had picked up his telephone and heard a phonograph being played twenty miles away, back at the base. There were in each company four signallers, and they had full charge of the telephones, being responsible to the company officer, that communication be established and kept.

At that time, with such a small number of qualified signallers, great risk was often run by other men so that these valuable specialists would be protected. With no reserve men who understood the code or mechanism of the instruments a lack of communication through a dearth of operators, would be a serious matter. Now, the schools of signalling are qualifying not only a full section, but a reserve of four men for each company. This would undoubtedly relieve a most dangerous condition in the firing line.

Major Ponton is an interesting talker, and gave a very educative address, which was greatly appreciated by his audience.

NOTES

Major Ponton went to Halifax yesterday on duty, and will be absent from camp for about a week.

Mrs. Carman, wife of Captain Carman, of the 15th regiment, Belleville, was a visitor to camp yesterday.

Mrs. Burrows and Miss Milburn of Belleville, motored to camp yesterday, and were the guests of the officers of the 155th to lunch.

It is understood that 30 non-coms. and 10 officers are coming to camp to take the course in the School of Cookery. These will report here this week.

The electric pump is giving the camp the very best of service, and is throwing 12,000 gallons of water per hour from the river into the lines for the use of the troops.

The City of Kingston, as well as the county authorities should not forget the 40 men in khaki who are doing the work which should be done by city and county with their own hired men. The party of the 155th are making a good job of the oiling.

The fatigue party of 40 soldiers engaged in oiling the Gananoque road, are all taken from the 155th Battalion. The party has been detailed for one week and it is hoped that it will be possible to secure an extra 25 cents a day for each man doing this very necessary work.

Captain Dodds, chaplain of the 155th Battalion, left last night for Sonya, Ont., to marry Mr. E. Ferguson to Miss A. Leask of that place. About 150 guests have been invited to the wedding. The bride has a brother in the 116th Battalion, C.E.F. Mrs. Dodds accompanied her husband.

Col. T. D. R. Hemming, Camp Commandant has been invited to attend the laying of the corner stone of Dominion Arsenal No. 2, which will be laid by the Minister of Militia at Lindsay on Saturday. Lieut. Col. J. H. Fee and many officers of the 109th Battalion, will go to Lindsay for the event, also the 109th band.

An officer speaking to a press representative Tuesday, called attention to the facts in the Elliott shooting case, and said that the attitude of the military towards West should encourage every soldier to do his duty faithfully, and with the consciousness that in its execution he would be supported by his superior officers.

Authority has been granted for the band of the 155th Battalion to go to Trenton for the firemen's demonstration on July 26th, and to attend the orphanage demonstration at Picton on August 3rd. Bandmaster Hinchey is well known in Trenton and Picton, and the fine band of the battalion will receive a big reception at both places.

HAYING FURLOUGH

"Please, Sir, may I have two men from your battalion to do my work on the farm for me?"

This question has been asked of every commanding officer at the camp for the last few days by officers from Cornwall to Lindsay.

The applications poured in to the officers, by telephone, wire and by personal requests by the farmers, who took a day off for the purpose. It was said by some that the applicants should be put into khaki.

Concert of the 155th Battalion

Tuesday night the 155th Battalion had one of the best concerts that has ever been held in Barriefield camp. After the football and baseball games were over, about 800 men gathered in the large tent of the 155th to enjoy the programme. Captain Dodds acted as chairman, and made an excellent official.

Warm Weather Welcomed

The warm weather at Barriefield Camp is welcomed, in spite of the fact that it fairly roasts one walking far under such a hot sun. The boys drilling do so in the very lightest of clothing, and find it very comfortable. The parade grounds were never in better condition, being hard and dry.

Fatigue from Poisoned Blood

Sluggish action of the liver, kidneys and bowels leave impurities in the blood which render it poisonous. Poisoned blood is the cause of tired, languid feelings, as well as of headaches, backache and bodily pains and aches.

By awakening the action of these filtering and excretory organs, Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills thoroughly cleanse the system, purify the blood and cure such ailments as indigestion, biliousness, kidney derangements and constipation. 25 cts.

Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills

This Leaves the Skin Free From Hairy Growths

(Toilet Talks)

A simple method for completely removing every trace of hair or fuz is here given. This is painless and usually a single treatment will banish even stubborn growths. To remove hairs, make a thick paste with some powdered delatone and water, spread on hairy surface and after about 2 minutes rub off, wash the skin and the hairs are gone. This method will not mar the skin, but to avoid disappointment, be certain you get delatone.

THIS IS THE 633RD DAY THE BRITISH EMPIRE HAS BEEN AT WAR WITH GERMANY.

THE RETURN OF RUSSIA.

Following the humiliating retreat of the Russian forces a year or more ago before the Austrian and German hordes, what must be the feeling of those two enemy countries upon the return, equipped for indefinite action, of the peerless bear from the land of snows. Is it any wonder that the admiration of the world is now given unstintedly to the grandeur of the Russian advance, as it has been given to the steady bravery of the French resistance and to the unavailing heroism of, the Belgian sacrifice and the Serbian fortitude under immolation. But it increases that admiration to reflect that a year ago Russia did just what she is doing now, only to fail at the moment when triumph was at hand because of an inner enemy; that, weaponless, she was driven back from her conquered lands to her own territory; that, undiscouraged by a defeat which was thought to have taken her out of the war, she went patiently to work to grow new armies to replace her slaughtered thousands, to fill her empty arsenals on a colossal scale, and to begin again at the beginning in 1916.

Germany must surely have thought her out of the war, and out for a long time to come. There is a significant bit of news in what The New York Times staff correspondent in Russia, Mr Montgomery Schuyler, wrote upon his return to America—that on the Russian front less than 25 per cent. of the German and Austrian shells explode. No such phenomenon has been noted on the western front. There can be only one explanation. The Germans had their best ammunition on the western front, their poorest on the eastern. Why? Because they did not expect any trouble on the eastern front. It is evident that their munition supply is not as good as it was, and probable that they have been experimenting with new substances. The experimental shells were sent to the place where the necessity of perfect ammunition was least apparent.

They thought, then, that the great defeat of 1915 had relieved them of the peril of the Russian advance, and it is easy to understand the astonishment described by the Berlin correspondent of the Associated Press over "the recuperative power of the Russians and their freely flowing reservoirs of both men and munitions." Brusiloff's victory of 1916 ought to have been Nicholas's victory of 1915. The Russians overwhelmed Bukowina in 1915, and their advance was as terrible and as irresistible as now, until at the moment of victory their munitions gave out, they gave up all they had won and more. The Russian bear went back, fighting with bare claws against deadly weapons. It was a heroic spectacle, which has gone without its meed; it is easier to be moved by the heroism of the small and helpless than of the great and powerful, but Russia's heroism was as great in its different way as Belgium's. Russia may be powerful, but the individual Russian, fighting with not much more than his fists against modern artillery, is no more powerful than the individual Belgian, and should be honored as much for his valiant, orderly, and undismayed retreat.

The groundwork of Russia's ignominous retreat a year ago was in the form of treachery to the nation's flag—graft in time of war. It is not so long since the arch perpetrator would have been hanged instead of merely imprisoned if he had wiped out a Russian victory to feather his nest and those of others. His disgrace and imprisonment are sufficient, according to twentieth century customs—another proof that there is a new Russia. The greatest proof of that momentous fact, however, is given in the reform of conditions and the patient assembling together of new forces and new munitions to give to Russia the victory she earned a year ago, and of which she was defrauded.

BACKED BY ENDLESS SUPPLIES.

It is naturally to be presumed that the Allies did not inaugurate their present mighty offensive until they had in sight a continuous supply of munitions of all sorts equal to any probable demand. If that is the case it means that the most astounding industrial undertaking ever achieved has been accomplished by them within the space of two years. When the war broke it found Germany with the fruits of forty years of careful, intelligent and persistent preparation ready to hand; and the Allies without either shells or the guns to fire them in any numbers comparable to the needs of even a favorable defence. For two years the British and Russians at least have had to make up their deficiency in guns and shells by the expenditure of men. So far as we can judge this handicap has now been overcome, and so far from lacking the weapons for defence the Allied forces now have in every front the means for energetic and sustained attack. The Austrians have consistently borne testimony that the present Russian drive has been distinguished from the former raid by the intensity of their artillery fire. The British guns, we are told, are now throwing a million shells a day into the enemy trenches and batteries. The French seemingly have fared better than their Allies from the first in the matter of munitions, and there is no sign of lack in their quarter. The Italians, too, are pressing matters vigorously in a theatre where artillery fire is the first necessity. When the history of the war comes to be written it will be surprising if it does not show that preliminary to the real fighting the Allies had to, and did, perform the industrial miracle of the ages in the creation of factories and the training of men and women for the highly technical work of making the modern weapons of war and of making them on a scale never dreamed of even in Berlin.

◆

A stage of definite achievement has been reached in the battle of the Somme, says a London despatch. Sir Douglas Haig's message reporting the capture of the whole of the enemy's first system of defences on a front of 14,000 yards after ten days' continuous fighting crowns the first period of the struggle, which not only is remarkable in its definite notification to the world that the period of the defensive has given place to the offensive on the western front, but which also has set the seal of efficiency on the new armies. Only now do we appreciate to the full the greatness of Lord Kitchener's work, which has placed Britain among the great military nations of the world and given her, on land, as on sea, a position in the Allies' affairs which will prove the dominating factor in the final success.

Fortnightly Review: There will never be peace in Europe till the German army has been utterly defeated in the field. An economic victory would mean nothing but a renewal of the contest at a later date. What must be crushed, if Europe is ever again to know security, is not the stomachs of the German people, but their belief in the invincibility of their own arms. If Germany surrendered to-day as the result of domestic famine, what would be the spirit in which her people entered upon peace? They would say, and with some justice: "We nearly took Paris, we hold the best industrial districts of France, we have run Russia out of Poland, crushed Belgium and Serbia, and hacked our way to the near east. All we have to do to win next time is to insure our own food supply for a three years' war—and that can be easily done."

Montreal Gazette: Railway officials at Toronto declare that they can hardly meet the demand for the movement of trains and freight because of the shortage of male labor. Mr W. J. Farrell, of the Grand Trunk, is quoted in the press as saying that on the Ontario division alone he could place a thousand men. Officials in the local terminals are engaging Chinese and female labor for the clearing of passenger coaches and like tasks. Similar conditions prevail in other industrial centres. The situation in a way explains the difficulty in filling the ranks of the overseas battalions with recruits. The men are all busy.

The Poets' Corner

THE BATTLE OF JUTLAND.

Praise to our Admirals all and Captains brave,
And to our Sailors, brave and bold, be praise,
Who kept our glory, won upon the wave,
This day unclouded, as in ancient days.

Did the foe think when he put forth to meet
And test the strength and soul of England's ships,
That time had quenched the spirit of our fleet?
That its proud flag would fade into eclipse?

Speak, admirals all, speak captains, sailors, bold;
Speak, thou brave boy, the Chester's deathless pride,
Why, dying, thy post of duty still didst hold,
Alone, and amid the dead on every side.

Speak from the Jutland waters, where to-day,
Ye shattered your strong foe, and bore across
Your flag in triumph, while he sped away,
Back to his coasts to count his bitter loss.

Well have ye spoken, ships of England, well
Upheld our fleet's victorious flag, and fame.
Honor to all; but of the brave that fell,
Bravest let us record young Cornwall's name.

A POET IN A PANTRY.

The Surprise That Awaited Tom Taylor, the Playwright.

Writing of Tom Taylor, the famous playwright and former editor of Punch, Leslie Ward in "Forty Years of 'Spy'" says:

"At dinner his appearance was remarkable, for he usually wore a black velvet evening suit. A curious trait of the dramatist's was his absentminded manner and forgetfulness of convention. Sometimes when walking in the street with a friend he would grow interested and to emphasize his remarks turn to look more directly into the face of his companion, at the same time placing his arm around his waist. In the case of a lady this habit sometimes proved rather embarrassing.

"Mr. Tom Taylor was a man of unbounded kindness in helping everybody who was in need of money or in trouble. * * * One day Mr. and Mrs. Taylor returned from a walk to be met by a startled parlor maid, who announced the presence of a strange looking man who was waiting to see them. Her suspicions being aroused by his wild appearance, she had shown him into the pantry, fearing to leave him in the drawing room. On repairing to the pantry with curiosity not unmixed with wonder they discovered—Tennyson!—quite at home and immensely tickled by his situation.

NOT A LOST CHORD.

Bach Had the Melody In Him and Just Had to Get It Out.

The Duke of Saxe-Weimar once invited John Sebastian Bach, the Nestor of German music, to attend a dinner at the palace. Before the guests sat down to the feast Bach was asked to give an improvisation. The composer seated himself at the harpsichord and straightway forgot all about dinner and everything else. He played so long that at last the duke touched his shoulder and said, "We are very much obliged, master, but we must not let the soup get cold."

Bach sprang to his feet and followed the duke to the dining room without uttering a word. But he was scarcely seated when he sprang up, rushed back to the instrument like one demented, struck a few chords and returned to the dining room, evidently feeling much better. "I beg your pardon, your highness," he said, "but you interrupted me in a series of chords and arpeggios on the dominant seventh, and I could not feel at ease until they were resolved into the tonic. It is as if you had snatched a glass of water from the lips of a man dying of thirst. Now I have drunk the glass out and am content."

A Slight Misadventure.

When Roosevelt was in the White House he received from an inmate of a penitentiary an appeal for a pardon couched in something like the following terms:

"Dear Colonel—Maybe you'll remember I was with you in the rough riders. They've got me locked up in this hole, and I want you, please, to get me out.

"It was all a mistake, anyhow. The judge sent me up for ten years for shooting a lady in the eye. I didn't mean to do it—honest, I didn't. I wasn't even shooting at the lady. I was shooting at my wife."

Cutting Diamonds.

The method of cutting diamonds is a very delicate one, diamond dust being largely used for the cutting, as no steel is hard enough for the purpose. It is remarkable that the diamond cutters can cut such small stones into perfect brilliants, but sometimes there are cut 100 to a carat, a carat weight being only 3.2 grains, and when shown in a bit of white paper look like a number of brilliant minute stars.

The wonder is not that diamonds are so costly, but that they can be purchased for any price within reason, when the rarity of good stones and the difficulty of cutting is all considered.

Fighting British Teachers.

Eleven thousand, four hundred British men teachers are serving with the forces, and about 9,000 have attested under the Derby scheme. In addition there are 147 serving with naval forces and 236 women acting as nurses. Teachers have already gained five Victoria Crosses, while 232 have been killed, 118 wounded, and 9 are missing.

A FATAL BARGAIN
OR
THE MAN WHO DARED FATE
BY
NICHOLAS CARTER

Author of the celebrated stories of Nick Carter's adventures, which are published exclusively in the New Magnet Library, conceded to be the best detective tales ever written

CHAPTER III.—Continued.

"It's for you," Chick presently answered. "You are wanted at the phone."

"Find out by whom."

Chick reverted to the instrument, and for several moments talked and listened. Then, turning in some excitement, he said:

"You're wanted at the district attorney's office right away Nick. They say you must rush."

"Who was talking with you?"

"Henderson himself, the disrict attorney."

"Did he state the trouble?"

"Yes. Henry Allen, the assistant district attorney, is mysteriously missing, and hasn't been seen since last evening. There's the devil to pay Henderson says unless he can be quickly located, or a batch of documents of some kind recovered, which he is thought to have had with him."

"Documents, eh?" Nick started to his feet. "By Jove there may be some conection between this affair of last night, the absence of the assistant district attorney, the loss of important documents—and this sudden drop in United Transit. I'll go at once, and—— Stop a bit"

Nick had seized his hat and coat, but turned before leaving and took up the boot heel from his desk.

"Here's work for you Patsy," he declared.

"Let it come, Mr. Carter," cried Patsy, who had been informed at breakfast that morning of Nick's adventures the previous night. "What do you say, sir?"

"Take the directory," instructed Nick, "and make a list of all cobbler shops and shoe stores between Harlem and the Battery."

"What then, sir?"

"Then visit each in a search for one where a boot has been left for a new heel to be put in. This heel is only slightly worn, you see, and it's not likely the boot from which it came would be discarded while so nearly new. The owner naturally would have it repaired."

"I see the point," cried Patsy. "You want me to discover the owner, it possible?"

"Exactly," said Nick, as he turned to go. "We've got only the heel of the rascal's boot to start with, but we'll end with getting the rascal's head. Set to work at once on this trail, and make your inquiries on the quiet."

"You bet," Patsy returned pointedly. "Trust me for that."

"Now I'm off for the district attorney's office," Nick added. "You remain here, Chick in case I have occasion to telephone you. I've an idea there's wicked work under way, and there may be something doing right off the reel."

"I'll wait here," Chick replied, as Nick hastened from the room.

Fifteen minutes later Nick strode into the main office of the district attorney, Mr. Thomas K. Henderson, a man whose strong personality, whose rigid adherence to duty, and whose vigorous execution of the functions of his most imporant office had for two years made him a conspicuous figure in local social and political life, a man honored and admired by every law-abiding citizen, and feared in a corresponding degree by the law's transgressors.

The first person to meet Nick Carter's gaze, however, looking pale and agitated, with a countenance reflecting dreadful consternation and anxiety, was Mr. Andrew Todd, the projector and vice president of the United Transit Company, and one of the chief directors of the Ironclad National Bank.

The instant he saw Nick, Todd uttered a cry and rushed from the door of Henderson's private office to meet him.

CHAPTER IV.
Nick Hides His Hand.

"Thank God, you're here Carter," was the greeting of Mr. Andrew Todd, uttered with brusque familiarity, when Nick entered the district attorney's office. "I thought you'd never come."

He was a distinguished-looking man of nearly fifty yet not a prepossessing man, in the sense of being winsome. He appeared full of business, the aggressiveness of which stuck out all over him. With him one would have said success consisted in riding roughshod over anything or anybody that got in his way.

Andrew Todd had close-cut gray hair and was smoothly shaven. His face was of heroic cast, with a broad brow, a prominent nose, a firm mouth and massive jaw. His eyes did not light his countenance. They were gray cold and penetrating. It was as if Todd's face were of stone and Todd himself looking out of it through the eyes. They who knew him best said Todd's face was a mask, invariably hiding thoughts he did not choose to express.

Nick Carter regarded him somewhat coldly.

"It is only fifteen minutes, Mr. Todd, since I was telephoned," he replied. "Not being blessed with wings, which I shall probably acquire in the hereafter I could not fly here, but had to come in an ordinary conveyance."

"Yes yes of course but it has seemed as many hours," Todd brusquely declared. "Minutes are hours, in fact, just now. Man alive, have you heard what's going on in Wall Street?"

"I have very little interest in what takes place in Wall Street," replied Nick. "I did hear, though, that your latest hobbyhorse, United Transit, has been badly galled this morning."

"Galled?—that's no name for it," Todd replied, with a sharp snap of his teeth. "The market is on the verge of a panic. I've spent half a million since noon, trying to check a total smash. It's all owing to Percival Fenno's operations—ten thousand devils take and keep him. I'll be hanged, Carter, if I can understand it.

"What explanation do you mean?" asked Nick resting carelessly on the back of one of the office chairs, yet furtively regarding Todd's flinty face more sharply.

"I mean this," Todd bitterly snarled: "From the day United Transit was launched we have been held up by injunctions granted by the courts, upon allegations made by this man Fenno, or his attorneys."

"So I have heard."

"We have beaten him time and again, only to be attacked in a new quarter, and with other charges and misrepresentations. Matters have now reached a crisis. The entire case, with all of the evidence, has been referred to Judge Packard, of the Court of Appeals, who has had it under consideration for nearly a month, and who is expected to hand down a decision at any moment. If it proves adverse to our innterests, United Transit wouldn't be worth the paper it's written on."

"Naturally not."

"But it cannot be—cannot be!" Todd insisted. "I will not believe that any sane jurist can render such a decision. It would be contrary to the weight of evidence, contrary to all precedents and——"

"But what about the explanation you mentioned?" Nick interrupted, with his eyes steadily searching those of his hearer. "I infer that you suspect, owing to this sudden market crash in United Transit, that Fenno has received advance information regarding this very important decision, and knows that it will be adverse to your company."

"That is exactly what I suspect," Todd fiercely blurted.

"But Judge Packard would not, I feel very sure, give information of his intentions before formally announcing his decision."

"What's the meaning, then, of this break in the stock market?"

"Search me," said Nick tritely. "I don't know."

"I tell you Carter, there's something back of it something more than an ordinary bear raid," Todd aggressively argued. "The market, when acting thus, always reflects some coming condition. It's never wrong. It's as reliable as a barometer. Fenno must have had some lever to work with, or he couldn't have broken the price of United Transit nearly forty per cent."

"How do you know the selling is for Fenno's account, or at his instigation?" Nick pointedly asked.

"Who else can be back of it?" Todd sharply retorted, with a first fiery flash from his squinting eyes. "Who else but this infernal meddler who has given us so much trouble? I know it's his doing. He has learned something from Packard, something relating to this pending decision. Either that, Carter, or he's the man responsible for Allen's disappearance, along with a lot of documents favorable to our side of the case. He now thinks that Packard cannot, without those documents in evidence, consistently render a decision favorable to our interests. I tell you, Carter, there's dirty work being done by that fellow. If the truth were known, it would land him in Sing Sing. I'll turn heaven and earth to get the evidence with which to drive him to the wall! Henry Allen must be found, and these documents recovered. That is why I asked Henderson to send for you. I'll employ you at any price. Money's no object. Come in here—Henderson will tell you just how matters stand."

THE TONIC THAT BRINGS HEALTH

"Fruit-a-tives" Builds Up The Whole System

Those who take "Fruit-a-tives" for the first time, are often astonished at the way it builds them up and makes them feel better all over. They may be taking "Fruit-a-tives" for some specific disease, as Constipation, Indigestion, Chronic Headaches or Neuralgia, Kidney or Bladder Trouble, Rheumatism or Pain in the Back. And they find when "Fruit-a-tives" has cured the disease, that they feel better and stronger in every way. This is due to the wonderful tonic properties of these famous tablets, made from fruit juices.

The Burglar's Hour.

"This is a poor night for burglars," I said to the policeman when I took the dog for his last trot. "You could see a mouse tonight."

"Yes," he said, "and hear it too It's dead still as well as light."

"What sort suits burglars best?" I asked.

His answer came without any hesitation.

"Dark, wet and windy," he said.

"Dark I can understand," I said, "but why wet?"

"Folk stay at home in wet weather, and they think the burglar would never choose a rotten night like this. That's their way of looking at it. The burglar knows that, and he says, 'My best time is just when I'm least expected.'"

"And why windy?" I queried.

"You can hear a cat sneeze tonight," said the policeman. "If a window or door squeaked the householder or his missus would be sitting up listening, and the old woman wouldn't rest till hubby prowled round a bit. But on a windy night it's different. Bang, rattle, bump, swish, clatter, all the blessed night."—Exchange.

An Obedient Man.

The other morning one of the regular patrons boarded the car at the usual place, but instead of taking a seat he started to walk back and forth in the car. There were plenty of seats, and the action of the regular patron attracted the attention of one of his business associates.

"What's the matter, Dan? Why don't you take a seat?" he was asked.

"Serving two masters!" came back the reply. "You see, when I started out this morning my mother-in-law reminded me that it was such a fine morning that I should walk to the office. Wifey, more considerate of my well being, told me to ride. I am trying to obey them both so that when I get home this evening from the office I can truthfully say that I won't have to lie to either of them." And the regular patron kept on walking back and forth.

Peasant Life In Palestine.

The actual peasant life of Palestine has not greatly changed since Bible times, and every village today boasts of its upper room, or guest chamber, where the men meet and chat about the local news. These guest chambers have been in vogue since the days of the patriarchs. Farming, of course, is the principal occupation. The Palestine farmer sows first and plows afterward, as a rule. He scatters the seed over the ground by hand and then plows it in. The plows are very primitive and are driven, as a rule, by oxen. A farmer's field is not marked off by a fence as we understand the term. In the mountainous country lands are inclosed by loose stone walls, still called by the ancient Hebrew name jedar, and on the plains by thorn hedges. When the open fields are owned individually the boundary lines are indicated by deep furrows, in which at intervals stones are laid as landmarks. It is therefore readily seen how easily these boundaries could be changed by an avaricious neighbor, undeterred by the Mosaic warning, "Cursed be he that removeth his neighbor's landmarks."

LIME AND CLOVER.

Failures in Ontario Clover and Pea Crops Attributed to Lack of Lime.

Large areas in Ontario are, says Prof. Harcourt of the O.A.C., naturally deficient in lime. In all parts of the Province the natural changes taking place tend to reduce the supply of lime originally available. For clovers, peas, etc., an abundance of lime is essential, and recent failures in these crops in parts of Ontario are probably largely explained by a lack of lime in the soil.

"The natural chemical changes that take place in a cultivated soil," says Prof. Harcourt, "tend to bring its soluble plant food constituents into a soluble form. These changes are essential to render the food available to the plant. But, among these food constituents, lime, at least, is rendered soluble faster than is necessary for food purposes. Naturally, unless it is again taken up in an insoluble form, it must gradually be carried downward with the water that sinks into the soil. For this reason the water of wells, of many springs, and of our rivers is hard or limy. For the same reason a subsoil contains more lime than a surface soil, and the latter may become so leached that it does not contain sufficient lime to neutralize the acids formed in the decay of the organic matter when the soil becomes acid or 'sour.' It is well to remember that the richer the soil is in decaying vegetable matter and the more thorough the cultivation, the faster the lime will be rendered soluble and leached away. For the same reason, the longer the land has been under cultivation, the more likely it is to need lime. During the past season's work on the soil survey, we have had abundance of evidence that these changes have progressed far enough to render the application of lime a necessity in many districts. In the course of the summer's work thousands of borings were made in the soils of the counties studied. In most cases the surface soils were acid to litmus paper, and there was not enough carbonate of lime present to cause any apparent effervescense until a depth of 20 to 24 inches was reached. In some cases there was none even at 40 inches. The only surface soil rich enough in carbonates to give an effervescence with acid was found in Lambton county, and that was of comparatively small area. On such a soil it would naturally be useless to apply lime. In some other places, as in the neighborhood of Guelph, the soil is not yet in need of lime, but the supply is working downward, while in other districts there is great immediate need."

Russians Enlisting.

The Russian drive on the east front is probably responsible for the drive of Russians from the west, with Toronto as a base. Already several platoons of Russians have been formed in the various units now recruiting in Toronto. In fact the Slavs of Toronto are setting a fine example to Celt, Gael, and Anglo-Saxon in proportion to their numbers. The Buffs, Beavers, and Bantams have each a platoon of Russians, and there has now come into existence a double hyphenated recruit, namely, Russian-Irish-Canadians, for the 208th Irish has adopted a platoon of sturdy subjects of the Czar. Five Russians were enlisted in one batch in the 208th Battalion a few days ago.

"They are great for palling together," said Lieut. Forbes Grassick, who has become a practical internationalist since he has thrown himself into the business of recruiting.

The 208th recruiting depot is perhaps the most cosmopolitan place in Canada just now. Men of every nationality seem to be interested in the war; letters come from every part of the continent inquiring as to conditions of service. There are a number of Serbians already in khaki, and a large number of Italians distributed throughout the Canadian forces. Lieut.-Col. Burton could have recruited a company of Japanese for the Bantams, but the idea was not entertained by Headquarters.

To Provide Artificial Limbs.

The attention of the Military Hospitals Commission has been drawn to the fact that certain persons are going about the country soliciting subscriptions to funds for the provision of artificial limbs for soldiers of the Canadian Expeditionary Force.

"It cannot be too widely known," says the Secretary of the Military Hospitals Commission, "that the most ample provision is being made by the Government for the latest and best types of artificial limbs, both in Canada and in England, for all the members of the C.E.F. who may have suffered amputation. Special study has been made of the matter by the Military Hospitals Commission, in conjunction with the medical authorities of the Militia Department and in consequence, a special factory is being established by the Hospitals Commission in connection with the new Convalescent Hospital in Toronto, for the manufacture and fitting of artificial limbs for all who require them."

Amusing His Fellow Sufferers.

Probably no one is doing more individually to relieve the monotony of hospital life in England than Sergeant Albert Blake, of the 39th Battalion C.E.F., with his one-stringed fiddle, made of a biscuit box and catgut, and other stringed instruments he is able to play.

Sergeant Blake left Toronto as a members of the 83rd Battalion, and had not been long on the firing line of Flanders before he met with an accident that partially robbed him of his eyesight. He was invalided back to England, and on recovering started out to cheer the lot of his wounded comrades. He is a good musician and his favorite instrument is a violin made from an old biscuit box. As a virtuoso on this strange device he is now a familiar figure in the hospitals.

SHOEBLACKS IN GREECE.

They Shine as Artists in One of the National Recreations.

Boot cleaning, one of the milder recreations that Saloniki offers, ranks among the national industries of Greece. To sit drinking little cups of Turkish coffee and having his boots cleaned at the same time is the Greek's ideal of a pleasant afternoon. The lustros, as Greek shoeblacks are musically called, though usually of tender age, is a true artist and is by no means content with the dull burnish that satisfies the English boot boy.

He first meticulously scrapes your boot clean of the smallest fragment of mud, then wipes it carefully so as to have a perfectly clean background to work on. After that he applies the blacking, not by dabbing the blacking brush into the tin, but with a variety of little metal implements and sponges.

When he has brushed this to a bright polish you imagine that your shine is over, but it has really only begun, for the lustros now goes on to bring out the high lights by smearing your boot over with a colorless cream which he brushes again to great brilliance and finishes off by two or three minutes' friction with a velvet cloth. He completes his work by painting the edge of sole and heel with a sort of varnish.—G. Ward Price in London Times.

Kitchener and Titles.

It is a long time since a dukedom was conferred, and, in spite of rumors to the contrary, it is possible that at the close of the war there won't be any more created, for the Earl of Derby is credited with the intention to refuse one, and Lord Kitchener thought it absurd to give titles to a man who has no one to succeed him. When he accepted his Viscountcy he had matrimonial ambitions.

He Got Away.

A bedraggled, oil-smeared, ruddy little man with something akin to fear in his big, brown eyes, stepped softly into the office of Arthur Concors, superintendent of the Hebrew Sheltering and Immigrant Aid Society, 229 East Broadway, recently, says The New York Tribune.

"Ich bin hier," he announced calmly, as though that were the most important thing in the world. And it was, to him, for 23-year-old Eugen Spitz, Austrian reservist and expert upholsterer, had walked all the way from Buffalo to New York with deadly fear of the Canadian army spurring him on.

Twenty-four days had Eugen been on the road, and his expenditures for food during that time had been just the three dollars, all that he had on starting. For eight months before he began his 480-mile walk he had been a prisoner in a Toronto detention camp, and his hike was inspired by the overwhelming desire to put just as much territory as possible between himself and Canada.

Canada's First Farmer.

The first farmer settler in Canada who lived on the produce of the soil was Louis Hebert, an apothecary from Paris, who landed in Quebec in 1617 with his wife and children, and at once started to clear and cultivate the soil on what is now the site of the Cathedral of Quebec, of the Seminary and of this part of the Upper Town extending from Ste. Famille street to the Hotel Dieu. At that time that part of the city was called "Hebert's Farm." With a spade as his only tool, he worked and re-worked the soil until it was ready to receive seed. He threw in the seed from France, planted apple and rose trees, and, at last, saw undulating in the breeze, the golden ears, the flowers and fruits from his motherland. The third centenary of the landing of Louis Hebert will be commemorated in Quebec in 1917, and a Citizens' Committee has been formed to erect a monument to the first farmer of the colony.

Atlantic Harbors.

The St. Lawrence River ports have been developed in a satisfactory manner, particularly Montreal, which is one of the largest grain-shipping ports in the world. Both Montreal and Quebec, however, have some disadvantages. Although not much farther north than Halifax, the temperate influence of the ocean is so far away that for at least four months every year they are icebound whereas Halifax is clear. St. John is barred mainly on account of the 30-foot tide change there, which would make any extensive construction almost impossible.

Orders of British Knighthood.

The titles of the different orders of knighthood are all of a most high and mighty description. The Garter is "most noble," the Thistle "most ancient and most noble" and St. Patrick "most illustrious." The Knights of the Bath are officially "most honorable," the Star of India is "the most exalted," St. Michael and St. George is "the most distinguished," the Order of the Indian Empire is "the most eminent."—London Globe.

The Swish of the Rod.

A college president in an address on pedagogy said:

"And one of the most remarkable changes in the last thirty years of teaching is the abolition of corporal punishment. A boy of this generation is never whipped. But boys of the last generation must have believed that their instructors all had for motto: 'The swish is father to the taught.'"

A GREAT DAIRYMAN.

Late Senator Derbyshire was a Builder of the Cheese Industry.

Senator Daniel Derbyshire, who died in Brockville a few days ago following an illness of ten days of paralysis, was one of the most interesting figures in the agricultural world of Ontario.

Born in the heart of one of the great dairying districts of Ontario, at Plum Hollow, Leeds County, December 11, 1846, Mr. Derbyshire was connected during the greater part of his life with the industry which he saw rise to immense proportions. So intimately and to such an extent was he associated with the dairying industry that he became known as the "Eastern Ontario Cheese King," being for twenty-five years President of the Eastern Ontario Dairymen's Association.

What the late Speaker Ballantyne was to the dairy industry of Western Ontario, "Dan" Derbyshire was to the dairy industry of Eastern Ontario. For about a quarter of a century the latter was President of the Eastern Ontario Dairymen's Association; he might almost be said to have been the association during that period. In physical stature, in personality, in enthusiasm, he was the dominating figure of all the annual conventions held during the period of his Presidency. Even after laying down the office of President he was a regular attendant at the annual convention, and always presided at one session at least. His work was not confined to the more or less spectacular duties of convention week. He went up and down the concession lines and urged the formation of syndicates for the building of factories, and largely as a result two-thirds of all the cheese for which Ontario is famous is made in the territory within the limits of his activities. Mr. Derbyshire was also chiefly instrumental in inducing the Eastern Association to take up factory instruction work, and, when the Department of Agriculture assumed the task later on, he loyally aided in making the new departure a success. His activities were not confined, either, to the purely factory end of the cheese industry. Everywhere he preached better cows, and corn as the basis of feeding the cows. In short, to Dan Derbyshire more than to any other one man Ontario is indebted for the pre-eminence she has long enjoyed in cheese-making.

He entered the business as a manufacturer in 1874 at Athens. He came to Brockville in 1879, and two years later became local representative of A. A. Ayer & Company. He served as Councillor and was Mayor of Brockville in 1889 and 1890. He was a big man in more ways than one, standing six feet four inches in his stocking feet. After unsuccessfully contesting the riding of Brockville in the Liberal interests in 1891 and 1900, he was elected in 1904, and three years later resigned and was called to the Senate, Hon. G. P. Graham being returned in his stead by acclamation.

Senator Derbyshire was a ready wit, also an authority on agricultural matters in the House and Senate. He was Grand Master for Ontario of the Oddfellows in 1909-1910, and was also a prominent Mason of several degrees. He was a prominent member of the Baptist denomination.

Steadiness in Business.

Why plugging beats dash in the business world is explained by a business man in the Woman's Home Companion.

"One thing that is hard for a young man to learn is that the race in business is not to the swift, but to the steady," he says. "It was not until after marriage that I learned that. Before I was looked on as a man of ability, but unreliable. I held half a dozen jobs, one after another, and was proud of the fact that I could apparently make good anywhere. I went to business every day with a kind of chip on my shoulder. As long as my boss was good to me I would condescend to work for him, but—I was as free from responsibilities as the wind. There was as good a job for me in Butte, Mont., as in Chicago. So, while employers paid me well because I delivered the goods, no one of them regarded me as a man to be built into his organization."

TOBACCO GROWING.

Handsome Returns Have Been Secured in Southwestern Ontario.

Many an Ontario farmer has never seen a field of tobacco and many do not care if they never do see one, yet many acres of this plant are grown in the southern parts of the province and the growers report good returns in cash. Essex and Kent counties are perhaps the largest producers in this line but the possibilities of the Niagara Peninsula as a tobacco section have been shown by the big crops of splendid quality that are raised on a certain 40 acres situated within a few miles of Niagara-on-the-Lake. The manager of this successful tobacco farm will soon be busy with his plants if he has not already started the work; but transplanting does not as a rule take place until well after corn planting time as the young plants are pretty tender.

Tobacco plants will usually wilt after they have been set out in the field, but they will soon recuperate and become firmly established. As soon as they have recovered from the effects of the transplanting, cultivation begins. A one-horse five-toothed cultivator is preferable for this work. Shallow cultivation is recommended. Owing to the very short time after transplanting in which the plants mature, it is essential that they get an early start. Hoeing to stir the soil and kill the weeds stimulates vigorous growth and is necessary for the production of large, thin leaves of good quality. The hoeing attachments for two-horse riding cultivators prove very satisfactory and economical in stirring the ground. At the Virgil farm, the ground is kept absolutely clean except for the tobacco plants and a few peach trees that have been allowed in the part of the field that was originally an orchard. A surface cultivator known as a rout hoe is used with good effect for keeping down weeds, but a good deal of hand hoeing is also necessary.

Topping, sometimes also called "budding," means the pinching or breaking out of the top of the plant to prevent the development of seed. If allowed to go to seed, a great deal of the strength of the plant is taken from the leaf development, for the formation of seed requires a great deal of nourishment. The topping is done when the plants are about 24 inches high.

Cromwell and Quinine.

We owe to Sir Clements Markham the introduction of quinine yielding trees to British India and the consequent cheapening of the drug from a guinea to a halfpenny an ounce in Calcutta, but the medicinal properties of cinchona bark had long been known. They were discovered by the Jesuits, after whom it was called Jesuits' bark. Concerning that, Sir Clements used to relate an odd coincidence. Oliver Cromwell died of tertian ague, and quinine might have saved him. In the very newspaper in which his death was announced, the Mercurius Politicus, there was an advertisement of Jesuits' bark for sale. But the name of Jesuit was abhorrent to the Puritans, and hence Cromwell's medical advisers would have nothing to do with it.—London Chronicle.

"Valley of Dried Bones."

The island of Jamaica possesses a "valley of dried bones." It is near the Cunacuma gap, in the Maroon country. This valley, though in the heart of the "wet country," is bare of leaf and life. The limestone rock is hot. Giant trees, which seem to have been blighted suddenly, stand up gaunt and dead. Although vegetation seems to have been dense here in former years, nothing will grow now. During the hot season the temperature is almost unbearable. It is visited by seismic disturbances, which cause the dead trees and hot stones to rattle like dry bones.

Too Old to Be Fooled.

A man entered a grocery store and ordered some eggs.

"That man always buys fresh eggs," whispered a small egg, peeping out from the depths of the basket.

"Huh," scoffed the big egg on top, "yuh can't tell me that. I wasn't laid yesterday."

A Cure Way.

There are several methods whereby pickpockets may be avoided on crowded street cars, but the surest way is to keep your money in the bank in your wife's name.

Impossible.

"Do you think it safe to marry on $25 a week?"

"My boy, no amount of money can guarantee marriage to be safe."

RESCUED BY ENEMY.

Fournival of Montreal Had a Queer Experience at Ypres.

A young Montreal soldier, Fournival, who had the experience, after being wounded, of being carried out of the zone of fire by a German, has just arrived here. Fournival, who lives in Chaboillez Square, enlisted in the Montreal Grenadiers, but eventually was transferred to a certain battalion belonging to the city which has been in most of the fighting. Fournival went to France with the first Canadians, and was wounded in March of last year and laid aside for four weeks. He went through Festubert and two battles of Ypres, and has now in the same deadly neighborhood received shrapnel wounds in the thigh which will put him out of action for some time to come.

Fournival was attached to a trench mortar party at the time the Canadians made their counter-attack by which they recovered the ground temporarily lost to the Germans.

"Our party," he says, "advanced with the battalion. When we had got some way, with every sort of fire playing round us, we had to go back because we had no more ammunition. The battalion, however, were all right when we stopped for the time being. They went on just as before, losing men all the time, but still kept going on.

"When we were ready to go forward again the battalion had got far in front. We went after them, and came across a good many Germans who had been left behind in our men's rush. Our chaps had just swept over them. Matters were so exciting that neither German nor Canadian thought of taking cover from the shrapnel fire, which was intense.

"I got hit in the foot, but took no notice of it, and went on for a time. Soon, though, I was obliged to drop, because I could not keep up with the others. I lay for a while, but then began to crawl back. A German, a big fellow, who was just wandering round, with shells dropping everywhere, saw me, and picked me up on his back, and began going to the rear with me, looking for a dressing station. He carried me easily enough. While we were going along I was hit again with a fragment of shrapnel in the same leg. My German was not touched. He spoke English well, and told me he was working in London, England, before the war. He got me to a dressing station, where I was at once attended to.

"My German waited around. I was just going to shake hands with him when one of our chaps said: 'None of that!' I lost sight of him directly after. I suppose he would be taken along with the other prisoners. Nearly all the Germans I saw spoke English well, better than you hear me speak it, although I have lived in Montreal many years."

Goulding's Scrapbook.

Eight years ago George Goulding, one of Ontario's best-liked athletes, was unknown to the sporting writers; now he holds every world's walking record that he has gone after, and every follower of athletics has his career "down pat."

Before he broke into the walking game he liked to do a little long-distance running, and incidentally got his name in the papers once in a while. He kept these clippings, and decided to get a scrap-book for them. When he got to the stationer's shop, however, he found that prices for good scrap-books were rather high. But the shopkeeper was a good-natured old man, and pulling down a massive volume, he said, "I'll tell you what I'll do; I've had this book on my hands for several years, but if you'll take it I'll give it to you at a rare bargain."

George was a little "hard-up" at the time, so he took this book. After he had filled a few pages he took it down to show to his employer. The "boss" looked it over a while, and then he said, "Well, George, when you get this book filled up I will think you really are an athlete."

Now Goulding has the book brimfull of newspaper accounts of his achievements, and has enough more to fill two or three more books.

Compliment to Foster.

Lord Northcliffe paid a neat compliment to Hon. Sir George Foster recently at an Australian dinner in London in honor of Premier Hughes of Australia. In supporting the principal toast, Lord Northcliffe said he did not know why a plain man should not speak frankly of those assembled at the table, and say that probably among them were the five best orators of the British Empire, namely, Lord Rosebery; that most eloquent of all Canadians, Sir George E. Foster; Lord Grey, Colonel Winston Churchill, and Premier Hughes of Australia.

Reynolds Newspaper, in an open letter extending a welcome to Sir George Foster, credits the Canadian Minister of Trade and Commerce with a magnetic personality, great vision, and high ideals, combined with practical experience as a man of affairs.

A Gift of Tobacco.

A generous contribution of 4,000 pounds of Virginia tobacco, donated by Mr. Henry Anderson of the War Relief Association of Virginia, U. S. A., through the kind offices of Lady Williams-Taylor of Montreal, is gratefully acknowledged by the Militia Department. The tobacco is now being distributed to the troops in England and at the front.

The generous gift proves the warm sympathy entertained by the American donors for the Canadian soldiers. Lady Williams-Taylor has taken a most active part in the organizations looking after the care and comfort of the Canadian soldiers, and it was through her instrumentality that this two tons of tobacco was proffered by Mr. Anderson.

THE CHAPLAIN'S WORK.

It Is One of Constant and Exacting Labor.

When a minister is appointed chaplain there are those who say, "Well, now that's a nice comfortable way of getting into khaki; why don't he go into the ranks and——?" But a deeper consideration of the military announcement as it generally appears: "To be chaplain, with the rank of captain, cannot but help bring forth an appreciation of the variety and complex nature of the duties of a chaplain, especially in time of war, says Morley B. Drake in The Toronto Sunday World. The other day a military man said: "A general glimpse over the whole field leads one to the conclusion that it is not easy to be a chaplain, and that it is not so simple a thing as it might appear to secure men who can make a success of spiritual work among our men in khaki."

When the present war broke out it laid new demands upon the work of the chaplains whose duties, important as they were, had not involved the constant daily labor for the spiritual welfare of the men, extended over the many successive weeks and months of life in camp and in barracks, under present war conditions. The situation had to be faced in a new spirit, and carried on on a new basis; new methods and appliances had to be devised.

In Military District No. 2, the leadership in the work fell upon Major J. Russell Maclean, who fulfilled his task with great energy and zeal, with the result that when the Exhibition Camp closed a year ago last month, much experience had been accumulated, and many new methods of coping with the work had been tested. At the Niagara Camp the system for work was still further developed under Major Fornerct, then senior chaplain, whose many years of service as a chaplain in the militia, together with his business gifts and training, made him a safe and steady leader.

Experience acquired at the long summer camp at Niagara—a quite new thing in Canadian history—was again made to serve as a guide for the work of the past winter, under the able and resourceful direction of Colonel G. H. Williams, then Major Williams, who joined the staff early last summer.

A glance over the past makes clear the fact that the religious work in the three stages, the Exhibition Camp of the season 1914-15, the Niagara Camp of 1915, and the Exhibition Camp of 1916, has in each case been different, because the situation which had to be faced has varied, and hence had to be met with new plans. To one who has seen all this, it is evident that a very great deal of thought and effort and prayer have been put forth by the chaplains who have with great zeal sought to make their part of the work assume its full share of responsibility for the life of the camp, and to be faithful to the confidence placed in them. It is also very delightful to recall the spirit of harmony and fraternity that has characterized the work of the chaplains with one another from the very outset.

Perhaps the most conspicuous part of the chaplain's work is the Sunday church parade. A year ago there was in Exhibition Camp only one parade. This was held in the transportation building. On the opening of the camp at Niagara the plan of one service was still carried on, but with the growth of the camp this single service became quite unwieldy, and four-brigade services were therefore organized. During the winter just past, in Toronto, another modification was made by giving a separate parade to each battalion. For the summer camp the brigade parades are being again resumed.

It will perhaps astonish most people to know that the length of the brigade service does not exceed thirty-five minutes, with a leaning to half an hour, but it must be remembered that all those on parade at these open-air services stand throughout its duration. This means that the sermon lasts only ten minutes, and a chaplain's position is in serious danger if he preaches longer.

No More Kilts for Overseas Forces.

A recent despatch from Ottawa says that no more kilts will be issued to Scottish regiments of the Canadian overseas forces. Units which have the kilts now will have to wear "trews" when their present clothing has been worn out. The pipers are to be the only exceptions in the Order just issued by the Militia Council. However, Scottish corps will be allowed to wear the Balmoral instead of the regulation staff pattern caps as a distinguishing mark. It has been found that the kilt is not suitable for trench work in rainy and cold weather, and has caused considerable inconvenience. Active militia regiments will not be affected by the order.

Not to Commandeer Wool.

Rumors to the effect that the Canadian Government is planning to commandeer this year's wool crop in Canada in view of war requirements and wool scarcity are denied by the Minister of Agriculture. No such drastic action is necessitated by present circumstances, but the action taken last year in prohibiting export to the United States, except under license, will be in effect again this year, according to present plans.

Wheat Carriage Expedited.

Exports of Canadian wheat during the present month show that the crop is being transported out of the country with great expedition this year. The total for this June was 21,003,485 bushels, as compared with 6,611,879 in the corresponding month last year. Canada is evidently not meeting with the tonnage difficulties which have led Australia to establish a State-owned steamer service.

A GREAT BATTLEFIELD.

Bulgaria Was the Scene of Rome's Struggles With the Barbarians.

"Probably not the least part of the interest which the traveler or the student will take in Bulgaria," Frank Fox says in his book, "Bulgaria," is the fact that it was the arena in which were fought the great battles of races declaring the doom of the Roman empire. Fortunately, from old Gothic chronicles it is possible to get pictures—valuable for vivid coloring rather than strict accuracy—which bring very close to us that curious tragedy of civilization, the destruction of the power of Rome and the over-running of Europe by successive waves of barbarians.

"In the fifth century B.C., what is now Bulgaria was practically a Greek colony, and its trading relations with the north gave possibly the first hint to the Goths of the easiest path by which to invade the Roman empire. The present Bulgarian towns of Varna (on the Black Sea) and Kustendji (which has a literary history in that it was later a place of banishment for Ovid the poet) can be traced back as Greek trading towns through which passed traffic from the Mediterranean to the 'Scythians,' i.e., the Goths of the north. Amber and furs came from the north of the river valleys, and caravans from the south brought in return silver and gold and bronze.

"Towards the dawn of the Christian era began a swelling-over of the Goths from the Baltic shores, sending one wave of invasion down towards Italy, another towards the Black Sea and the Ægean. Jordanes, the earliest Gothic historian, writing in the sixth century, gives this account—derived from Gothic folk-songs—of the movement of the invasion towards the Balkan Peninsula (probably about A.D. 170):

"'In the reign of the fifth king after Berig, Filimer, son of Gadariges, the people had so greatly increased in numbers that they all agreed in the conclusion that the army of the Goths should move forward with their families in quest of more fitting abodes. Thus they came to those regions of Scythia which in their tongue are called Oium, whose great fertility pleased them much. But there was a bridge there by which the army essayed to cross a river, and when half of the army had passed, that bridge fell down in irreparable ruin, nor could any one either go forward or return. That part of the Goths, therefore, which under the leadership of Filimer crossed the river and reached the lands of Oium, obtained the longed-for soil. Then without delay they came to the nation of the Spali, with whom they engaged in battle and therein gained the victory. Thence they came forth as conquerors, and hastened to the farthest part of Scythia which borders on the Black Sea.'

"It was in the third century of the Christian era," the writer continues, "that these Goths, who had been for some time subsidized by the Roman emperors on the condition that they kept the peace, crossed the Danube and devastated Mœsia and Thrace." In a later campaign Philippopolis, "a city which still keeps its name and now, as then, is an important strategical point commanding the Thracian Plain," was besieged and taken. Later in the campaign the Emperor Decius was defeated, the writer says, "in a battle waged on marshy ground near the mouth of the Danube. This was the second of the three great disasters which marked the doom of the Roman Empire: the first was the defeat of Varus in Germany; the third was to be the defeat.... Of the Emperor Valens before Adrianople."

School War in Politics.

Dr. Masatoru Sawayanagi, the new president of the Japanese Imperial Society of Education, was formerly president of the Tokyo higher commercial school and the Imperial University of Kyoto. There has been much rivalry between the supporters of the new president and the education department authorities. Dr. Sawayanagi taught at Waseda many years ago, but he was very unpopular with the students. Since then he has maintained an antagonistic attitude towards Waseda, hence his unpopularity with the present administration, which is mainly composed of Waseda or Count Okuma men.

Two Sons at the Front.

Lord Derby is fifty-one years age. Both his sons, Lord Stanley of the Grenadiers and the Hon. George Stanley of the Yeomanry, are at the front.

THE NEW P. C.

Sir George Foster is the Fourth Canadian to Be Called "Rt. Hon."

"The two living Canadian public men who have made by far the most favorable impression over here are Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Sir George E. Foster." This was what a writer in The Toronto Star Weekly says he was told not very long ago by one who is quite exceptionally well placed for gauging public opinion in Great Britain—at any rate in London—and who is himself no mean judge of public figures.

The raising of Sir George Foster to the dignity of membership of the Imperial Privy Council raises the number of resident Canadians who are members of that august body, every member of which is entitled to entitled to the prefix "Right Honorable," to four—Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Sir Charles Fitzpatrick, Sir Robert Borden, and Sir George Foster. The honor is, naturally, regarded as a very high one. Prior to its being conferred on Sir George Foster, only one Canadian who had neither held the Premiership nor been Chief Justice of Canada—namely, the late Rt. Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright, who became a member of the Imperial Privy Council in 1902—had been an Imperial Privy Councillor.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Sir George Foster! The one almost the direct antithesis of the other, and in so many ways. And yet he would possibly be a bad judge who would deny that theirs are the two outstanding figures in Canadian statesmanship. Of the two, Sir Wilfrid Laurier undoubtedly made the greater "hit" in the Old Country. This in spite of the fact that his general climate of opinion is not so congenial to an Old Country audience—and it is from his speeches that the British public mainly form their estimate of a visiting Canadian politician—as that in which Sir George Foster moves.

Sir George Foster is at his best when making a short, extemporary speech. There he is concise, cogent, and convincing.

It used to be said that his speeches frequently had about them something of a vitriolic quality. That is now no longer the case. As a politician he has mellowed considerably. He is no longer frankly a partizan. His attitude now is often almost non-party—that of a man shrugging his shoulders at both parties.

A FISH SURVEY.

Ontario Government Plans Inquiry Preliminary to Restocking.

A survey of the fish resources of every section of this province is to be undertaken by the Ontario Fish and Game Department, as a preliminary to the department with data showing stocking inland waters with game fish.

At the present time, while the fish resources of the Great Lakes are comparatively well known, the department has little definite information as to conditions in the inland lakes, rivers, and streams, with the exception possibly of some of the well-known tourist districts. The scheme now being put into effect is to furnish every fish overseer with a detailed map of his district with instructions to return it to the department with data showing the variety and quantity of fish in every river, stream, or lake, together with all general information available.

With these maps and reports on file the department will be able to "take stock" and to decide upon the streams which can be restocked with advantage when the game fish hatchery plans now under consideration are put into effect.

The Game and Fisheries Department has received from Dr. Prince, the fisheries expert at Ottawa, a report upon the immense speckled trout caught in the Nepigon district some time ago. The trout was taken by Dr. W. J. Cook, of Fort William, and weighed 14½ pounds. The size of the fish was so remarkable that its species was called in question. In order to remove doubts the department had the fish sent to Ottawa, and Dr. Prince has now declared that it is a true speckled trout. The Nepigon district during the past year or two has been producing some exceptionally large trout, due largely to the fact that the department has been protecting the fish from the depredations of the pike. Last year special men were employed in capturing the pike in their haunts, while this year the Department is permitting the Indians to go into the district without licenses to catch pike.

Boy Scouts Will Pick Fruit.

A call has come to the Boy Scouts of Toronto to help pick the fruit in the district of Clarkson. The call is going to be answered. This is one of the activities in which the boys who are not old enough to don khaki can help the Empire, and they are responding splendidly. They will be camped in the district of Clarkson in a number of small camps, each under a camp supervisor, and the whole group under a chief supervisor.

Arrangements are now well under way. The staff has been selected, and a large number of names have been handed in of boys who are willing to go out and do their bit.

A Marvel of Vigor.

When at about 75 years of age Sir Mackenzie Bowell made a trip through our Far West there were notes of admiration of the vigor of body and resolution of mind of so old a man. That was 18 or 19 years ago. Now in the 93rd year of his age the venerable statesman has set out on a journey to the Yukon.

FIXING UP A PLAY.

The Method Charles Hoyt Used to Develop His Dramatic Plots.

Charles Hoyt wrote seventeen plays. He would sit in the Pullman with the shade drawn down over his head and looking out of the window at nothing—thinking, studying over situations for some new play.

He would not begin work on a new play until he had its arrangement laid out in his mind. Then he would write it, longhand, in two or three days.

He developed his situations by talking over and over and over again his scheme for a new play. He would come to me. "Otie," he would say, "have you heard my idea for a new play?"

I would say that I had not. Then he would launch into it, elaborating as he went along. He would see me, later in the day perhaps, with some one. He would come up to us with the same question, "Otie, have you heard my idea for a new play?" knowing mighty well I had. He wouldn't wait for me to answer, but he would tell it to my companion, elaborating upon the version he had given me. For each new play I probably would hear that same question twenty times and listen to twenty different versions, each succeeding one more developed and elaborate.—Green Book Magazine.

Peculiar Vocabulary.

"Your daughter," said Mrs. Oldcastle after being conducted through the newly furnished wing of the magnificent palace occupied by the Bullingtons, "has such a splendid vocabulary."

"Do you think so?" her hostess replied. "Josiah wanted to get her one of them escritoires, but I made up my mind right at the start that a vocabulary would look better in a room furnished like hers is, even if it didn't cost quite so much."—Exchange.

Real Pleasant.

Nellie, aged four, was gazing intently at the visitor's new bonnet.

"Well, dear," asked the lady at last, "what do you think of it?"

"Oh," replied the small observer, "I think it's all right. Aunt Mary told mamma it was a perfect fright, but it doesn't frighten me any."

When a Man's Great.

"I would like to ask you one more question," said the youth.

"Let it come," rejoined the home grown philosopher.

"When," quoted the youth, "would you say that a man has achieved greatness?"

"When he deserves his own opinion of himself," answered the home grown philosopher.

Why He Returned.

"Back home again, eh, doctor? What was the trouble? Too healthy for you out there?"

"Exactly. There was only one case of sickness in town the whole time I was there."

"And I suppose some other doctor had that."

"No I had it. It was homesickness."

A MARVELLOUS PHOTODRAMA OF NURSE CAVELL'S MARTYRDOM

How in the world these moving picture concerns can reproduce such scenes as were connected with the life and murder of Nurse Cavell was the question that occupied the minds of every person who attended Griffin's Opera House last evening. A more realistic picture sketch—a more truthful history of the lamentable scenes, could not be produced, and until last evening it did not seem possible that such could be effected. It was truly an evening of pathetic interest—history repeating itself—and those who witnessed the scenes were well pleased. Besides this the programme contained many other bright screenic plays, making up a delightful two hours; all of which will be reproduced this evening.

Farm Home Conveniences

At the last annual meeting of the Commission of Conservation a report of a survey conducted on 400 farms during 1915 was presented. Some interesting data were secured respecting conditions in many rural homes.

Keeping the young people on the farm is one of Canada's national problems. Many causes have been suggested for the yearning for the city. The conveniences of the city home constitute one of the chief attractions. Notwithstanding this, however, very few farmers have introduced these conveniences into their homes.

Of the 400 farmers visited, 53 per cent. have young people in their families. With this large percentage of young people it is a regretable fact that only two farmers out of every hundred have bath-rooms in their homes. Only 6.2 per cent. have water closets, only 2.5 per cent. have a complete service, and only 2.2 per cent. have elecrtic light. In these 400 homes, only 16.5 per cent have the water piped to the house, and but 17.5 per cent. have furnaces in the home. These conditions are entirely within the control of the farmers, 86.7 per cent of whom are the owners of farms averaging 126.5 asres.

In hontrast with the foregoing, the conveniences which have been supplied by the government and public utility companies and of which the farmer has availed himself stand out prominently. The Post Office Department has carried to 76 per cent of these 400 farmers rural free mail delivery, allowing 77 per cent. of them to be supplied with daily newspapers, while 58.2 per cent. have the convenience of a telephone.

Only 2.5 per cent. have complete sanitary service in their homes, while 5 per cent have automobiles, and 31.5 per cent have either automobile or horse and buggy for the young people.

Much has been said and written of late to interest the farmer in the automobile, but little is heard of such household conveniences as the bath tub, kitchen sink, sanitary closet, etc. The automobile may carry the housewife away from her drudgery for a few hours a week, and to that extent proves a blessing, but the price of an automobile would provide a water supply and other conveniences that go with it, and render the home a home both to the housewife and the young people.

Canada's Forest Resources

The economic importance of the forest resources of this continent will be greatly enhanced as a result of the war. Enormous quantities of timber are necessarily used for military purposes, in addition to what is unavoidably destroyed in the fighting zone.

The shortage of tonnage has made it impracticable for the needed supplies of timber to be furnished on any large scale from Canada or the United States, and, as a result, heavy cutting has become necessary in the belligerent countries. While England is not generally regarded as a forest country, and has made relatively little progress in public forestry, there is still in England and Scotland a considerable amount of timber, mostly on royal and private estates. The imperative necessity for utilizing this timber has resulted in the despatch of a batalion of Canadian woodsmen to cut it for war purposes. Very large quantities have also been cut in France and in Russia. In Belgium, the Germans have cut a largely proportion of the timber and have used it in military operations or shipped it to Germany.

The result of all this over-cutting will mean a heavy shortage of timber for reconstruction purposes after the war, when it should be possible to make large shipments from this continent. This will mean a largely increased drain upon Canadian forests, and serves to emphasize the necessity for still more complete conservation of this tremendously valuable asset, if Canada is to take full advantage of her opportunities for world-service in this direction.

The greatest enemy of the forest is and always has been fire. It has been estimated that the average annual forest fire loss in this country is sufficient to pay the interest on the recent Dominion loan of $100,000,000. To reduce this loss, it is necessary not only to grant larger appropriations for fire-ranging services but also to reorganize such services in a number of cases, with a view of securing a dollar's worth of protection for every dollar spent. It has been stated on competent authority that at present more money is wasted on forest fire protection, for lack of proper organization and supervision, than is expended advantageously.

The importance of the forest in the internal economy of Canada is shown by the fact that the average total of forest products of Canada is in the neighborhood of $180,000,000, or an average wealth production of about $25 per head of population. Nearly $8,000,000 in direct revenue is received annually by the federal and provincial governments from the sale or lease of cutting rights to publicly-owned timber lands and from royalty and stumpage payments made upon timber so cut. Some 5,000 wood-using industries in Canada are directly dependent upon the supply of timber cut from non-agricultural lands.

The importance of preventing the continued destruction of this great resource can scarcely be over-emphasized.

Treatment of Sewage

The necessity for proper treatment and disposal of sewage cannot be too strongly emphasized in Canada. Many municipalities have been very active along these lines but unfortunately a greater percentage have been extremely negligent. The result of this, as shown in a report on "Water-Works and Sewerage System in Canada," recently issued by the Commission of Conservation, is that more than sixty of our inland water systems are at present receiving raw sewage, 180 municipalities contributing to this very undesirable condition. The practice of treating sewage is being recognized as imperative throughout the civilized world and would possibly spread more rapidly throughout Canada were some of its economic aspects better known. Recent experiments have been made in this connection to determine the feasibility of a new process to extract grease and fertilizer base from sewage.

Ordinary sewage sludge from settling basins is greasy, offensive and of so little practical value that farmers will not accept it for fertilizer, even as a gift; yet this sludge contains valuable fertilizing elements and considerable grease. The settling of the sludge and the extraction of the grease is facilitated by the addition of certain chemicals and the process is found to possess the following advantages:

1: The chemical treatment practically pays for itself by the sale of the grease and fertilizer recovered.

2. The sewage is disinfected.

3. The chemical acts as a strong deodorizer and prevents the usual nuisance of treatment works.

4. The fly nuisance is also avoided for the same reason. The process has been thoroughly investigated and indicate that it will not only be successful, but profitable.

ATTACK NIPPED IN THE BUD

Enemy Caught on The Fly by Allied Machine Guns and Driven Back

Canadian Press Special.

PARIS, July 14.—Afternoon statement—North of the Aisne, in the region south of Ville Aubois, and on Vauclerc Plateau, two attempts by the Germans to make attacks were arrested promptly by the fire of our machine guns. On the right bank of the Meuse (Verdun front) artillery fighting was very active in Souville sector. A patrol engagement occurred in Chenois Wood. On the remainder of the front there were no important developments.

Four Deaths From Heat In New York

One of Victims Became Demented and Jumped From Fourth Storey Window—20 Prostrations In City

NEW YORK, July 13.—Four deaths and twenty prostrations in New York City were reported to the police yesterday and attributed to the heat. One of those who died was a woman, who became demented and jumped from the window of her home on the fourth floor to a paved court. She was Miss Jessie Wanless, 50 years old, of 298 St. Johns Place, Brooklyn. She was an invalid and complained of the heat repeatedly during the day. Late in the afternoon, when the nurse was not in the room, she raised the window of her room and killed herself by jumping to the court.

Miss Philomea Cattenkron, 25 years old, who was also said to have been driven insane by the heat, was found wandering by a policeman at Bedford avenue and North Eleventh street, Brooklyn. She was able to give her name and age, but not her address. She was sent to the King's County Hospital.

Although not the hottest day of the month as far as temperature readings went, the humidity was greater than it was on July 7th and 8th this year, when the thermometer was just as high as yesterday. This combined with the fact that a land wind was blowing from the lower latitudes, increased the discomfort of those in the city.

The maximum temperature was 89 degrees at 3.35 o'clock in the afternoon, although the readings by even hours showed the thermometer clinging to 88 degrees from two o'clock in the afternoon until eight in the evening.

LIGHTNING HIT BARN

DRIVE OF THE ALLIES ONLY IN INITIAL STAGE

Will Continue Indefinitely, or Until Enemy is Driven Out—Need of Keeping up Munition Production More Apparent Than Ever—Workers Responding to Call For Supplies

LONDON, July 14.—(Special.)—The allied offensive on the western front is only in its beginning, declared Premier Asquith, to-day, in announcing in the House of Commons that the government had decided to ask workers to forego their August holidays because of the demand for munitions in France. He expressed the conviction that the workmen would co-operate in this plan so as to make it plain to Great Britain's foes that the offensive in its present intensity of bombardment and assault would, if necessary, be "continued indefinitely." The premier also announced that by royal proclamation the August bank holidays would be postponed, and he appealed to all classes for postponement of all holidays until further and definite progress of the offensive had been secured.

The premier recalled that the June and July holidays had been postponed in view of the urgent military requirements of the moment, and he had to acknowledge on the part of the government a very full response by the workers to his appeal at that time.

Since then, he added, a great and very favorable change in the military situation has been produced by the allied offensive now in progress.

CLEARED ENEMY FROM TRENCHES

Canadian Press Special.

LONDON, July 14.—The British in their attack on the second system German defences captured Longueval, Dazentin, Legrand and cleared the enemy out of the trenches in the woods, says a Reuter despatch from the front. This attack followed a heavy bombardment.

Mr Hatton appeared for the Crown, and Mr Wearing for the Children's Aid Society. Mr Spence, Inspector for the Society, was present also.

FIFTEEN GERMAN WARSHIPS IN DRYDOCKS FOLLOWING FIGHT

ROTTERDAM, July 14.—Special—From reliable sources information has been received proving that tremendous punishment was inflicted upon the German fleet in the naval battle off Jutland. The following fifteen warships are repairing in various shipyards:—The Dreadnoughts Koenig, Grosser Kurfurst, Markgraft, Kaiserin, Kaiser; the older battleships Rheinland, Hessen; the battle cruisers Seydlitz, Moltke, Derflinger, von Der Tamm, and the light cruisers Regensburg, Stettin, Koln and Frankfurt.

It is also stated that the Stuttgart and Munchen are repairing, but no confirmation of this can be obtained.

Everyone of these vessels was more or less battered. It will be months before most, if any, of them will be ready to seek another such "victory."

WASHINGTON, July 14.—An Admiralty cablegram to the British Embassy here says positive proof has been found that two great German Dreadnoughts, Kaiser and Kron Prinz, were sunk by torpedoes during the battle of Jutland, and that they now have been added to the official British list of German ships destroyed.

The Kaiser was of 24,700 tons displacement, and carried ten 12-inch fifty-calibre guns.

The Kron Prinz carried ten 12-inch forty-five-calibre guns. She displaced 25,575 tons.

Death Due to Intense Heat

Russian on Toronto-Hamilton Highway Drops Dead

HAMILTON, July 13.—A very sudden death occurred this morning on the Toronto-Hamilton highway, when one of the workmen dropped dead from heart failure. The gangs worked through the greater part of the day yesterday, but finally had to quit before the usual time, owing to the intense heat. This morning the men resumed work, and about 7 o'clock a Russian, who was wheeling a barrowload of stone to the cement mixer, immediately in front of George Brown's store, at Port Nelson, suddenly dropped, and when assistance reached him he was dead. He was noticed to fall by the engineer, who at once summoned medical aid. Coroner Speers when he arrived pronounced the man dead, and examination showed the cause to be heart failure. The coroner stated this morning that without doubt the intense heat of yesterday had considerable to do with Russian's death. He decided that an inquest was unnecessary.

The deceased was 54 years of age and had no relatives or friends in this country. He was in the best of health yesterday. The funeral arrangements have not yet been made.

HALF MILLION TONS OF IRON ORE ORDERED

Will Fill Nearly Hundred Freighters and 12,000 Cars

SARNIA, July 14.—Special—The Steel Company of Canada will ship to this port during the season of navigation over 500,000 tons of iron ore from the ranges near Superior and Duluth. This tonnage is the greatest ever ordered to be delivered at this port, and will require nearly a hundred shiploads. The ore will be loaded into cars at Point Edward, and will be hauled from there to Hamilton. Twelve thousand carloads will be required to move it.

LINDSAYS NEW ARSENAL

The laying of the corner stone of the Dominion Arsenal at Lindsay takes place tomorrow (July 15). General the Honorable Sir Sam Hughes and other Canadian notables are expected to be present, the Minister of Militia officiating at the ceremony.

GREEK ROYAL CHATEAU BURNED

King and Queen Flee to Safety Other Government Buildings Consumed

Canadian Press Special.

LONDON, July 14.—Royal Chateau at Tatoi, Greece occupied as King Constantine's summer residence, has been destroyed, says a Reuter despatch from Athens. The King, Queen Sophia and members of the Royal family escaped and took refuge with Prince Nicholas at his home in Kephisia. The fire started in the forest near the Chateau and spread to that building and to the adjoining barracks of the rural police, which were destroyed. Several lives, including those of officers, were lost in the burning barracks.

Two Killed When Sugar Pile Slid

Six Men Buried While Working in Hold of Steamer at Halifax, One Badly Injured

ST. JOHN. N.B., July 13.—John Arsenault and James Byard were killed and Ernest Malette seriously injured tonight about 9 o'clock, when about fifteen tons of sugar slid upon them while working in the hold of the West India steamer Caraquet, which was discharging cargo at the wharf of the Atlantic Sugar Refinery here.

The St. John consignment of sugar was being removed and adjacent was a large quantity for Halifax. As the St. John sugar was removed the wall of the Halifax consignment stood perpendicular in the hold. Suddenly, and without warning, the front tier of the Halifax sugar fell, burying three of the six men working below. Arsenault was killed instantly, and Byard died a short time after being taken to the hospital. Hopes are entertained for Malette's recovery. Arsenault and Malette are "longshoremen, and Byard is a colored man and a cooper employed by the sugar refinery.

YOUNG TORONTO BOYS ARRESTED AT PORT HOPE

Both Wanted in City on Several Charges of Theft

PORT HOPE, July 13.—Lionel Craig, fifteen years of age, 331 Wallace avenue, and Frank Sheehan, aged fourteen years, 22 Wallace avenue, Toronto, were arrested here on Saturday evening. The boys left their homes about ten days ago and have been wandering about the country ever since. When arrested they had in their possession two bicycles, two watches, a quantity of jewellery, a box of cartridges and a revolver. The arrest was reported to the Toronto police, and it has since been learned that both boys have very bad records. Sheehan recently escaped from the Shelter, and both are wanted in Toronto on several charges of theft. Their parents were communicated with, but refused to furnish the necessary money for their railway transportation to Toronto. In the meantime they are being held in custody.

ANOTHER FACTORY

PORT HOPE, July 13.—Mr. J. C. Wilson, of the Wilson Manufacturing Co., mechanical engineers, iron and brass founders, Glenora, Ont., was in town Wednesday, July 12th, and in company with Mayor Mulholland, T. B. Chalk and Councillor D. Hughes Charles, looked over the available factory sites in Port Hope. He was very favorably impressed with two of the sites and will return in a few days with his son to make a selection. He was well suited with the shipping facilities and the price of power. Owing to the shipping facilities in his own town, he is obliged to move and he strongly favors Port Hope. The Company is employing at present between 75 and 100 men.

VICTORY BEGINS TO FLOW IN DIRECTION OF ALLIES

Lloyd George Believes Germans Have Permanently Lost The Initiative — Enormous Equipment—Whole Complexion of Landscape in War Area Has Undergone Change

LONDON, July 13.—David Lloyd George, British minister of war, presiding to-day at an allied conference on equipment, declared that the combined offensive of the allies had wrenched the initiative from the Germans, never, he trusted, to return.

"We have crossed the watershed," he said, "and victory is beginning to flow in our direction. This change is due to the improvement in our equipment.

The conference was held at the war office and was participated in by Albert Thomas, French minister of munitions, Gen. Beliaeff, assistant minister of war of Russia; Gen. A. Dall Olio, member of the Italian ministry of war, and the new British minister of munitions, Edwin S. Montagu.

"Since our last munitions conference," said Lloyd George, "there has been a considerable change in the fortunes of the allies. On that date the great Champagne offensive in the west had just failed to attain its objective, and the French and British armies had sustained heavy losses without the achievement of any particular success. In the east the enemy had pressed the gallant armies of Russia back some hundred miles, and the Balkans had just been overrun by the central powers.

"The overwhelming victories won by the valiant soldiers of Russia have struck terror into the hearts of our foes, and these, coupled with the immortal defence of Verdun by our indomitable French comrades, and the brave resistance of the Italians against overwhelming odds in the southern Alps, have changed the whole complexion of the landscape.

"Now the combined offensive in the east and west have wrenched the initiative out of the hands of the enemy—never, I trust, to return to his grasp. We have crossed the watershed and now victory is beginning to flow in our direction."

FRUITLESS ATTEMPT TO STOP BRITISH OFFENSIVE

Day-By-Day Allied Offensive Wearing Enemy Down—British Piercing Ranks at Every Point of Attack—Coveted Ridge Held, While Shells Are Bursting in an Attempt to Check the Mighty Offensive

Canadian Press Special.

BRITISH FRONT, July 14.—After their methodical day by day approaches to within striking distance, the second line of German defences, and after having brought up material and guns, the British were ready for another big attack, and at half past three this morning the infantry was sent forward. The assault seems to assure the capture of Longueval and Bazentin Legrand, the recapture of Trones wood, the gaining of ground beyond Contalmaison and piercing of the German line at every point of attack. A correspondent who had been watching the artillery preparation through the night was able to see the British as dawn came in possession of a coveted ridge where the German shells were bursting in an effort of German gunners to prevent the attack from proceeding further. Reports at this early hour indicate the German resistance is much weaker than on the first line. The struggle is continuing in Bazentin-Le-Petit woods and in the woods beyond Longueval.

AUSTRALIA PLANS HOME MANUFACTORIES

LONDON, July 13—The government of the Commonwealth of Australia has decided to appoint a commission to go to the United States to investigate methods of manufacture and production and conditions of employment, says a Reuter despatch from Melbourne. To make Australia independent of outside sources for cables and metal ropes, the despatch adds, it is proposed to establish a government cable works.

Captain Crawford Tells of Dastardly Deed of Germans—Has No Faith in Them

TORONTO, July 13.—Captain M. M Crawford, now at Orpington Hospital, sends an interesting letter to Crown Attorney Corley. Captain Crawford is a cousin of Mr. Charles Smythe, who is in Mr. Corley's law firm and the following is an extract from his letter:

"Now let me warn you, never trust anyone with even a smell of German about him, prosecute every one you get your hands on, as there is only one good German, and that is a dead one.

"To illustrate. On June 2nd when our Canadians lost some of their front trenches, they had to leave behind Dr. Haight, of the C.M.R.'s who was in his dressing room dug-out caring for the wounded, and absolutely unprotected. When our boys took the trenches on the 7 of June they found Haight bayonetted to death, as were seventeen wounded he had in the station with him. This is but one illustration of the dastardly Hun and we are resolved to fight the cur to his absolute end."

ALIENS OBJECT TO CHANGE OF NAME

BERLIN, Ont., July 13.—The Ontario cabinet was waited upon today by a deputation of citizens opposed to the changing of the name of the city from Berlin to Kitchener. The delegation resented a petition signed by 2,500 persons, including many who are reporting monthly at the local registration office for aliens of enemy birth. They will ask the cabinet not to ratify the by-law to change the name, but to defer action until next year, when a new city council may be elected to negotiate for amalgamation with Waterloo.

MUSIC AND DRAMA

While a citizen stood absorbedly studying a poster describing some of the wonders of the Coop and Lent Circus announced to appear in Belleville on Wednesday, July 19, he was accosted by a friend who inquired "Ain't you got over the Circus fever yet?" Oh, yes, long ago!" laughed the other, but these here pictures is mighty attractive and I was ruminating on taking the grandchildren.

It is the old story! The irrepressible wish to see the Circus is father to the thought of taking the young ones. On many occasions one little one is found sufficient excuse for all the adults in the family taking in the Show, particularly when advance reports are enthusiastic about the excellence of the exhibition. The numerous interesting oddities in the Museum and the large collection of animals in the Menagerie.

The Coop and Lent United Shows are among the most important on the road. The performances in the three rings and the entire equipment is reputed to be the best, by the best that money can secure.

The usual two performances will be given and the big street parade will leave the grounds at 10.00 a.m.

Says Lansdowne Insulted Irish

Redmond Charges Him With Breach of Faith — Trouble Again Looms Up

LONDON, July 13—John Redmond, leader of the Irish Nationalists, last night issued a statement characterizing the speech of the Marquis of Lansdowne in the House of Lords on Tuesday as a declaration of war on the Irish people. He says also that the speech was a breach of faith, apparently made with the intention of wrecking the negotiations for a compromise.

"I regard Lord Lansdowne's speech as a gross insult to Ireland," says Mr Redmond in his statement. "It amounts to a declaration of war on the Irish people, and is an announcement of a policy of coercion.

"If this speech be taken as representing the attitude and spirit of the Government towards Ireland, there is an end to all hopes of a settlement. The speech seems to me to have been made with the deliberate object of wrecking the negotiations for a settlement."

As deserving special notice, Mr Redmond cites the following passage from Lord Lansdowne's speech:

"It is a bill which will make structural alterations in the act of 1914, already on the statute book, therefore it will be permanent and enduring in character. But it is an Act which will contain at other points temporary provisions, such as, for example, those dealing with the House of Commens, which it is proposed to set up in the near future."

CATHOLIC PLUG HAT IN PETERBORO PROCESSION

This little story is only given as a joke whilst absolutely true. Mr. Dave Ketcheson, formerly of this city but now official bailiff at Belleville, on the 12th wore a plug hat that did not bear the carmarks of 1710 as did some of the plugs worn. When asked yesterday by the Times, "Where did you get that hat?" (rag time music), Mr. Ketcheson replied: "I borrowed it from a Catholic barber in Belleville named Sullivan. On July 11th I went into Sullivan's shop and in a joking way said "I want a Protestant hair cut as I'm going to walk tomorrow in Peterboro. Sullivan remarked, "Are you going to wear the regular plug hat?" 'No, replied Ketcheson, "Well here's one I can lend you," and the plug was worn all day of the 12th.—Peterborough Times. And Mr. Ketcheson declared it was the finest plug hat in the procession.

Huns Force Prisoners To Make Munitions

One Canadian Sentenced to Year's Imprisonment For Refusing to Comply

OTTAWA, July 13.—Corp. Harry Hogarth, a prisoner of war in Germany, has been sentenced to a year in jail by the Germans because he refused to make ammunition for them with which to fight his own country. Mr. John J. Hurdman, of Ottawa, has received a letter from one of his comrades, Dan A. Siimons, formerly of the Postoffice Department, Ottawa, and a member of the G. G. F. G. Simons has been transferred from Germany to the internment camp in Switzerland, and now is in a position to write to Hogarth's friends and describe the latter's position, a thing impossible for the prisoners in Germany.

Mr. Hurdman has taken up the letter with the authorities here in the hope of getting some action taken, probably through the American ambassador. It is contrary to the rules of the Hague tribunal that prisoners of war should be compelled to make munitions. Corp. Hogarth is the son of Mrs. Geo. Hogarth, of this city. He enlisted from Port Arthur and was captured at St. Julien in April, 1915.

The letter from Corp. Simons is addressed from Hotel Valrox, Rougemont, Switzerland. He was with the Second Battalion. The letter, in part, follows:

Corporal Harry Hogarth is going about with a jail sentence hanging over him. Last winter, he, with some others, was ordered to go to a munition factory to work there. All the English in the party refused to go, as naturally they did not want the job of preparing bullets for their comrades. They refused, knowing that they would be punished, and really I think we should be proud of them. They were tried by court-martial and received a sentence of one year each. They have appealed several times, and at the time I left, they had sent in another appeal. I do not know how it will come out, but it is not very likely to do much good. If his letters stop coming, you will know that he has been sent to the prison to do his time.

Lansdowne Gave Cabinet's Views

Statement That Redmond Criticized Was Result of Consultation With Premier

LONDON, July 14.—(Special.) — The Marquis of Lansdowne, replying in a written statement to-day to John Redmond's charge that his speech in the House of Lords on Tuesday was a declaration of war against Ireland, announced that the speech was made after consultation with Premier Asquith and other members of the Government.

"In making my statement," he writes, "as to the permanent character of certain provisions of the amending bill, I did not intend to go, and I don't consider that I did go, beyond the declaration made by the Prime Minister in the House of Commons that the union of six counties with the rest of Ireland could never be brought about without the free will and consent of excluded areas.

"My statement with regard to the Government of Ireland during the interval which must elapse between the present moment and the passing of the amending bill represented what I believe to be the views of the Government, and was made after consultation with the Prime Minister and others of my colleagues."

Crop Prospects Better Than Last Year

General Conditions in The West Are of The Best, Says Vice-President George Bury

WINNIPEG, July 13.—"Comparing last year with this year the crop prospects are better today than at this time last year," said Vice-President George Bury, of the C.P.R., this morning. "Throughout there is not so much acreage sown to wheat," he declared, "and it is almost impossible to get the acreage accurately—the estimates of decrease varying from six per cent to twenty per cent. But even with a decrease of an average between six and twenty per cent conditions generally are more healthy in the west than they were one year ago. Apparently more land is being broken and summer followed; couple that with the same old optimistic spirit that made the west what it is, and one finds a combination that is quickly dissolving the depression that did exist.

"I have been putting together reports from our officials, our numerous agents, and several hundred farm correspondents. I have talked with farmers, business men and others throughout the West, and I can come to only one conclusion, the crop prospects at the present time are of the best. It is too early for a prediction as to the expected yield.

"The only thing we need now," he continued, "is more people on the land and I predict with a good crop this year we will see a great influx of farmers from the South. After the war the eyes of the people of the countries now torn by conflict will turn toward this country and we will then see immigrants coming in great numbers."

MILITARY MATTERS AT BARRIEFIELD HEIGHTS

CITY TALENT IN CAMP

The services being rendered by Mrs. Telgmann, Miss Norma Telgmann, Miss Phyllis Devlin, Miss Frances Devlin, Miss Anita Sutherland, Miss D. Craig and others who have given their services in song and recitation so freely to various units in camp, is very much appreciated by officers and men in Barriefield, and the spirit and willingness of these entertainers is worthy of special mention, inasmuch as they give their services absolutely free, and sacrifice at this time of the year their time and pleasures for the sake of the boys who are going overseas. All over the camp men are talking of the efforts of these talented local artists in the way of camp entertainment. The ladies mentioned form a concert party that would be difficult to beat in any part of Canada, and battalions in camp need have no hesitation in asking for their services, for they are more than willing to comply, and it is a pleasure to respond.

ANOTHER BAND CONCERT

The band concert of Tuesday night was such a success, and so much appreciated by the citizens, that arrangements are being made for another one next week. The 109th Battalion band, the 155th band, the band of the 156th Battalion, and the Pipers of the 154th are all willing to give their services in the park for an evening, and there is a musical treat in store for the people of Kingston from the military organizations of Barriefield camp. The commanding officers are willing to allow their bands to play. Colonel Hemming is pleased to give the undertaking his support, and Major Hamiltno, A.D.S.T. never fails when Kingston wants anything from the C.A.S.C. and will cheerfully play the Good Samaritan as he did on Tuesday evening.

OBTAINED CERTIFICATES

The following members of the 155th Battalion obtained certificates from the School of Bayonet Fighting and Physical Training at the course which terminated on June 10th at London: Sergeants J. Tariff, S. M. Ames, J. E. R. Dunlop, F. G. Moore, E. W. Wrightmeyer, F. B. Loveless T. Reynolds, C. F. Wallace, H. Stiner, and C. R. Lockyer; Corporals W. M. Spera, S. E. Carl, J. W. Day, W. Hawthorne, and W. Vincent.

AT SCHOOL OF INFANTRY

The following probationers were discharged from the Infantry School on July 8th: J. C. R. Manning, G. F. Manning, 109th, and J. M. Watt, 93rd.

The following probationers reported at the Infantry School on July 10th: S. A. Lepine, 155th; H. J. Latimer, 109th; C. E. Meiklejohn, 155th; A. C. Masters, 155th; W. P. Muirhead, 14th Regiment; E. A. Wallace, 155th, and E. R. Beckwith, 14th Regiment.

HAD ORANGE CELEBRATION

Wednesday was the glorious Twelfth of July, that day always recognized by Orangemen in every part of the British Empire.

The members of the various Orange orders at Barriefield camp had their celebration. They went by hundreds to Brockville and to many other parts of the country where parades were held.

NOW IN THE TRENCHES

Lieut.-Col. M. K. Adams, commanding the 155th Battalion, received a letter on Tuesday from his son, Lieut. E. A. Adams, who is in the trenches with the 14th Montreal Regiment.

Lieut. Adams went overseas from Belleville with the 39th Battalion, commanded by Lieut.-Col. J. A. V. Preston, which is now in reserve in England. He transferred so as to get to France, and has been doing good work. He mentioned in his letter that Major Vandewater, Major McLaughlin, Lieut. Bowles and Lieut. McCorkell, all of the 39th, were doing well. The letter was dated June 24th.

NOTES

Last year the 155th Battalion gave furloughs to 126 men to enable them to take part in plowing and seeding.

Col. Hemming and Lieut. Sandford, of the 155th Battalion, attended the patriotic picnic at Newburgh last evening, and spoke on recruiting.

The pay department played the 155th Battalion a game of indoor baseball, which ended in a win for the 155th. The score was so high that not even the experts on figures from the pay corps have been able to work it out yet. The boys of the pay corps are always willing to give any battalion a game, and are full of sport even if they don't always win.

ORGANIZED PARADE

Wednesday morning a number of the men of the 93rd Battalion got together and organized a good-natured special parade in honor of the 12th. They secured a few fifers and a number of drummers, and with Orange lilies in their caps they made a circuit of the lines of the 93rd, followed by a large number regardless of faith or nationality. It was the last chance the boys of he 93rd had to organize such a parade in Barriefield camp, and for this reason, everybody joined in the celebration. The old time tunes, and the old time songs were played and sang, and for an hour there was a merry time around the lines of the Peterboro' battalion.

A DESPICABLE ACT

On Monday last Messrs. W. Farnham, A. Reynolds, Fleming Reynolds and Rev. A. McLauchlin were at Clear lake trolling for salmon. While they were out on the water some person stole part of their harness, destroyed a rain coat, broke a couple of whips, damaged Mr. McLauchlin's buggy considerably, and ran a boat cart into the lake. The object was apparently to discourage parties from the village from fishing in these waters. If the guilty parties are apprehended it may be a very serious "joke" for them.—Bancroft Times.

What Dyspeptics Should Eat

A PHYSICIANS ADVICE

"Indigestion and practically all forms of stomach trouble are, nine times out of ten, due to acidity; therefore stomach sufferers should, whenever possible, avoid eating food that is acid in its nature, or which by chemical action in the stomach develops acidity. Unfortunately, such a rule eliminates most foods which are pleasant to the taste as well as those which are rich in blood, flesh and nerve building properties. This is the reason why dyspeptics and stomach sufferers are usually so thin, emaciated and lacking in that vital energy which can only come from a well fed body. For the benefit of those sufferers who have been obliged to exclude from their diet all starchy, sweet or fatty food, and are trying to keep up a miserable existence on gluten products, I would suggest that you should try a meal of any food or foods which you may like, in moderate amount, taking immediately afterwards a teaspoonful of bisurated magnesia in a little hot or cold water. This will neutralize any acid which may be present, or which may be formed, and instead of the usual feeling of uneasiness and fullness, you will find that your food agrees with you perfectly. Bisurated magnesia is doubtless the best food corrective and antacid known. It has no direct action on the stomach; but by neutralizing the acidity of the food contents, and thus removing the source of the acid irritation which inflames the delicate stomach lining, it does more than could possibly be done by any drug or medicine. As a physician, I believe in the use of medicine whenever necessary, but I must admit that I cannot see the sense of dosing an inflamed and irritated stomach with drugs instead of getting rid of the acid —the cause of all the trouble. Get a little bisurated magnesia from your druggist, eat what you want at your next meal take some of the bisurated magnesia as directed above, and see if I'm not right."

"DEAD" SOLDIER REVIVED

Surgeon Massages Man's Heart And Restores Action

A wonderful case of restoring the dead to life has just come to light in the case of Lance Corporal Mayes, of the Queen's Westminsters, who had part of his right arm blown off by a shell in the fighting at Ypres.

The injury was so bad that after the first pad dressings the limb had to be amputated. He went to England and was in a hospital in the Midlands for some time. A short time ago he recovered sufficiently to leave the hospital and went to London apparently quite well. But for some reason infection again appeared in the amputated arm and a further operation was deemed necessary to stop the danger of poisoning.

Corporal Mayes was put under an anaesthetic, but the heart collapsed and ceased to beat. The case seemed to be hopeless and the waiting relatives in a few minutes would have been informed of his death, but Dr. Lionel E. C. Norbury, the distinguished surgeon who handled the case, was the side of the patient and, inserting his hand and lifting the diaphragm reached the heart and gently massaged the organ with his fingers. The heart responded to the action and beban to beat again. The patient had been restored to life when all other means would have failed.

Lance Corporal Mayes is now on the highroad to complete recovery.

Liberals Plan Dog-Days Session

Organization Work to be Discussed at Gathering in Ottewa

OTTAWA, July 13.—The results of the Quebec and Nova Scotia elections and the two recent bye-elections in Ontario have put fresh life into the Federal Liberal party. The Liberals at the Capital are exceedingly active and the organization headquarters is one of the busiest spots in the Capital. The Liberal leaders are carefully organizing throughout the country, and plans are being made for an energetic campaign during the coming year. The life of the extended Parliament will run out a year from next fall, and it is naturally expected that the next session of Parliament will be the last. The Liberals are preparing to make it a bitter, fighting "scandal" session, with the idea of forcing the Government to the defensive when it appeals to the country.

Activity in Dog-Days.

As an evidence of the activities of the Liberals during these dog-days, when politicians usually go to the seaside, it was officially announced this morning from Liberal headquarters that a meeting of the National Liberal Advisory Committee will be held in Ottawa, beginning Tuesday next. This committee consists of fifty-six prominent Liberals from every Province, organized last December under the direction of Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

Preparations for the next election, the drafting of a new Liberal platform and the organization of plans will form the chief business of the meeting, which will be secret.

The objects of the committee, explained in the official statement issued to-day as "more aggressive and earnest work in spreading the doctrines and principles of Liberalism in bringing about cohesion of the interests of the party in the various Province and generally in welding into a strong, effective fighting force for the good of the country."

To Reserve Reports

The statement adds that it was the intention of Sir Wilfrid to call a general convention of the party for June, 1915, similar to that held in 1893, and he holds the view that it would be desirable to call such a convention, "at which the full voice of Liberalism from the Atlantic to the Pacific may have expression when the time is opportune after the war."

The advisory committee has a number of sub-committees studying the questions of national finance, problems of rural life, the establishment of a rural credit system, the welfare of returned soldiers, technical education, control of liability companies, bankruptcy law, social reform, health legislation, etc. These committees will make interim reports at next week's session for further consideration at future meetings. Upon their reports, the new Liberal platform will be formulated.

PICTON SOLDIER DIES OF WOUNDS

The sad news has been received in town that Pte. Bruce Cole, who was recently seriously injured by gunshot wound through the chest, has since died.

Pte. Cole enlisted at Picton with the first contingent and has been at the front since early in 1915.

He was one of the Picton boys who escaped injury at the first battle of Ypres, when so many of his comrades were killed.

He received the wound which proved fatal about two weeks before his death.

His death is greatly regretted by his many Picton friends with whom he was very popular.

ROYAL FLYING CORPS

Will Receive Curtiss Graduates With 30 Hours' air Experience

HAMILTON, July 13.—Col. Merritt of the Canadian Flying Corps, has received word from the British War Office stating that graduates of the Curtiss Aviation School who have had 30 hours' air experience, will be taken on the Royal Flying Corps as soon as they arrive in England. They will have a great advantage over men who only hold pilot's certificates, and will be eligible as flying officers.

WOMAN THE SUPERSPY OF THE WAR

One Woman Carried Important French Plans Hidden on Her Back, But was Caught

The extraordinary ingenuity shown by spies in securing the plans of other nations' fortifications has been amply illustrated in the present war, although, of course, we know but a little part of what the spies have accomplished.

A despatch the other day said that a woman had been caught at the French frontier seeking to enter Switzerland and presumably intending to return to Germany or Austria. She was thoroughly searched by a matron, as is customary in such cases, but nothing was found.

Certain actions of hers, however, had given rise to serious suspicions, and one of the cleverest officers of the French secret service was detailed to examine her. He applied several tests to her. To cut a long story short, he finally obtained what he wanted by seating her, undraped, tied to a chair, before a warm fire.

"Brutes, you are going to burn me alive!" she shrieked as she was forced into a chair.

There appeared on the lovely back of this fair-haired lady an elaborate design. To the experienced eye of the officer it represented a plan of one of the most important French fortresses.

The number of guns, their sizes and positions were shown. The angles, sallies, and extent of the fortifications were clearly indicated. The weak spots in the defence were made clear.

This fortress had been entirely reconstructed since the outbreak of the war, and it was of vital importance to the Germans to know its present arrangements.

A German spy in France, evidently a man with military knowledge, had obtained access to the fortress. There was but slight chance of his getting home with his knowledge. He had, therefore, used the young woman as an innocent-looking agent.

The master spy had traced the plans on her back with a copper preparation. This liquid leaves no mark on the skin under normal conditions, but when exposed to considerable heat it shows up dark blue.

For further secrecy, it is stated, the plan of the fortress was concealed within another design in the manner described by General Sir Robert Baden-Powell in his intensely interesting book, "My Adventures as a Spy"—work, by the way, that must be read by all desiring an adequate knowledge of this side of warfare.

For instance, the plan of a fortress may be concealed within the drawing of a butterfly. General Baden-Powell carried with him an illustrated book on butterflies, and from this he made what would appear to be specimens of butterflies seen in the surrounding country. Then, when he had obtained the details of a fortress he drew them in among the complicated markings on the wings of the butterflies. There they would escape notice by any but the most expert "spy trappers."

The method of concealing plans of fortifications on the skin of a spy already referred to has been employed with many variations. In time of war or when suspicion of spies is very keen it is likely to be very useful. Then, again, women are usually called upon to carry this kind of information, because they are less subject to suspicion and watchfulness.

THIS IS THE 634TH DAY THE BRITISH EMPIRE HAS BEEN AT WAR WITH GERMANY.

GERMAN HOT AIR.

There is a trend of humor—and it might readily be turned to pathos—in the attitude of confidence entertained by the captain of the transatlantic submarine Deutschland, when he assumes that "no British or French cruiser would take summary measures for his destruction should he encounter one or the other in open seas." As his is professedly "a merchant vessel engaged in lawful trade they would have no right to sink it on sight. They could do so only after exercise of the right to visit and search had proved his cargo contraband, and even then they would be obliged to remove himself and his crew to a place of safety."

Accepting such an exposition of international law as beyond criticism, it would come with much better grace from a commander outside the race that has so frequently ignored it in the recent past. And the captain of this particular craft might well feel a spirit of distrustfulness regarding his admirably sound argument. He might also wonder what would happen if there were invoked against it the other existing law, also international, with which he should be familiar—the law of military necessity.

Has Captain Koenig forgotten that when a merchantman attempts to escape a visit and search she becomes a legitimate target? An enemy ship, on sighting the Deutschland, would be apt to observe, or honestly imagine, the beginning of a hasty submergence that it might have a more than colorable excuse for opening fire at once. Hostile eyes, too, especially if the brain behind them were haunted by memories of the Lusitania, would probably have extreme difficulty in distinguishing between a fighting submarine and one that was merely a freight carrier. To devote even a few seconds to investigation would so near to a certainty mean at best failure to capture, and at worst the arrival of a torpedo from the object of scrutiny, that excuses for instant action about as plausible as war times demand would be ready.

But of course Captain Koenig was merely talking. He puts his trust in his facilities for prompt disappearances and invisible motion, not in any particular regard of his foes for his rights and privileges under the law.

We would enjoy being on hand when the Deutschland is sighted on her return journey.

THE IRISH ARGUMENT.

In discussing the Irish provisional argument in the British House of Commons, Mr Asquith, while speaking with reserve, appeared to grasp the situation in a manner that called for the utmost confidence. That the arrangement, as he described it, is such as was never before possible is quite apparent; in truth it is an arrangement that would never have been dreamed of—that would never have received a moment's consideration except in a great national crisis when the British Empire is fighting to preserve that freedom for its subjects which has constituted the light of the world at large. Under the unusual circumstances the acceptance of the plan indicates the sincere loyalty of Ulsterites and Nationalists alike to the Empire, and the traditional aptness of the English people to rise above prejudice and partisanship in great emergencies and clasp hearts and hands as man to man.

It is obvious, from the tenor of the Prime Minister's address, that a temporary settlement of the Irish question (permanent settlement being impossible until after the war is over) was imperative. His outline of the plan, so far as it is given in the cabled summary of the speech, does not materially increase our knowledge of its details, but Mr Asquith seems to have no fear that it will not be workable for the prescribed period, a year after the termination of the war, or longer if the Imperial Parliament by that time has not made further provision for the government of Ireland.

There was a note of pathos in his declaration that "there is no patriotic Irishman but has felt these common sacrifices (on the fields of battle) that have created a new bond of sympathy between them and us." There was deep significance in his avowal that a united Ireland "can only be brought about by the free will and assent of the excluded area." The six Ulster counties are not included in the tentative agreement. They will not be represented in the temporary Irish Parliament. But the hope is justifiable that the dissension may disappear while the experimental plan is in force and that the new bond of sympathy may cause Ulster in the future to view with a kindlier spirit the will of the rest of Ireland to be self-governing, so that when the time comes home rule may be firmly established and all the animosities of the past buried.

A leading German scientist, who for years has been studying infantile paralysis in the Scandinavian countries, where it breaks out in periodical epidemics, is said to have "invented" a cure which has been successfully tested in Sweden and Norway. As soon as news of the epidemic in New York reached Berlin the discoverer of the cure consulted the German Government as to the advisability of offering it to the stricken American communities. The Government readily agreed to the project, and to quote further the Amsterdam despatch which gives us the news, "A German submersible merchantman is now carrying to New York a mysterious German cure for infantile paralysis. The cure is an "invention," the submarine is a series of inventions. The story has the appearance of being something like an invention, too.

Montreal Gazette: Various explanations are being made in the press concerning the result of the Ontario by-election in North Perth, where Mr Wellington Hay, Liberal, won with a majority of over 600. In the election of 1914 Mr Torrance, Conservative, had a majority of 1,117. The turn about was great and is the cause of much conjecture. The Government candidate's defeat is attributed to the bilingual agitation, to the German vote, to the aggressiveness of the liquor interests, to the munitions enquiry exposures, to popular anger because the western Ontario troops are being trained at Camp Borden instead of in the home district, and, in fact, to every political issue, provincial or federal, that is being discussed in any quarter. The student of politics can take his choice and satisfy himself.

Berliner Tageblatt: Although signs of the Russian offensive had been noted, it was hardly expected that the new forces would be able to launch a general offensive on a 250-mile front. It is obvious that the Russians are showing an uncommon amount of energy. Their advance is no slight achievement. If we are optimistic, we can say that Russia is staking her last great force. If we judge more carefully, we must bear in mind that populous Russia produces at least two million young men annually whom Russia has so far been able to turn into soldiers.

Alderman Davidson of Winnipeg is quoted as saying that the citizens will throw overboard the whole daylight-saving scheme before the summer is over. The system is unbearable, he declares. In London, Ont., the City Council has received the second petition for the repeal of the by-law which ordered that the hands of the clock be moved forward an hour in the summer and back again in the fall.

Current Comment

The Toronto Star is of the opinion that the Conservative party in Ontario is "tired." Why shouldn't it be—listening to the wild stories and reckless imaginings of the Liberal truce-breakers?—Guelph Herald.

No doubt when the news of the riots at Borden Camp reaches Berlin, it will have taken the form of a conquest of Toronto, with several blocks of buildings burned up and hundreds dead.—Ottawa Free Press.

The man who offers fifty thousand dollars for the privilege of going to Germany as a passenger in the submarine Deutschland can't place much confidence in those stories of a regular weekly service.—Montreal Star.

As a game between the Ins and Outs, in which whoever wins, the country loses, Politics is played out. And the People know it.—Toronto Globe. We shall now expect the Globe to cease its revilings on political questions.

The Weekly Sun also interprets the North Perth election as a defeat for both parties. Usually it is only the Toronto Telegram which undertakes to prove that the Liberals lose when they lose and do not win when they win.—Toronto Star.

A great how-do-you-do is being made out of the fact that Germany was able to get a merchant submarine across the Atlantic, while when Britain took ten submarines across from this side not a word was said—for the very good reason that nothing was wanted to be said.

"The World has burst the monopoly of the International Nickel Company," shouts the Toronto World. Did anyone hear anything snap? If the monopoly in question is going to be "burst" by action of the Dominion Government, the man to thank will not be Billy Maclean, but Captain Koenig of the submarine Deutschland.—Hamilton Herald.

The Poets' Corner

DON'T YOU SEE?

The day was hotter than words can tell,
So hot the jelly-fish wouldn't jell,
The halibut went all to butter,
And the cat-fish had only force to utter
A faint sea-mew—ay, though some have doubted,
The carp he carped and the horn-pout pouted.

The sardonic sardine had his sly heart's wish
When the angel fish fought with the paradise-fish;
'Twas a sight gave the blue-fish the blues to see,
But the seal concealed a wicked glee.
The day it went from bad to worse,
Till the pickerel picked the purse-crab's purse.

And that crab felt crabbeder yet, no doubt,
Because the oyster wouldn't shell out;
The sculpin would sculp, but hadn't a model,
And the cod-fish begged for something to coddle:
But to both the dolphin refused to doll,
Till the whale was obliged to whale them all.

NEWEST BRITISH PEER.

Henry Chaplin Has Been a Minister in England's Cabinet.

The Rt. Hon. Henry Chaplin, who has just been created a peer, has discharged the duties of leader of the nominal Opposition, in virtue of his seniority among ex-Cabinet Ministers, since the formation of the coalition Government. It is said that Mr. Chaplin's failing health necessitates his retirement from the strenuous life of the Lower Chamber, of which, by the way, he has been a member—and almost continuously—for nearly fifty years. The son of a parson—that kind of parson who was both country gentleman and clergyman, and was termed a "squarson"—and educated at Harrow and Christ Church, Oxford. The new peer is 75 years old. While quite a young man he came into splendid inheritance in the shape of the Blankeney Estate in Lincolnshire—to this day he is termed the Squire of Blankeney in the House of Commons. The estate consisted of many thousands of acres of valuable land and a splendid mansion, and the rent roll was pretty nearly a quarter of a million dollars a year. Harry Chaplin—he is one of those men who are "Harry" all their lives—got through the lot in pretty short order.

For truth to tell, this now veteran statesman and newly-made peer was not a little of a roysterer in the days of his hot youth. Hunting, shooting, deer stalking, racing, card playing, dining, wining, and the rest of it—he was the equal of the best at any or all of these. When King Edward was acting the part of madcap Prince Hal, Harry Chaplin was one of his nearest and dearest intimates. He is said to have won as much as $500,000 on a single race, and doubtless has before now many times lost pretty nearly that sum. In his old age he was glad to accept a pension such as an ex-Cabinet Minister of impoverished means is entitled to, of about $6,000 a year, and to live at Stafford House as practically a pensioner on the bounty of the Duke of Sutherland, his kinsman by marriage.

Yet, with all his faults and foibles—and they are neither few nor small—Mr. Chaplin has always been a great favorite in the House of Commons. Squire, sportsman, and something of a scholar—in the sense that he has cultivated a taste for literature such as is not often possessed by the average country gentleman—he is very far from being a fool in public matters, whatever he may have proved himself to be in the management of his own affairs. In fact, so astute a judge as Disraeli welcomed him as a recruit of promise when he was first returned to Parliament to swell the ranks of the Conservative minority in the year 1868. His admiration for Disraeli has affected his Parliamentary style almost beyond belief. When a young and impressionable member he was accustomed to note that great man's air of Olympian reflection and his assumed grandiloquence of manner, and he came to the conclusion that if these were essential to Parliamentary success he would succeed in Parliament. However, Disraeli possessed a good deal that Harry Chaplin conspicuously lacks. And so, though the latter has been a Cabinet Minister, he has never reached a higher position than that of a second-rate man.

To Boycott German Goods.

A society was formed recently in various important towns in South Africa under the title of the British Patriotic Traders and Consumers' Alliance. The object of this alliance is to enlist members pledged not to buy German-made goods, to dissuade others from doing so, and to exert their influence to induce traders to support this movement, thereby encouraging trade within the Empire.

A Maori Kaiser.

Fifty armed police recently attacked the Maori Prophet Rua, who proclaimed himself to be a Kaiser, and his armed followers, in the bush. They succeeded in capturing the Prophet, and in the fight killed two Maoris, including Rua's son. Four policemen were wounded, two of them seriously. The trouble originated in the conviction of Rua for illicit sale of liquor.

Coal Owner Loses Two Sons.

Lord Joicey, who has lost a second son in the war, is probably the greatest coal-owner in the United Kingdom. His father worked in the pits, and that fact lends an added appropriateness to the family coat of arms, in which two miners' picks and two Shetland ponies stand out prominently.

SYNOPSIS OF COAL MINING REGULATIONS.

Coal mining rights of the Dominion, in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, the Yukon Territories, the North-West Territories and in a portion of the Province of British Columbia, may be leased for a term of twenty-one years at an annual rental of $1 an acre. Not more than 2,560 acres will be leased to one applicant.

Applications for a lease must be made by the applicant in person to the Agent or Sub-Agent of the district in which the rights applied for are situated.

In surveyed territory the land must be described by sections or legal sub-divisions of sections and in unsurveyed territory the tract applied for shall be staked by the applicant himself.

Each application must be accompanied by a fee of $5 which will be refunded if the rights applied for are not available, but not otherwise. A royalty shall be paid on the merchantable output of the mine at the rate of five cents per ton.

The person operating the mine shall furnish the Agent with sworn returns accounting for the full quantity of merchantable coal mined and pay the royalty thereon. If the coal mining rights are not being operated, such returns should be furnished at least once a year.

The lease will include the coal mining rights only, but the lessee may be permitted to purchase whatever available surface rights may be considered necessary for the working of the mine at the rate of $10.00 an acre.

For full information application should be made to the Secretary of the Department of the Interior, Ottawa, or to any Agent or Sub-Agent of Dominion Lands.

A FATAL BARGAIN
OR
THE MAN WHO DARED FATE

BY

NICHOLAS CARTER

Author of the celebrated stories of Nick Carter's adventures, which are published exclusively in the New Magnet Library, conceded to be the best detective tales ever written

CHATER IV.—Continued

Nick had let him run on without interrupting, believing that was the surest way of learning, with his own discernment, precisely how matters stood. While he did not fancy this man Todd, he did not underestimate the vast importance of the case, nor forget that millions were involved in it.

Without replying to Todd's declaration as to employing him, made in his peremptory fashion, Nick followed him into the private office of the district attorney.

An entirely different type of business man, dark and grave yet agreeable in his quiet earnestness, nor offensive even when more forcibly moved, Tom Henderson quickly rose from his desk and dismissed a stenographer with whom he had been busy. Extending his hand, he drew the detective to a chair near his own, saying affably:

"Glad to see you, Nick."

"Same to you, Tom."

"Take this chair. We seem to be in a bad mess here, to say nothing of our anxiety, and perhaps you can help us out."

"I hope so."

"As I 'phoned you, my chief assistant, Henry Allen, is mysteriously missing, also a quantity of important papers relating to the case of Fenno versus The United Transit Company, upon which he was at work most of yesterday and last evening. I cannot imagine what has befallen him, for I know him to be a man of regular habits and sterling character. If any ill has——"

"Answer a few questions for me, Tom," suggested Nick, interrupting. "I may be able to aid you."

"Certainly. As many as you like."

For various reasons, Nick was not inclined at any time to state what had occurred the previous night, nor what he now suspected.

Naturally, under the circumstances described, all that appeared on the station-house blotter, from which the newspaper reporters obtain much of the police news, was the report that an unknown man had been assaulted about midnight in Sixty-fourth Street, and that his assailant had escaped by entering the New York Central tunnel, into which he was vainly followed by one of the city detectives. Only inconspicuous items of a corresponding character, with no mention of names, had appeared in the morning newspapers; and Nick knew that only a very few persons were informed of the actual facts.

This reserve which was quite habitual to the great detective, often proved to be to his advantage; and Nick now felt instinctively that nothing was to be gained by disclosing the facts in the presence of one so seriously concerned in the law case involved.

Instead, Nick, at once proceeded to question the district attorney, with whom he enjoyed exceedingly friendly relations.

"At what hour did Allen leave here?" he asked, while Todd hung over Henderson's desk, an attentive listener.

"After eleven o'clock" replied the district attorney. "He was the last to leave, so we cannot be exact. A watchman employed outside states, however, that he saw Allen going home about half-past eleven, as nearly as he can tell."

"Is he positive of Allen's identity?"

"Yes. He knows him well, and bade him good night."

"Do you know what kept him so late?"

"Yes, indeed," said Henderson. "Yesterday morning Judge Packard brought in a lot of documents and records relating to the case mentioned, and asked if he might have Allen look up numerous precedents and rulings bearing on some of them, as well as prepare others for the judge's convenience in rendering an early decision. He stated that he was hard pressed for time, and would greatly appreciate the favor."

"Yes, yes, I see," nodded Nick.

"Naturally, I was very glad to consent. The work proved to be considerable, however, for Allen was engaged upon it the entire day, and, presumably, until nearly midnight."

"Was it imperative that it should be done yesterday?" asked Nick. "Why did he not leave part of it until to-day?"

"Because Judge Packard asked him to finish it yesterday, if possible, and take the papers home with him, that he might call at Allen's residence for them this morning, instead of coming to this office," Henderson gravely explained.

"H'm! Just so," Nick thoughtfully murmured. "Where does Allen live?"

"On Park Avenue, near Sixty-fourth Street."

"Is it more convenient for Judge Packard to go there from his own residence, than to come to this office?"

"Yes. He lives only a few blocks below Allen."

"Has he ever made similar requests at his office?"

"Yes, on several occasions."

"Have you heard from Judge Packard to-day?"

"Yes indeed," Henderson nodded. "He called at Allen's residence about ten o'clock this morning, but the latter's wife could only inform him that Mr. Allen had not returned on the previous night, and that she supposed that official business had detained him."

"I see."

"About an hour later," Henderson added, "Packard telephoned me from his office, asking me to have Allen bring the papers to him, as he wanted to examine them and render a decision to-day, if possible, and get the case off his mind."

"You informed him of the absence of Allen and the papers?"

"Yes, of course."

"What did he say?"

"Only what one naturally would have said under such circumstances" Henderson replied. "He expressed a hope that no ill had befallen Allen, and asked me to inform him as soon as he was heard from, as well as take steps to locate him."

"Did he say anything about the missing documents?"

"He said he knew of what they consisted, Nick, and that their loss would not seriously affect his judgment of the case. He intimated that he had asked Allen to go through them only to positively confirm, with his report, the views he had already formed."

"I see," Nick nodded attentively. "There seems to be no reasonable doubt that Allen started for home last night at the time stated, and also had the papers with him."

"No doubt whatever, Nick, in my opinion."

"In what would he have carried the papers, think you?"

"There is no question as to that," Henderson quickly answered. "He would have carried them in a green baize bag, one in which Judge Packard brought them here."

"Ah, yes, of course," Nick observed, now convinced that this bag was what he had seen hanging to the ruffian's arm during the fight in the tunnel. "Are you very sure, Henderson, that Mr. Allen is entirely trustworthy?"

"As sure as one can be Nick, in his judgment of another."

"There is one question I want you to answer, Mr. Todd," said Nick, turning to him with rather startled abruptness.

"What's that?" Todd demanded, with a sharper squint at the detective.

"Why, if you feel sure that the missing papers are favorable to your side of this case, and if Judge Packard has intimated that the loss of them will not influence his decision, why are you so infernally disturbed by their loss and so anxious for their speedy recovery?"

The incentive to the question was too obvious to be mistaken. A tinge of red appeared in Todd's cheeks, and his searching squint became an aggressive glare.

"Only because of this smash in the market," he replied, with an asperity plainly betraying his resentment. "There is some reason for it, some weighty reason. I know, as well as I wish to know, that it's the work of this man Fenno, and I draw the one and only reasonable conclusion."

"What conclusion, Mr. Todd?" Nick blandly inquired.

"It is obvious to me," Todd forcibly explained, "that Fenno must have learned that Judge Packard left these very important papers in this office, that Allen was asked to do certain work in connection with them, and take them home with him last night. Man alive, can't you see what an opportunity would be presented, assuming that Fenno thinks Packard's decision depends upon these papers and the result of the work done by Allen?"

"Ah, yes, I now see the point," said Nick, as if hit with an idea. "You evidently think Fenno, or somebody in his employ, may have waylaid Allen and got away with both him and the paers."

"That is precisely what I suspect," Todd harshly declared. "That would explain the existing situation and this crash in United Transit stock. If Fenno has done this knavish job, of which I know he's capable, and thinks that Packard now cannot consistently render a decision favorable to our company, he naturally would begin a terrific raid on our stock."

"That's true, Mr. Todd, I'll admit."

WHY SUFFER WITH BACKACHE, KIDNEYS OR RHEUMATISM NOW?

Letter Tells of Long-looked-for Prescription.

Dear Readers—If I can do any good in the world for others, I wish to do it, and I feel that it is my duty to write about the wonderful results I received from the use of "Anuric." I was suffering from kidney and bladder troubles, scalding urine, backache and rheumatism, and feet and ankles swelled so that at times I could not walk without assistance. Had taken several different kinds of kidney remedies but all failed. I sent for a box of Dr. Pierce's newest discovery, "Anuric," which I received by mail in tablet form. I soon got better and am convinced that this popular new medicine is good. I wish to recommend it to my neighbors and everybody suffering from such troubles.

MRS. M. J. SARGENT.

NOTE: You've all undoubtedly heard of the famous Dr. Pierce and his well-known medicines. Well, this prescription is one that has been successfully used for many years by the physicians and specialists at Dr. Pierce's Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, of Buffalo, N. Y., for kidney complaints, and diseases arising from disorders of the kidneys and bladder, such as backache, weak back, rheumatism, dropsy, congestion of the kidneys, inflammation of the bladder, scalding urine, and urinary troubles.

Up to this time, "Anuric" has not been on sale to the public, but by the persuasion of many patients and the increased demand for this wonderful healing Tablet, Doctor Pierce has finally decided to put it into the stores, or send 10 cents for large trial package or 50 cents for full treatment.

Simply ask for Doctor Pierce's Anuric Tablets. There can be no imitation. Every package of "Anuric" is sure to be Dr. Pierce's. You will find the signature on the package just as you do on Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, the ever-famous friend to ailing women, and Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, proven by years to be the greatest general tonic and reconstructor for any one, besides being the best blood-maker known.

Vaughan a Smoker.

Notwithstanding his discourses against the "sins of society," Father Vaughan is not by any means an ascetic; as a matter of fact he is very contemptuous of the person who denies himself every good thing in life. The story goes that on one occasion Father Vaughan offered a good cigar to a very anaemic and pious-looking minister who belonged to quite a different persuasion to himself, and who rejected the offer with horror.

"I was not sent into the world to smoke," he said, holding up his hand in protest.

"Ah," replied Father Vaughan genially, "I belong to a church that prefers to get its smoking done in this world. I hope you won't mind me lighting up."

A Famine in Envelopes.

There is a famine in envelopes, due of course to the restriction on the importation of paper. One firm in London recently ordered 10,000 envelopes, and the reply was that they could not be obtained at any price. If the famine continues, as seems inevitable, it will be necessary to do without envelopes. To meet this emergency, notepaper which can be folded up and gummed envelope-wise has been placed on the market.

The Various Ages.

In the Greek mythology four—the golden, self sufficient; the silver, self indulgent; the brazen, warlike, and the iron, violent; together with the heroic, nobly aspirant, between the third and fourth.

In archaeology three—the stone age, the bronze and the iron.

In history the middle and dark, between the ancient and the modern.

In Fichte five—of instinct, of law, of rebellion, of rationality, of conformity to reason.

In Shakespeare seven — infancy, childhood, boyhood, adolescence, manhood, age, old age.

Pity the Poor.

"There's no justice in this world for a poor man."

"That's right. Here I've got one of the fastest little cars in this town, and I don't dare let it out, because I haven't got enough money to pay a fine for speeding."

BIRRELL BLAMED FOR REBELLION

Report of Commission Holds Him Responsible.

WIMBORNE IS EXONERATED

Tribunal Headed by Baron Hardinge Finds That Chief Cause of Rising Was the Failure of the Secretary for Ireland to Check the Lawlessness Which Has Grown Up.

THE Royal Commission which investigated the Irish Rebellion, in its report says that the responsibility for the outbreak does not rest with Baron Wimborne, the Lord Lieutenant, since resigned, who is declared to have been in no way answerable for the policy of the Government. The Chief Secretary for Ireland, Augustine Birrell, who, resigned shortly after the suppression of the outbreak, was primarily responsible, says the report.

The Royal Commission was presided over by Baron Hardinge. Outlining the causes of the outbreak in Ireland, the report says:

"In endeavoring to elucidate the causes of the rebellion in Ireland, the fact should be borne in mind that there is always a section of opinion in that country bitterly opposed to British connection, and that in times of excitement this section can impose its sentiments on largely increased numbers of the people.

RT. HON. AUGUSTINE BIRRELL.

"The conclusion of the report points out that it is outside the scope of the Commission's instructions to enquire how far the policy of the Irish Executive was adopted by the Cabinet as a whole, or to attach responsibility to any but the civil and military executive in Ireland." The report then gives these conclusions:

That the "main cause of the rebellion appears to be that lawlessness was allowed to grow up unchecked, and that Ireland for several years past had been administered on the principle that it was safer and more expedient to leave the law in abeyance if a collision with any faction of the Irish people could thereby be avoided."

The importation of large quantities of arms into Ireland and the toleration of drilling by large bodies of men, first in Ulster and then other districts, the report says, created conditions which rendered possible the recent troubles in Dublin and elsewhere.

"It appears to us," says the Commissioners, "that reluctance was shown by the Irish Government to repress by prosecution written and spoken seditious utterances, and to suppress drilling and manoeuvring of armed forces known to be under control of men who openly were declaring their hostility to Your Majesty's Government, and their readiness to welcome and assist Your Majesty's enemies. There developed a widespread belief that no repressive measures would be undertaken by the Government against sedition.

"This led to a rapid increase of preparation for insurrection and was the immediate cause of the recent outbreak.

"It does not appear to be disputed," says the report, "that the authorities in the spring of 1916, while believing that the seditious bodies would not venture unaided to break into insurrection, were convinced that they were prepared to assist a German landing.

"We do not think that any responsibility rests upon the Lord Lieutenant. He was appointed in February, 1915, and was in no way answerable for the policy of the Government.

"We are, however, of the opinion that the Chief Secretary, as the administrative head of Your Majesty's Government in Ireland, primarily was responsible for the situation that was allowed to arise and the outbreak that occurred."

"While, in the view of the Commission, Sir Matthew Nathan (ex-Under-Secretary for Ireland) carried out with the utmost loyalty the policy of the Government, he did not sufficiently impress upon the Chief Secretary, during the latter's prolonged absences from Dublin, the necessity for more active measures to remedy the situation, which, in a letter in December last, he described as most serious and menacing."

RUNCIMAN IS FOR "SAFETY FIRST"

British Minister Mentioned to Succeed Birrell.

HE IS IMMENSELY RICH MAN

President of the Board of Trade is Son of One of Britain's Merchant Princes and Inherits From Him Wealth, Energy, and a Tendency Towards Radicalism.

A SMART man — almost a "dreffle smart man"—is the Rt. Hon. Walter Runciman, President of the Board of Trade, who has been obliged to temporarily relinquish his post owing to overwork. He is one of the Cabinet Ministers whose name has been frequently mentioned as that of one in the running for the Chief Secretaryship for Ireland. Yet, for all his smartness, it was something of a surprise when, at the reshuffling of the political cards necessitated by the formation of the coalition Government, the Prime Minister retained him in the Cabinet while "letting out such a brilliant Minister as Mr. Samuel, who did not regain a seat in the inner circle of the nation until a resignation or two had opened a way in for him. For Mr. Runciman, though apt, alert, and able, is not a patch on Mr. Samuel for either ability, alertness, or aptness.

RT. HON. WALTER RUNCIMAN.

Mr. Runciman is tremendously rich. His father, Sir Walter Runciman, is a great ship-owner, being head of the firm of Walter Runciman and Company, and also of the "Moor" line of cargo steamships—as all the world knows, this war-time has been a time of vast earnings for ship-owners. Sir Walter Runciman is a much more ardent Radical than is his Ministerial son—the old man is an M.P., and takes the extreme Radical side on every question that comes forward not seldom voting in the other lobby than that which the President of the Board of Trade enters—and he often jokes his son on the weakness of his Liberal principles. But the younger man was taught at Cambridge that the middle course is often the wisest, and he has always exercised a wondrous discretion, alike of conduct, of language, and even of opinion. He can play the game of "Safety First" with the best of them.

An old Parliamentary hand is Mr. Runciman becoming. He first tried to get into Parliament at Gravesend in 1898, but was unsuccessful. However, he secured a seat at Oldham in 1899, at a bye-election, defeating Mr. Winston Churchill (then a Unionist) by 1,293 votes. But at the general election in the following year the tables were turned, and Mr. Runciman lost the seat to Mr. Churchill by 222 votes. In 1902 he was elected M. P. for Dewsbury, and has sat for that constituency since.

Like so many of the members of the present Cabinet, an air of omniscience has marked Mr. Runciman for its own. He is sure of himself—even to "cocksureness." He has a good deal of the McKenna type of mind about him. This sureness of himself has often stood Mr. Runciman in good stead on a platform, and it must be admitted that, as a platform speaker, he is pleasing and persuasive. He was appointed President of the Board of Education in 1908, and attempted, in conjunction with the Archbishop of Canterbury, a settlement of the education question. A rather good story, illustrating his pleasant platform humor, is told of an attempt by one of his constituents to "heckle" him on some point in this question. "I have a school in my eye," began the heckler, but Mr. Runciman quickly interrupted him with: "No, I think not, you have only one pupil." A roar of laughter gave the "heckler" his quietus.

Soon after leaving Cambridge University, where he took honors, Mr. Runciman became connected with various shipping organizations, becoming managing director of the "Moor" line of cargo steamships. But, on becoming a Minister of the Crown, he resigned all his directorships, in accordance with the rule which prevails in British public life

KING OF ITALY A BORN SOLDIER

Victor Emmanuel Is Constantly on the Firing Line.

HE LIVES A SIMPLE LIFE

Italian Ruler Spends the Greater Part of the Time With His Armies in the Field, and Is Well Acquainted With the Troops—He Has Had Many Narrow Escapes.

THE military correspondent of The London Times, describing his recent tour of the Italian front, says:

"Italy is fortunate in having at her head at this critical hour of her destinies a King who is a soldier born and bred. It is a common saying here that the King of Italy is homesick when he is absent from the army, and it is certain his Majesty spends every hour he can spare from State affairs with his troops. He wears on his breast the medal and ribbon given only to those who have been at the front a year, and though he deprecates any allusion to the fact, it is true that he is constantly in the firing line. He has had many narrow escapes and is personally known to the whole army, who love to see him in their midst.

KING VICTOR EMMANUEL.

"I have not found any officer of his army who has a better, more intimate or more accurate knowledge of his troops than the King. His attention to the wants of the army is absolutely untiring, and his cool judgment and large experience must often be of great service to his Ministers and Generals.

"I do not know whether the field headquarters of the King of Italy or of King Albert of Belgium is the most unpretentious, but certainly both Monarchs live in circumstances of extreme simplicity. My recollection is that when I last had the honor of visiting King Albert's headquarters, the bell in what I must call the parlor did not ring, and the Queen of the Belgians had to get up and fetch tea herself. When I had the honor of being received by the King of Italy I found his Majesty in a little villa which held only four people and the King working in a room in which the only furniture I can recall consisted of a camp bed, close to the ground and of exiguous breadth, a small table and two chairs of uncompromising hardness. The only ornament in the room was the base of the last Austrian shell which burst just above the King's head. It had been mounted as a souvenir by the Queen."

Hymn of the German Sword.

This composition was published in Leipzig in October, 1915, and had a run of several editions. It is possibly the most extraordinary example of that arrogant conceit and maniacal pride which obsessed Germany early in the war:

"Germany is so far above and beyond all the other nations that all the rest of the earth, be they who they may, should feel themselves well done by when they are allowed to fight with the dogs for the crumbs that fall from her table.

"When Germany the divine is happy, then the rest of the world basks in her smiles; but when Germany suffers, God in person is rent with anguish, and wrathful and avenging, He turns all the waters into rivers of blood.

"It is no duty of mine to be either just or compassionate; it suffices that I am sanctified by my exalted mission, and that I blind the eyes of my enemies with such streams of tears as shall make the proudest of them cringe in terror under the vault of Heaven.

"I have slaughtered the old and sorrowful; I have struck off the breasts of women; and I have run through the body of children who gazed at me with the eyes of the wounded lion.

"Day after day I ride along on the shadowy horse in the Valley of Cypresses; and as I ride I draw forth the life blood from every enemy's son that dares to dispute my path.

"It is meet and right that I do cry aloud my pride, for am I not the flaming messenger of the Lord Almighty?"

WHY GERMANS FOUGHT.

Naval Battle Was an Attempt to Cut Off Russia.

The attempt made by the German navy to force its way into the open sea was due to a double object: First, the isolation of Russia by cutting off communications with her ports on the north; and, secondly, the release of certain speedy ships which should emulate the example of the Emden in paralyzing allied commerce. This we learn from an eminent naval authority in France, Admiral Hautefeuille, who sets forth his views in the Paris Homme Enchaine. He says:

"I am astonished that journalists allow themselves to be hypnotized by the heaviness of British losses, and have failed to understand the fulness of the British naval victory. It is one of the greatest victories, owing to the results arising from it.

"The Germans had two objects, both of the same nature—a fleet of the line as strong as possible which could advantageously present its flank to the large British patrols, and an exit from German ports in order to permit the escape of two rapid forces intended to act at a distance. The first consisted of two very powerful cruisers, escorted by some ten ships of less size and a strong body of destroyers. The second force consisted only of two ships, the Wiesbaden and the Elbing.

"The first force was to go north, and evidently was to destroy certain ships which supply Russia with food by way of Archangel and Kola and bring back grain for England and France and also was to destroy Kola and the establishment of the port of Archangel, which are of wood.

"The second group is only composed of two vessels, but two vessels launched since the beginning of the war, constructed for the destruction of commerce in distant seas, vessels with high speed enabling them to fly from warships, with a wide radius of action at economical speed that permits them to avoid frequent coaling. Suppose these two vessels appearing in the South Atlantic and the Pacific. For many months they would be masters of the ocean, and their success would be greater than that of the Alabama and the Emden.

"Sir David Beatty sacrificed himself. Although outnumbered, he gave battle to prevent the passage of these German expeditionary forces and to give Admiral Jellicoe time to come to his assistance. The cruisers which should have destroyed the Russians were obliged to take refuge in a damaged condition in German and Danish ports. As regards the Wiesbaden and the Elbing, which were sunk, their career was short.

"Is it not, then, an immense victory to have maintained the freedom of distant oceans and to have assured the continuation of summer communications with Russia? And if the results are considered, is this not an admirable victory?"

If the blow at Russia was really one of the motives of the battle of Jutland, we can understand the comments of the Russian press upon the results of the conflict. The Petrograd Novoye Vremya exclaims:

"Thank God the hour of the English fleet has at last arrived, and the first serious encounter between Kaiser Wilhelm's battleships, hitherto bottled up in the Kiel Canal, has ended precisely as all naval specialists anticipated. All honor and glory to the English admirals. We express our tribute of admiration at the unparalleled success of the English seamen."

WHEN SOLDIERS MARRY

Prussian Officers Must Get the Kaiser's Permission.

There are no rules at present in force in the British army to prevent a soldier marrying. Before the war, of course, a soldier, to have his wife officially recognized, had to obtain his commanding officer's consent.

In the Continental armies the authorities are usually much stricter over the marriage question, both as regards officers and men. Every Prussian officer, for example, can only marry after he has received permission from the Kaiser.

To obtain that permission he has to fill in papers giving full particulars of his intended bride and all about her family. He must also have the consent of his commanding officer and show that he has a private income of his own if he is below a certain rank.

Until within the last few years no French officer could marry unless the lady had an income of at least £50 a year. Though that has been done away with, every officer in the French army must get the consent of the Minister for War and produce satisfactory evidence of the moral character and life of his future wife.

A Russian officer is not allowed to marry under the age of 23 except by express permission of the Czar. Like officers in other Continental armies, he has to obtain the consent of his commanding officer. Great Britain and America, indeed, are practically the only two countries who allow officers to marry without the permission of the authorities.

Legion Knight, Aged 18.

The youngest Knight of the Legion of Honor is Fernand Fille of Marseilles. Only eighteen years of age, he has just been awarded the coveted decoration. When the Germans were overrunning Belgium at the beginning of the war young Fille left home and enlisted in the army of King Albert. He was wounded soon afterwards, and upon his recovery, although still under seventeen, became a volunteer in a French regiment.

He was wounded at Lingekopf while gallantly leading his comrades to the attack, his body receiving seventy-eight shell splinters.

He had already received the Military Medal and the War Cross when the French Government decided to make him a Knight of the Legion.

Attack Was Carefully Prepared

FOR weeks, if not for months, past it has been known that there would be "something doing" on the Western front this summer. It was generally expected that this would be the "big drive," that the British were ready to apply their whole strength to the task of pushing the Germans out of Flanders and France. We cannot be sure even yet whether this is the great offensive, the final offensive which will be undertaken by the British this year, whether it is designed to actually drive the Germans out of their present positions or whether it is a feint, the real offensive to take place at some other point along the line, or whether it is a mere diversion to help Petain at Verdun. So the speculation that was begun a couple of months ago is not yet at an end. We only know at this time that the move has succeeded, so far as it has gone, whatever is its object.

Writing from Bar-le-Duc on June 22, Herbert Corey, a correspondent of the Washington Star, was permitted by the censor to give some interesting details of the preparations that had been made for the British attack. It was his opinion that a great offensive was intended, and that the object really was to end the war by the most terrific assault in the history of the war; and it was also his opinion that success depended upon British leadership. He quoted a French officer who had inspected the whole front as saying: "The British preparation has been perfection itself. The men are right, and there are enough of them; the roads are right, and there are enough; the guns are right and the shells are right, and there is enough of both. The success of the move this year will depend entirely on the manner in which they are led. If we do not go through this year we will go through next year."

Mr. Corey has been all over the British front, and what has impressed him most is the wonderful work that has been done in railroad construction behind the British lines. There no fewer than 3,000 miles of railroad have been built, a fair share being standard gauge for full-size trains, and the remainder Decauvilles. Heretofore one tremendous advantage possessed by Germany has been in her railroad system, what she built in her own country before the war, and what she seized or constructed in enemy territory now in her possession. Not only was she able to shuffle troops between Poland and Flanders by means of this system, or between Ypres and Verdun, but in the course of a battle she was able to clean up her front, that is, to retrieve her wounded and take back her prisoners, and also to send forward fresh troops as fast as they were needed. Before a battle began she was able to place immense stores of ammunition and other supplies where she would need them, so that the lines would not be cluttered up with stores after the battle had begun, but could be exclusively used for troops.

The Allies, on the other hand, have not yet been able to meet Germany on even ground so far as railroad transport is concerned. More than once victory has been denied them because they did not have the rails or the rolling stock to get reserves into the trenches fast enough—in other words, by being unable to follow up initial success and consolidate the ground won. Behind the British lines, however, there are more railroads than behind the German position, and as fast as the British infantry advances a mile engineers lay a mile of track. These roads have already been of vital importance in bringing to the front, or at convenient spots back of the front, innumerable quantities of guns. Mr. Corey quotes a British officer, who says that the ground back of the front fairly "crawls" with batteries of big guns that have never been used. They are hidden behind haystacks. They are buried in the ground. Thousands of tons of ammunition and all kinds of supplies have also been buried, to be produced only when the great offensive has been launched.

The British field telephone system is said to be better than the French Government-owned system. Concrete poles and proper insulation have been installed. In fact, so admirable is the system that it will be presented to France at the end of the war. Regarding the manufacture of shells, Mr. Corey says he was recently in a shell factory, and it was not the largest in France, in which 16,000 people were employed. As for the army, there are ready to go into the British trenches 1,200,000 men. This does not include the soldiers of the supply corps, the relay corps, the bridge-building corps, and others amounting to probably another 500,000 men, usually included in estimates of an army's strength. As to the quality of the soldiers, Mr. Corey did not speak, but the actions of the last few days in which the Highlanders, the Ulstermen, and the Lancashire clerks distinguished themselves relieves all possible anxiety on this score. It is now "up to" the generals.

Insect Travelers.

Ship-cargoes are often responsible for the introduction of quite new species of insects in different lands. Banana bunches often hide poisonous reptiles and insects which travel long distances, only to bite or sting the hand of some receiver of fruit. Often they escape alive and breed their kind. Many venomous snakes have thus been introduced into lands where none existed before. Strange creatures have been imported on the blooms of orchids, and West Indian insects have traveled in Easter-lily blossoms. Destructive moths migrate in fruit ships. Flying insects often follow ships. One curious case was that of a vessel from the tropics followed by a swarm of butterflies. Out of sight of the shore, they hid in the cabins and holds, emerging forty days later when the ship reached England. Thus originated quite a new species of butterfly in the British Isles.

Jones' opinion of himself as a golfer was very much greater than his skill warranted.

Recently he was invited to play on a certain famous Scottish ground, as a visitor. Armed to the teeth with clubs of all sorts and sizes, he set off, and, followed by a caddy, proceeded to play.

He buried his ball in every bunker, gully, and bit of rough grass on the landscape, and muttered naughtily. After half an hour of it, he turned to his silent caddy.

"Really," he murmured ingratiatingly, "this is the most difficult course I have ever played on."

"Hoo did ye ken?" replied the lad in quiet scorn. "Ye hevena pleyed on it yet!"

King George's Letter.

His Majesty the King wrote a letter at Windsor Castle when he was six years old, and it realized £6 at a Red Cross auction sale at Slough recently. It was penned in long, clear, upright characters, and read as follows:

"I am writing with your lovely ink, and thank you so much for bringing it down last night; it was so very kind. We went yesterday to see grand-mama's swords, pistols, guns, the bullet in a locket that killed Nelson, the sword full of arrows, tigers, peacocks, and stars.

"We will write with this ink to mama to-morrow. We were photographed yesterday and the day before. The man took a long time.—George."

For some long time he was stationed in Bulgaria, but has been at Athens as our Minister for several years, and has a very charming house in that dustiest of cities.

FIGHT WILL END THE BRITISH WAY

Derby Does Not Expect a Whirlwind Campaign.

GAINS SLOW FOR A WHILE

Small Advances Will Take the Place of Sensational Events Says New Under-Secretary for War, but Result Will Be Secure—Offensive Will Wear Down Germany.

LORD DERBY, the new British Under-Secretary for War, deprecates the tendency to underrate the quality of the Germans as soldiers. He says that there is a long, hard task ahead of the Allies, and he will not admit that the present offensive along the western front is the "grand offensive" in this war. Nevertheless he says that while the British progress will be slow, it will be certain, and slow because it will be permanent. He does not expect German counter-attacks to win back any of the ground that has been lost to the enemy; nor does he expect the war to be decided by any spectacular action. "The war will end," he says in an interview, "in the British way." And it will be fought in that way. The gains will be small and slow for awhile; it will be the cumulative effects of an offensive on three fronts that will wear down the Germans. He looks for no whirlwind campaign.

THE EARL OF DERBY.

In answer to the question if the present offensive is the "great push" of the Allies, Lord Derby would only answer that any movement that put a large number of German troops out of action might well be called the great push. That is to say, the Battle of Verdun might be described as a "great push" or a great success for the French. In the present operations on the Somme the object of the French and British is not necessarily to capture so much territory which was in the hands of the Germans when the offensive began, but to reduce the man-power of Germany. Sometimes this can be done more effectively on the defensive than on the offensive, as Verdun bears witness. Sometimes an offensive will cost the defenders more than a defensive action. That is what is happening on the Somme. The British and French will pay for their advance; but the Germans will pay more highly for resisting it. That is the way Lord Derby looks at the battle now raging.

The Under-Secretary for War made no secret of the fact that the British were perfectly prepared for the Somme battle. To the last detail the British are prepared, he says. For months a surplus supply of ammunition was accumulated, the result of strenuous, nation-wide endeavor, and an unprecedented bombardment was made possible. Every other branch of the army was tuned up for the great effort, and "every emergency has been provided for" Nothing that will happen can find the British unprepared. Lord Derby does not expect any swift advance. The Germans were aware that the British contemplated an offensive; indeed, it was almost officially announced. They did not know the plans of General Foch. Therefore, it happened that while they had made all preparations possible to resist the British, the French were able to take them by surprise, and the French advances were therefore swifter than those of the British.

Up to the present no official lists of casualties have been given out by either the British or the Germans. They will be heavy on both sides. It is to be remembered, however, that on the British side every soldier who passes through a dressing station, no matter if his wound is so slight that he is able to report next day, is counted a casualty. But heavy losses are to be expected; probably no offensive that is launched until the war is over will entail heavier losses. The British public has been well prepared for what it ought to expect.

HARD ON OBSERVER.

Passenger in an Aeroplane Has All the Anxious Moments.

C. P. Grey, editor of the Aeroplane, London, throws new light on the dangers of military aerial observers. He says:

In reading through the casualty lists here every now and then one comes across the name of an officer "attached Royal Flying Corps." He is generally not an aviator, but is doing duty as an observation officer on reconnaissance, or as an artillery spotter, or possibly is handling a machine gun on a fighting machine. In any case he is a passenger, and somehow the passenger in an aeroplane never gets quite as much sympathy in his trouble as does a pilot.

Now, as a matter of fact, the passenger has a very much more unpleasant time, because if anything goes wrong the pilot at any rate has his mind kept busy in wrestling with his machine, whereas the passenger has nothing to do except sit still and think, and if anything happens at a height of six or seven thousand feet there is time to do quite a lot of thinking before the machine hits the ground.

Of course, when the artillery spotter is watching his mark and signalling his battery, or when the observation officer is busy inspecting the ground below and making notes, or when the machine gun operator is in the middle of a scrap with an enemy aeroplane he is naturally well occupied and so has no time to worry. It is when the unpleasant things happen that a passenger has the worst of it.

The other day a very fine story was told of a pilot who was hit in the leg and fainted, but fortunately recovered consciousness in time to regain control of the machine. Thereafter, with magnificent pluck, he flew the machine 35 miles to the nearest British aerodrome and retained his consciousness till he was safely on the ground.

But figure to yourself the feelings of the passenger in that machine!

First of all, it dived vertically, and he had time to realize that the pilot was unconscious; then, when the pilot regained consciousness, he had to sit doing nothing for at least half an hour, wondering all the time whether the pilot would faint again before he got home, and possibly meditating how disappointing it would be if the pilot fainted a hundred feet or so from the ground in the act of landing and managed to kill them both in sight of home.

As a matter of fact, I do know of one case in which a pilot alone in a machine was badly hit at a height of a thousand feet and lost consciousness at 200 feet from the ground. Nevertheless some curious sub-conscious instinct helped him to make an absolutely perfect landing, and luck brought the machine within about fifty yards of one of our own motor ambulances, but even the recollection of that performance would hardly be any great consolation to the passenger in a machine with an unconscious pilot.

In another case mentioned recently it will be remembered that the machine caught fire in the air and the pilot bravely and skilfully landed himself and his passenger safely, but one can imagine the feelings of the passenger who, while the ammunition of his machine gun kept on popping off all around him, had nothing to do except sit and be fried.

It Was "Some Bath" All Right.

Lord Milner tells an amusing story of a bath he once had.

It was in Johannesburg. The weather was appallingly hot. The city gasped. Lord Milner arrived at a certain hotel and ordered a bath. The order made the hotel people gasp afresh, but they carried it out.

After his bath a deputation of perspiring citizens waited upon Lord Milner. They explained their grievances. Water was so scarce the poor people were forbidden to use it for washing, they said. What could Lord Milner do in the matter, they asked.

"But, gentlemen," he replied in astonishment, "I had no idea there was any scarcity of water in Johannesburg. Why, I had a bath full to splash in when I came here."

The deputation eyed one another. Then said the spokesman: "My lord, I think, if you care to inquire, you will find that your bath was filled with imported English soda-water at two shillings a bottle."

The spokesman was right, too.

Humoring the Fish.

Lord Buxton, the Governor-General of South Africa, is an ardent fisherman, and many a good "fishing" yarn does he tell. One of his favorites concerns an angler who one day had a four hours' tussle with a huge salmon before he was able to land it. When at last he had made sure of his catch he took it home in ecstasy and related his triumph to his maiden aunt. Of course, like all fishermen, he made as much of the story as possible, and laid special stress on the time it took and the immense energy he had to expend before he could bring the salmon safely to land. When he had finished he waited anxiously for the praise due to his cleverness and heroism. For some moments there was silence, and then his aunt looked up from her knitting with a puzzled expression on her face. "But my dear Tom," she said quietly, "why did you not cut the string and get rid of the brute?"

Curfew at 6.15 p.m.

The precautions against air raids have necessitated the alteration at Chester of a centuries-old custom. Since the distant days of the Norman Conquest the curfew at Chester has been rung, without, it is believed, a break, from 8.50 p.m. to 9 p.m. each night. For the next month, however, it will be rung at 6.15 p.m., and then, as the days lengthen, the time will be advanced until the traditional hour is reached.

STRONG MAN IN CRISIS

SIR GEORGE CAVE A TOWER OF STRENGTH TO BRITAIN.

Solicitor-General in the Coalition Administration of Britain Has a High Reputation in English Affairs, and is One of the Pillars of the Unionist Party—He is Attorney to Prince of Wales.

IT was once said, by Sir John Simon, at the time he was Solicitor-General, that the occupant of that post was really the "office-boy of the Government." If that be so, the present Government have an "office-boy" of vary notable dignity and remarkable ability, as well as of somewhat mature years. For the Rt. Hon. Sir George Cave, Unionist M.P. for the Kingston division of Surrey, is one of the strongest and sanest members of the House of Commons, and one of the very soundest lawyers at the English bar.

He is just sixty years old—sixteen years older than his senior fellow-officer of the Crown, Sir F. E. Smith—and has been in Parliament for ten years only. From the moment he entered the House he made his mark, thus constituting himself a tangible refutation of the generally-held doctrine that neither a middle-aged man nor a man who enters the House with a great reputation gained outside it, has much chance of becoming a first-rate House of Commons success.

Sir George Cave, however, was happy in his opportunities. When he entered Parliament, the Unionist party was at very low ebb, and a man of really great debating gifts, such as he possesses, was bound to come to the fore. Moreover, the subjects which came forward for Parliamentary discussion were such as he was pre-eminently well versed in. He had not been long in the House before the Campbell-Bannerman Government brought in its licensing bill—and what George Cave does not know on the subject of licensing is not worth knowing. He regularly riddled the bill before it met its final end at the hand of the peers, at that time with their veto unimpaired. Subsequently, his speeches in criticism of the famous Lloyd George budget made a deep impression on the House. To-day, Sir George Cave is a distinct power in Parliament—a greater power than his official position of Solicitor-General would seem to indicate.

As Solicitor-General, Sir George Cave draws a salary of $30,000 a year with the additional emolument of something like $45,000 a year in fees. But he probably made a financial sacrifice when he accepted office—even an office carrying with it remuneration on so generous a scale. For he was doing literally an enormous business at the Chancery Bar, and since 1913 had been what is called a "special," which term has a world of significance about it as regards the magnitude of the fees which the lucky "special" receives. In fact, he swept all before him at the bar just as he had done at Oxford, and he is recognized as perhaps the most erudite and profound lawyer in the present House of Commons.

Sir George Cave is an admirable speaker, concise, cogent, and convincing, and, though a counsel very "learned in the law," he does not bring to Parliament the style of the law courts, as do all too many of his "hon. and learned friends" on the benches around him—you never seem to hear the rustling of his silk gown, as it were, when he is up addressing the Speaker.

He takes a very prominent part in the life of the County of Surrey, at Richmond in which county is situate his delightful country seat, humorously named "Wardrobe Court." He has been a county councillor and county alderman for Surrey, as well as chairman of the Surrey Quarter Sessions. He is also a magistrate for that county, and is Recorder of Guildford, which is its capital. He has edited two of the most widely-read legal treatises, "Sweet's Conveyancing" and "Gale on Easements." He is a fine horseman, a good oar, a devotee of golf, and a man of considerable social gifts, with a fund of dry humor.

The Solicitor-General is also Attorney-General to the Prince of Wales, to which office he was appointed a couple of years ago when Sir C. A. Cripps, its then occupant, was raised to the peerage as Lord Parmoor. In this capacity his duty is to give legal advice as required in connection with the Prince's Duchy of Cornwall, and, in fact, to advise his royal client whenever legal advice is necessary, and, if requisite, to appear for him in court in any litigious matter. The duties of this office are not very onerous, nor does it bring much financial grist to the mill. But it confers a good deal of social prestige on its holder.

The First Matches.

To the ordinary man matches are quite inconsiderable, since he thinks of them by the box, so often obtained for nothing—or next to it. But it was less than a century ago that one John Walker, an apothecary, of Stockton-on-Tees, found the release of the smoker from the tinder-box or the live coals in the grate. It was an accidental spilling of the solution that took fire which gave the hint, and not long afterwards, in 1827, he placed on the market his boxes of matches—lucifers—containing fifty each, at one shilling. They lighted on sandpaper. But he neglected to patent his invention, and the Reading schoolmaster, Isaac Holden, who a little later on hit on the same idea, made the same mistake. It was not long before the "box of matches" fell to a penny, and finally was given away to the purchaser of tobacco.

Mr. Geo. Peacock, driver on the G. T. R. between Midland and Lindsay, has been transferred to the Madoc-Belleville branch and is now handling the throttle on this division. Mr. Peacock fired on this line some 17 years ago and seems to be pleased to be returned in the capacity he is now serving. In the course of a week or so Mr. Peacock intends moving his family here.

After an absence of three years Mr. and Mrs. Alex. Milne have returned to visit friends and renew acquaintances. During the past three years Mr. and Mrs. Milne have seen much of the West particularly in the Peace River country where they have devoted themselves to farming. Mr. Milne is already a very enthusiastic Westerner, and can talk climate and wheat with as much zeal as the old-timers.

DESERONTO NOTES

Mrs. Durfy and two daughters, and Mrs. Roy Sears and son Carl, of Hamilton, are spending some time in town as the guests of their parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. N. Myles. Mrs. Durfy's husband has only recently gone overseas.

POINT ANNE NOTES

Miss Mae Fitzgerald spent the week visiting her cousin, Miss Bernice Hart.

Mr. Mobray spent last Sunday in our midst; rumor says a wedding soon.

Our school has closed for the holidays, and we are all sorry to hear that Miss Beatty has resigned as teacher here.

Mrs. John Brown and family are moving to Detroit in the near future; we are all sorry to part with so good a neighbor. Mrs. Brown will be very much missed.

Mr. and Mrs. Bran, Mrs. A. G. Bennetts parents, from the State of Maine, have been in our midst during Wilbur Bennett's illness.

We are glad to know that Mrs. Knowliffe is able to be out again after her recent illness.

The grain and meadows look fine in this locality.

Mr. Glover has returned to his home in Montreal, having been employed by the Canada Cement Co., testing cement for a number of weeks.

CALLED BY DEATH

J. ROYAL SHEFFIELD

The death occurred last evening of an aged and most respected citizen of this city in the person of Mr. J. Royal Sheffield, who after an illness, lasting a period of five years, succumbed to a serious attack of his illness, which occurred several months ago, at his residence at 233 Foster avenue.

Deceased was born in the 5th Con of Thurlow in June, 1837, coming to Belleville in 1908. He was a faithful and devoted member of Bridge St. Methodist Church.

Those who survive him are his widow, three daughters, as follows:—Mrs. Ida Martin, Mich.; Mrs. Fred Buskard, of Shannonville, Ont., and Keitha, at home, and three sons, who are as follows:—Clayton and Delbert of Calgary, and Alton of Alberta.

Funeral notice will appear later. Interment to take place in the family plot, Victoria cemetery.

OTTAWA, July 12:—The following information has been received by telegram at the office of the Fruit Commissioner this morning, relative to the apple situation in Ontario:

East of Toronto the crop is very disappointing and will not exceed that of 1915. There has been very serious development of scab, and a heavy dropping of fruit in all sections. Unsprayed orchards are practically worthless on account of poor quality. There has also been some damage by hail in the Cobourg district. In western and northern parts of the province there is a medium crop, but the quality, particularly in Western Ontario, is good only in well sprayed orchards.

LOCK GATES INSTALLED

The lock gates at Campbellford and Healey Falls will be installed in a short time, and when completed will be open from Lake Ontario as far west as Orillia.

ADVERSE TO DEPOTS FOR NATIVE WINES

License Board's Interpretation of Act—Bar Service on Trains Considered

TORONTO, July 14.—(Special.) — While no definite announcement has been made, it is understood that the Ontario License Commissioners will not allow manufacturers of wines in the Province to establish depots for delivery purpose. Some time ago a deputation of the manufacturers appeared before the Commissioners, and asked if they could establish stores, so that orders could be taken and filled from them. The Board has reached the conclusion that the Government did not intend, in drafting the temperance act, to allow the sale of wine from anywhere but the premises on which it was manufactured.

The Board also intends to prohibit railway companies operating a bar service on trains through the Province after September 16th. The Commissioners have under consideration various regulations in connection with the sale of grape wine by Ontario manufacturers.

SAY WILSON NOTES HAVING AN EFFECT

NEW YORK, July 13.—The New York Tribune, commentin geditorially today on Carl W. Ackerman's, Berlin despatches to the United Press yesterday, reporting the von Tirpitz party threats to resume submarine operations, declares this intimation from Berlin "more significant than all the rejoicing over the Deutschland's successful voyage."

The World declares editorially that the Reichstag members' compaint to Ackerman that the German navy is "held in a net of notes" is ample evidence of the effectiveness of President Wilson's note writing.

FARM LABORER'S WANTED

The Western Province of Canada have experienced an acute shortage of farm laborers for spring seeding and summer work this year.

Even when times were normal throughout Canada, it was always necessary to bring from twenty-five to thirty thousand laborers from eastern points for the harvest season.

As voluntary enlistments have been very heavy, and inasmuch as a successful crop is predicted by the experts, grave fear is being felt along the lines of the Canadian Northern Railway on account of the difficulty experienced in obtaining labor, which means steady work and good wages for all who visit in the districts served by the C.N.R.

For further particulars apply to E. M. Fisk, Station Agent, or J. A. Patterson City Agent, or write to R. L. Fairbairn, General Passenger Agent, 68 King St., Toronto, Ont.

Boy Who Went Bathing in Ottawa River Supposed to Have Been Swept Away by Current

OTTAWA, July 14.—After an all-night search by the parents and friends of Luduric Normand, who disappeared from his home in Hull, yesterday, his clothes were found on the bank of the Ottawa river on the Hull side, near the Canadian Pacific railway bridge. The water in that vicinity is quite rapid, it being only a short distance above the falls and just below the rapids.

It is now believed that the youngster went in bathing and was drowned, and search is being made for the body.

He was but thirteen years of age, and the son of Joseph F. Normand, foreman of the E. B. Eddy Company, who resides at 69 Cherlevoix street, Hull.

Make Seizures of Smuggled Goods

Campaign Against Evaders of Duties—Morristown as Base

BROOKVILLE, July 14.—Local customs officials have commenced a vigorous campaign against local people who are using Morristown as a base for smuggling operations and by their investigations have revealed an elaborate system for evading the toll. Last night two customs officers seized at a local garage a model 1913 Cadillac automobile operated as a taxicab here. To the car were attached two Goodrich tires, valued at $120, which the customs people knew were purchased through a merchant in Morristown and had been smuggled across the river in a small craft. The car was accordingly seized and will be held pending further developments.

SOLDIER MOURNED AS DEAD IS ALIVE

Student of Kingston School of Mining Had Thrilling Experience

KINGSTON, July 14.—After having been mourned by his parents as dead, Becher Owen Ward has written home to London, Ont., from an internment camp for war prisoners in Stuttgart, Wurtemburg, Germany. Pte. Ward, who was in his third year in an engineering course in the Kingston School of Mining, went from Kingston with a university company. He served with that unit since early in the war and went through the heavy fighting in the first few days of June. Afterward he was reported missing and later officially reported as killed in action.

A comrade, Melville Hastings, has written saying that he was wounded and last seen attempting to make his way to a dressing station. A few minutes later the Germans stormed the trenches and took some territory. Ward was then made a prisoner, and wrote on June 12 saying that he was then receiving the best of care. He is a son of William Ward, a cigar manufacturer of London.

Skeletons of Indians Horned and Very Tall in Pennsylvania

BINGHAMTON, N.Y., July 14.—Prof. A. B. Skinner, of the American Indian museum; Prof. W. K. Noorehead, of the Phillips Andover Academy, and Dr. George Donohue, Pennsylvania state historian, who have been conducting a party of scientists' research along the valley of the Susquehanna, have uncovered an Indian mound at Tioga Point, on the upper portion of Queen Ester's flats, on what is known as the Murray farm, a short distance from Sayre, Pa., which promises rich additions to Indian lore. In the mound uncovered were found the bones of sixty-eight men which are believed to have been buried seven hundred years ago. The average height of these men when the skeletons were assembled, was seven feet, while many were much taller. Further evidences of their gigantic size was found in large cells or axes hewn from stone buried in the grave. On some of the skulls two inches above above the perfectly-formed forehead were protrubences of bone, evidently horns that had been there since birth. Members of the expedition say that it is the first discovery of its kind on record.

James Garson, 70th Batt., Saw Cruiser Bearing Earl Kitchener Sink

SARNIA, Ont., July 14.—James Garson, a local piper, now with the 70th Battalion, writes home that he saw the Hampshire, carrying Kitchener, sink off the coast of Scotland.

He had obtained leave of absence from his battalion, and had gone to Scotland to see some relatives. He was on the beach at the time of the storm, which he says was terrific, and saw the Hampshire go down in the turmoil, with her crew and distinguished passengers. After the wreck he helped to collect some of the bodies which were cast up by the waves.

IGNITED TENTS AT VALCARTIER CAMP

Forest Fire Causes Destruction — All Buildings are Evacuated

VALCARTIER, Que., July 14.—A forest fire was fanned by a high wind until sparks from it yesterday ignited a portion of the tents of the big military camp here, which at present is occupied by 32,000 men. The portion of the camp occupied by the 206th Battalion of Montreal, was destroyed.

All buildings in the camp were evacuated and nearly the whole force of soldiers were set to work to keep the fire under control.

STORM'S PRANKS

SHERBROOKE, July 14—A peculiar accident occurred at Wolfstown yesterday during a big thunder storm. While Mrs. Adelaid Thieveirge was sitting in the window of her son-in-law's residence, a thunder bolt entered the house, struck her in the forearm and escaped through her ankle, making three holes. The most peculiar part of the accident is that Mrs. Thievierge was not made unconscious, and this morning feels no pain whatever.

Feet Frozen In Summer Campaign

NEW YORK, July 14.—How one hundred and fifty Italian infantrymen were invalided by freezing their feet in midsummer was told yesterday by a passenger arriving on the French liner La Touraine. He asked that his name be withheld.

"While walking near the Pisa Railway station," he said, "I noticed what I thought was a freight train approaching. There were three tiers of floors to each car. When the train stopped I saw the occupants were soldiers, attired in sheep and goat skins.

"I learned the men were suffering from frozen feet. They were members of a batatlion of Alpine infantry, and had gone to a point far above the snow line in an attempt to surprise an Austrian force that in no other manner could be ousted from its positions.

"They have been carefully drilled in walking on all fours and acting the part of goats and sheep.

"Two days after leaving camp remnants of the command began to return. They failed in their undertaking because of a terrific storm and because sharp pieces of ice tore their flannel leggings and exposed their feet."

REVENUE SO FAR IS 56 MILLION

Substantial Gain Over The Same Period of 1915—Domestic Loan Expected to prove Popular

OTTAWA, July 14.—Canada's revenue is increasing. For the first three months of the fiscal year, April, May and June customs, war and other forms of taxation yielded fifty-six million dollars. Last year during the same months, the revenue was 34 millions. Ordinary expenditure for the period this year has been 27 millions, a slight decrease from last year.

The credit Canada has extended to the British government now totals 150 million dollars. Munition orders to this amount have been placed in Canada by the Imperial Government.

The satisfactory state of Canadian finances public and private assure Finance Minister White that the domestic loan he proposes to offer Canadians in September will be a success.

Canadian deposits on savings account total over 700 millions, having increased a little over 100 millions during the 20 months of the war.

New Hay At $10 A Ton

PETERBOROUGH, July 14.—The new crop is coming on the market at $10 a ton. The last of the old hay was offered here about a week ago at $14, and the first green hay sold at that figure. But the weight of an unusually heavy crop has depressed the market to the $10 figure. So much is there in this district that there will be no necessity, it is said, of importing supplies this year. The high prices that obtained all winter held firmly until the promise of a heavy new crop started the downward trend.

Hissed Soldiers

CORK, Ireland, July 14.—Several hundred rioters paraded the streets here early to-day, booing and hissing windows of the chief recruiting office. They had previously inscribed on the gate and pillars of the Tar Works the words "Up with the Republic." Soldiers finally dispersed the rioters.

BRITISH ADVANCE ON A FOUR MILE-FRONT

Sake Bazentin and Longueval, Also the Whole of Trones Wood Kaiser's Soldiers are Reported to be Surrendering Quiet Freely

LONDON, July 15.—(Special.) — General Siir Douglas Haig struck again at dawn yesterday. To-night the British front has been advanced three miles to the eastward. It rests on a line from Bazentin le Pettit to Longueval. Both villages are in British hands. Beyond the latter place the British troops are fighting forward in the wooded section in desperate hand to-hand engagements with the German. The British advance at its deepest point to-night approximated three miles.

To-day's advance is one of the greatest blows yet struck the Germans in the Picardy offensive. It brings the British southern front on an even line with the French at Hardecourt and puts the British in good position to drive a wedge between Thiaumont and Peronne, the two main German bases on this front. Longueval was the junction point of several important highroads, which had been of much value to the Teutons, while on the north of to-day's front of attack the British are approaching the Pozieres, another strongly defended village on the road to the commanding heights of Martinpuich.

They are now within two miles of this crest line, the capture of which would give them artillery control of the neighborhood and serve as a serious menace to Bapaume.

A despatch from Reuter's correspondent on the British front says that the German second line was carried with small loss, and the Germans surrendered freely.

During the 24 hour period ending at 10 a.m. today, there were 162 new cases, and 31 children died from the disease in the five boroughs of New York. Brooklyn had the greatest number of new cases in a single day since the epidemic began on June 26. There were sixteen deaths and 122 new cases in that borough.

CANADIAN RAILWAYS IN NEED OF RAILS

NEW YORK, July 14.—According to some steel authorities the entire rail making capacity of the United States Steel Corporation is sold up to the middle of 1917, and it is predicted that within the next sixty days the rail capacity of the whole country will be sold up for the whole year.

It is reported that the Canadian Pacific wants an additional order of 30,000 tons of rails. Canadian Northern is in the market for 50,000 tons. The total Russian rail order is for 365,000 tons, including fish plates, with an additional order of 50,000 tons for spikes and bolts. The French Government wants 20,000 tons of rails. The British and Italian Governments are inquiring for rails.

Berlin Gratified

General Satisfaction at Prospect of Change of City's Name

BERLIN, Ont., July 14.—It is confidently expected by the City Council and the citizens who have favored the changing of the name of the city from Berlin to Kitchener that the by-law providing for the change to take place on July 17 will be ratified by the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council in view of the reply given the deputation from this city by Premier Hearst today. There was general satisfaction in business and manufacturing circles here that the prolonged agitation was now rapidly drawing to a close.

Considerable interest is taken in the addresses delivered by the spokesman of the delegation, ex-Mayor J. R. Eden's' statements being openly challenged by aldermen and the promoters of the name-changing campaign. It was stated by Mr Eden that the vote registered for and against the city was small, whereas it was the largest ever polled at a municipal election in this city.

Members of the City Council this evening stated that they are not opposed to re-opening amalgamation negotiations at any time, providing they are on an equal basis. When the Waterloo committee recently negotiated with the committee of the Berlin Council they emphatically declared by resolution that unless Berlin consented to take the name Waterloo it would be useless to submit an amalgamation by-law to the ratepayers of that town. The Berlin Council refused to accept this.

His great ability, wide experience and high personal character eminently fit him for the duties which he has consented to undertake.

FOUND DEAD IN SHOP

Macedonian May Have Been Electrocuted

TORONTO, Jmy 14.—Believed to have been electrocuted, Standew Crestoff, a Macedonian, 25 years old, living at 341 Gilead avenue, was found dead at 9.30 last night in the pipe shop of the National Iron Works at the foot of Cherry street. Crestoff was employed there and when he failed to return home yesterday evening, his brother, Rossio, became alarmed and went to the works to look for him. Crestoff was lying on the floor of the cloak room and his brother at first thought that he had been overcome by the heat A coctor was called and pronounced the man dead.

As Crestoff was found a few feet away from the electric switch, which is near where the men hang their clothes, while his hands were badly burned, it is presumed that his hand came into contact with the switch and he was eelectrocuted. The body is at the Morgue and an inquest will in all likelihood be held.

Many Pardoned

OTTAWA,, July 14.—Since the war began clemency has been extended to upwards of forty inmates of Canadian penitentiaries to enable them to enlist. None of the released were undergoing lengthy sentences or for grave crimes. A great many applications for similar paroles have, however, been refused.

CANADIANS CHAFE AT NOT BEING IN ON BIG OFFENSIVE

LONDON, July 14.—Canadians have been having anything but a quiet time during the week. The Germans started on Monday night with attempts at rather large raids, but both were discovered by our patrols and driven off.

The Germans lost about a score of men in retaliation for the defeat they gave us in the terrific bombardment on Tuesday morning. Our guns were not slow in replying and by dark we "had them tamed."

All the officers I have met on leave say that the men are chafing at being unable to be in the big push.

A Canadian staff officer remarked to me: "We have one or two surprises for the Huns up our sleeves and we have not lost hope yet that we may be in on the real business."

BAYONET FIGHTING CLASSES

Lieut. LeMessiere, of the Canadian Gymnastics Corps, arrived in camp on Wednesday, and left on Thursday for Ottawa. He made an inspection of the physical training and bayonet fighting classes at the camp, and was very much pleased with the splendid progress being made by Lieut. J. Bews in his work of carrying on the instruction for the camp.

Lieut. LeMessiere is on the staff of the corps, and was adjutant of the school conducted at Montreal a short while ago, when among others a number from the 146th Battalion took the course.

The bayonet fighting and physical training instructors of each battalion are now planning to have trenches dug near their battalion, so that work of instructing the battalion in this important branch of the work may be done to better advantage. Only one section of trench is planned similar to that used at the front, for each unit. This should prove to be sufficient to give the soldiers a general idea of what they are expected to learn.

DISCIPLINE OF CAMP

No camp in the military history of Canada has ever been so free from sins of even minor character as Barriefield camp is this year, and much of the credit is due to the energies of Lieut.-Col Wilson, D.A.A., and Q.M.G., assisted by Capt. Norwell. Cases of drunkenness are few and far between, the work of the military police and piquet is light, so light that the city piquet has been reduced to two non-coms. and 10 men, except on pay day when it is increased, but without any real cause, except that it looks better. The camp detention compound is empty, punishments by officers for minor offences are very few, and the general good conduct of the camp is a marvel to all.

93RD BOYS MISSED

There is another bare spot in Barriefield camp as a result of the departure of the 93rd Battalion, and the camp population has been decreased by about 900 men. The coming of the artillery will compensate for a part of this loss by bringing into camp about 300 men. Fatigue parties from the F.A. in the city were busy yesterday getting things in shape for the four batteries.

109TH GOING SOON

The 109th Lindsay Battalion have been warned to be ready for a call overseas. There is the possibility that the Minister of Militia will be going across at the same time as this, his home town battalion, as he has expressed his decision to go to England in the near future.

HIGH WAGES PAID

Farmers are offering as high as $60 a month and board to the soldiers to go and work the farms. The soldiers receive their military pay while at work, and hundreds are accepting the offers.

NOTES

Ensign Smith of the Salvation Army has commenced work among the men at Barriefield.

Sergt. C. H. Wills, 156th Battalion, has been promoted to the rank of company sergeant-major.

The work of the 155th Battalion in bayonet fighting was inspected by Lieut. LeMesiere of the Canadian Army Gymnastic Staff.

The men of the 109th are being given their last pass privilege and for the next week there will not be much drill carried out by the Lindsay battalion.

Nearly all the tents of the 93rd battalion have been taken down by a fatigue party, and a part of the School of Cookery.

The second machine gun course will commence on Thursday next, July 20, with about eighteen in attendance from the 154th, 155th and 156th, battalions. It is expected that Lieut. Young of the 155th battalion will be back in camp to take charge of the instructional work of the next class.

SUMMER HEAT HARD ON BABY

No season of the year is so dangerous to the life of little ones as is the summer. The excessive heat throws the little stomach out of order so quickly that unless prompt aid is at hand the baby may be beyond all human help before the mother realizes he is ill. Summer is the season when diarrhoea, cholera infantum, dysentry and colic are most prevalent. Any one of these troubles may prove deadly if not promptly treated. During the summer the mothers best friend is Baby's Own Tablets. They regulate the bowels, sweeten the stomach and keep baby healthy. The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Rubbish Heaps

Many Serious Fires are Traceable to Such Accumulations

More fires originate in rubbish heaps than from any other source. To permit rubbish to remain in the building not only invites a fire to visit your home or place of business, and render your family temporarily homeless, or cripple your business at a time when you can least afford it, but also endangers the lives of your family or employees. In addition to destroying an average of $23,000,000 in property value in Canada each year, fire caused the death of 141 persons last year.

The home is built to protect our loved ones, and we want to do everything to insure absolute protection to those who live in it.

That rubbish heap in the attic, storeroom or basement is a menace to your household, because there is always a possibility of fire starting in it, and it may start when least expected.

Consider what might happen, and then, without delay, eliminate the menace of the rubbish heap.
